In pretrial arguments and repeatedly during the four-day hearings, the Negro lawyers injected the question of federal constitutional rights, admittedly with a view of taking their case into federal court if necessary.

Thetford, in his final argument, said the state had proved its case and that King had been clearly identified as "the leader" of the continuing bus protest.

King, testifying earlier today, denied commission of any unlawful act and said he had never urged other Negroes even to refrain from riding the buses.

Avoided Violence.

He emphsaized also that he had carefully steered clear of violence during the boycott; that he admonished Negroes to follow a policy of nonviolence and passive resistance to oppression.

State's attorneys completed their testimony with seven rebuttal witnesses, including six veteran bus drivers who denied they had ever mistreated any Negro passenger.

Negro witnesses for King said they were called such names as "niggers" and "ugly black apes" by bus drivers, that they were forced to stand while seats remained vacant in white sections of buses and at times forced to give up their seats to white passengers.

The purpose of that line of testimony was to establish a cause for the bus protest movement. Alabama's antiboycott law prohibits a conspiracy or agreement to withhold patronage "without just cause or legal excuse."

The bus company manager, J. H. Bagley, testified he had fired 21 drivers in 10 years for discourtesy to passengers. Bagley also produced a performance report by his parent company, National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago, based on a spot check of Montgomery buses last November. The manager said it failed to show one instance of driver discourtesy.

Bus Boycott Leader Found Guilty, 'Realistic Enough to Prepare for the Worst'

Montgomery, Ala.—Found guilty of leading a illegal boycott against the Montgomery city bus lines, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., had this to say:

"I was optimistic enough to hope for the best but realistic enough to prepare for the worst," the Rev. Mr. King told those who gathered around him a few minutes after the verdict.

"I am sure that when taken to the high courts of the land it will be proven unconstitutional to convict a person under this law." "We have stood under the aegis of the Constitution throughout this struggle."

Defense attorneys immediately began an appeal that may lead ultimately to the U. S. supreme court.

Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter sentenced the 27-year-old Baptist minister to serve 386 days at hard labor in the county of Montgomery—the equivalent of a fine of $500 and court costs of $500.

Postpone Cases

The sentence was suspended pending appeal and the Rev. Mr. King was released on $1,000 bond. The cases of 89 other Negroes arrested in connection with the Negro protest against the bus lines were postponed pending the appeal.

The protest began Dec. 5 over the arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks, a 43-year-old seamstress, for refusing to give up her seat to a white person.

Nearly all of Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes have refused to ride the city buses since then. They have used a pool of 300 automobiles organized by the Montgomery Improvement Association, which is headed by the Rev. Mr. King.

The protest movement went on without interruption or incident Thursday. There was every indication it would continue to do so until some agreement was reached with the city and the bus company.

3 Years

Arthur D. Shores, one of the eight lawyers who defended Dr. King in the four-day misdemeanor trial, estimated that it would take 3 years for the case to come up in the Alabama court of appeals.

Defense attorneys have said they will take the appeal to the U. S. supreme court if appellate courts uphold the conviction.

The conviction was under a 1921 statute forbidding the hindering of a lawful business without 'just cause or legal excuse.'

There was no sign of emotion from the predominatly Negro audience as Judge Carter delivered his finding as soon as arguments were completed.

Cloth Crosses

The spectators—many of them wearing cloth lapel crosses reading 'Father, forgive them'—quietly left the court during the long wait to determine the trial costs and to set the amount of the bond.

Judge Carter announced that he was finding Dr. King guilty, but would fine him only half the possible penalty because he had continually urged his followers to observe a policy of nonviolence.

'Weapon of Love'

'This will not mar or diminish in any way my interest in the protest,' the young minister said. 'We will continue to protest in the same spirit of non-violence and passive resistance, using the weapon of love.'

As he left the courthouse, the minister was cheered by waiting Negroes with shouts of 'behold the King,' and 'long live the King.'

Defense Attorneys Fred D. Gray and Shores insisted in their closing arguments that the state had failed to prove King committed unlawful acts and that Negroes had a justifiable reason for refusing to patronize the bus company.

Nearly two score Negro witnesses had testified of repeated acts of mistreatment in the past decade at the hands of white bus drivers, and defense lawyers argued the boycott was the culmination of those experiences.

Boycott Leader Convicted, Vows Integration Fight

Appeal Stays $500 Fine, Trials of 89

By REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 22 (AP) — The first of the Negro bus boycott leaders, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., was convicted after a four-day trial today and defense attorneys immediately began an appeal that may lead ultimately to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The young minister later promised a cheering Negro audience that he would not give up the boycotters' struggle for "justice and equality."

King, 27, pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, was fined $500 for violation of Alabama's seldom-used anti-boycott law for his part in the 17-week boycott of segregated city buses.

FINE DROPPED

The fine was suspended, however, after Negro defense lawyers served notice of appeal. They have said they will take the appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court if the state appellate courts uphold the conviction.

Court reconvened a short while later and King also was charged with court costs of $500 in addition to the fine.

COURT RULES

Under a formality of court procedure, however, the fine and costs were converted into a jail sentence since he chose to appeal rather than pay the money. He was sentenced to 386 days.

But the sentence was suspended when the defendant posted an appeal bond of $1,000.

As he left the courthouse, the minister was cheered by waiting Negroes with shouts of "Behold the king" and "Long live the king."

King promised tonight that the mass boycott will go on "no matter how many times they convict me."

Constitution

Speaking to a crowd that jammed the Holt Street Baptist Church, King said that because of the Negroes' protest against conditions in Montgomery, "maybe the idea of freedom in the Southland will be born right here in the cradle of the Confederacy."

"Now we are determined," the young minister declared. "No longer are we content to accept second class citizenship. We are determined to struggle for justice and equality until we achieve it."

His promise that the bus boycott would go on brought thunderous applause from the chanting, hymn-singing Negro audience.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, presiding over the trial in the absence of a jury, could have fined King $1,000 and added a six-month jail sentence under state law.

But he said he decided on a lesser penalty because it was shown in testimony that the minister used his influence throughout the mass bus protest to urge his people to refrain from violence.

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford announced immediately after the verdict was read that the state agreed to postpone trials of 89 other boycott defendants pending King's appeal.

In a statement to newsmen following his conviction, King said:

"We will continue with the protest in the same spirit, with nonviolence, passive resistance and using the weapon of love."

The minister expressed confidence to reporters that the federal courts will throw out his conviction and hold the Alabama law unconstitutional.

Defense attorneys Fred D. Gray of Montgomery and Arthur Shores of Birmingham insisted in closing arguments that the state failed to prove King committed any unlawful acts and that Negroes had a justifiable reason for refusing to patronize the bus company.

Nearly 40 Negro witnesses had testified to mistreatment in the past decade at the hands of white bus drivers, and defense lawyers argued the boycott was the culmination of those experiences.

Gray contended that the young pastor had done nothing to prevent the bus company from carrying on normal business.

Shores, on the other hand, argued that the Negroes had a just cause for refusing to ride the buses and that whatever King did "he has done perfectly within his own rights as guaranteed within the Constitution."

In pretrial arguments and repeatedly during the four-day hearing, the Negro lawyers injected the question of federal constitutional rights in the trial, admittedly with a view to taking their case into federal court.

Thetford, in his final argument, insisted that the state had proved its case and that King had been clearly identified as "the leader" of the continuing bus protest.

He described the defendant as one of a "selfish little group of men seeking power and influence among their race and seizing this opportunity."

King, testifying in his own behalf earlier today, denied any unlawful act and said he had never urged other Negroes even to refrain from riding the buses.

Courier Sat. 4-7-56 * Pittsburgh, Pa.

'A Young Minister Marked for Leadership'

P. 15 By EVELYN CUNNINGHAM

Martin Luther King didn't just happen all of a sudden. Although he was little known outside of Alabama six months ago, those close to him knew he was going to be important.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, from which young King graduated, saw it.

THREE YEARS later, Charles E. Batten, member of the faculty of Crozer Theological Seminary in Chester, Pa., said, "King seems to know where he wants to go and how to get there. Furthermore, he is making remarkable progress in arriving."

Add that to a heritage of leadership and religion and there is the man who looms as Number 1 candidate for THE leader Negroes have waited for for the last quarter of a century.

To know Rev. King even casually is to know that the Montgomery bus protest is by no means an end or a climax in a life profoundly devoted to achieving excellency in the field of Christian ministry. It is only a step and a beginning.

BEFORE THAT, however, there was another beginning. There was his father and his grandfather.

The latter, the Rev. A. D. Williams, was a power in Atlanta, Ga. in the 20's and early 30's. He, along with Peter James Bryant, were the accepted leaders of Negroes in Atlanta. Both figured in the fight for the first public high school for Negroes, for which a bond issue was authorized in 1924.

Among the friends and followers of Rev. Williams was a young minister, Rev. Martin Luther King. He assisted at Ebenezer Baptist Church which Rev. Williams had headed since 1894.

HE ALSO came to know and become attracted to Alberta Williams, calm, sweet, quiet-spoken daughter of the pastor.

Alberta attended Spelman Normal and won an A. B. degree from Morris Brown College. It was inevitable that she and young King should marry.

For a year after the marriage Mrs. King taught school. Then the babies began to come.

First there was Christine, now 28, and a teacher in the Atlanta public school system. Christine also went to Spelman, then later to Columbia University in New York where she received a master's degree.

A YEAR AFTER Christine was born, on Jan. 15, 1929, came the boy they named Martin Luther King Jr. The following year the last child was born, A. D. Williams King, presently a student at Morehouse College, married and the father of three children.

Life in the King household was warm and happy. They were well-to-do and they were all influenced and motivated by a strong religious emphasis.

Mother and father were sharp personality contrasts. She was ever calm and placid; he was a fire brand.

While he was drum-beating through the state for the NAACP and the rights of Negroes she was making a home. As busy as he was in those days he always found time, however, to give significance to the least thing his children were involved in.

Since that time he has increased its membership from 600 to 4,000.

He has managed to travel extensively, covering Great Britain, Europe, North Africa and the Middle East. He is currently erecting a Christian education building next to his church at a cost of $200,000.

A very large church, Ebenezer is considered a well-run edifice, both spiritually and financially.

MEANWHILE, Martin Luther King Jr. was distinguishing himself in his studies.

He had gone to the elementary schools of Atlanta, the Atlanta University Laboratory High School and the Booker T. Washington High School.

At 15 he entered college. The year before he experienced what he considers his fondest youthful accomplishment.

He won an Elks' oratorical contest. He doesn't remember the exact subject of his oration, but "it was something about the Negro and the Constitution."

'DEFEAT' INTO VICTORY—Despite being found "guilty" of conspiring to boycott segregated city busses in Montgomery, there's no defeat in the face of the Rev. Br. Martin Luther King, jr., 27, (center) as he shakes hands with one of his lawyers on the courthouse steps. Behind him is Mrs. King. The decision against the minister-leader only served to strengthen the determination of Montgomery's Negroes not to give in, and helped to bring the Montgomery Negroes' fight into sharper focus all over the world. City Offers $500 Reward In Explosion

Montgomery Ala.

The City Commission last night offered a $500 reward for the capture and conviction of the persons who bombed the home of the Rev. M. L. King last night.

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

A bomb tossed on the porch of the home of the Rev. M. L. King, Negro boycott leader, 309 S. Jackson St. about 9:15 last night shattered windows, ripped a hole in the porch and cracked a porch column. No one was injured.

Neighbors reported that a light colored automobile was seen at the time of the explosion. It was believed to have stopped in front of the home as a white got out and placed or tossed the bomb on the porch.

Coretta King, wife of the Baptist minister, said she was sitting in the front room of the six-room white frame dwelling a half block from the Ben Moore Hotel when she heard footsteps and a thud "like a brick hitting on the porch."

She said she was talking with the wife of Roscoe Williams, Montgomery electrician, and that they feared the "thud" migh be "something dangerous." The two women ducked through a side door to the middle bedroom and went to a third room in the rear. As they reached the third room, they said that they heard the explosion.

In the rear room also was the Kings' seven and a half weeks old baby, Yolanda Denise

Vann Pruitt, assistant state toxicologist, said he believed the bomb to be either a hand grenade or a half stick of dynamite.

HOLE IN CONCRETE

The bomb hit on the south side of the porch about two feet from the concrete steps. It ripped a slight indention about a half inch deep, four inches long and two inches wide in the tile-like porch covering.

The bomb explosion shattered the four windows on the front of the house, sending glasses flying inside the living room on the north side and den and music room on the south side.

The house is about 15 feet from the sidewalk and about 30 feet from the street.

A neighbor, Ernest Walters, 301 S. Jackson, said he saw a light colored car stopped in front of the King house and then move away in a "terrific hurry." Walters said he was walking up his sidewalk when he saw the car and immediately after heard the explosion. He said he saw one man driving the car.

The Williams woman told essentially the same story as the wife of King. She said she was "shocked by the explosion.

Fear Drive Fails

Boycott Leader Arrested

Courier p. 3

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The Rev. M. L. King, one of the leaders of the local bus boycott, termed his recent arrest by Montgomery motorcycle policemen an attempt to break up the nine-week-old protest movement staged by Negro citizens.

The Rev. Mr. King said police trailed him as he left a "pick-up" stop, and when he discharged one of the occupants of his car, officers pulled up and ordered him to pull over for "speeding."

At the jail, the minister said, he was held and refused bond, but when excited citizens learned of his arrest, and swarmed to the scene, he was released on a recognition bond.

The Rev. Mr. King said police had begun widespread arrests to break up the citizens' free transportation system. "More than 100 traffic violation tickets have been issued and some of the car pool workers have been frightened off," he added.

Sat. 2-4-56

MEANWHILE, THE Rev. Mr. King denied reports that his group had agreed to a "compromise plan," while Montgomery Mayor W. A. Gayle joined the Citizens Council and said the City Commission will make no further attempts to reach agreement.

The Rev. Mr. King charged that three ministers were hoodwinked into attending a City Commission meeting, but denied that agreement was near.

"The bus protest is still on and it will last until our proposals are given sympathetic treatment," the minister said.

The boycotters have requested more courteous treatment from the city's bus drivers; seating arrangements on a first-come first-served basis, and the employment of Negro bus drivers on lines operating in areas heavily populated with Negroes.

The protest grew out of the arrest on Dec. 1 and subsequent fining of Mrs. Rosa Parks, who refused a driver's request that she move to the rear of a bus.

Mayor Gayle charged that Negro leaders "are after the destruction of our social fabric," and added that "we have pussy-footed long enough."

"The vast majority of whites in Montgomery don't care whether a Negro ever rides a bus again," the Mayor declared.

POLICE COMMISSIONER Clyde Sellers and Commissioner Frank Parks, members of the City Commission, also announced they have joined the Citizens Council, which is devoted to preserving segregation by legal means.

Sellers said the city's police have been ordered to "break up" Negro groups which he claims have been "loitering" at certain times of day in white residential areas.

ON CHICAGO VISIT

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 2-15-56

CHICAGO, Feb. 14 (AP)—A leader of the 10-week-old bus boycott by Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., said today the boycott is part of a world-wide revolt of oppressed peoples.

"It's part of something that's happening all over the world," said the Rev. M. L. King Jr., 27-year-old Negro Baptist minister.

"The oppressed peoples of the world are rising up. They are revolting against colonialism, imperialism and other systems of oppression."

He said this revolt was an apparently spontaneous movement throughout the world. He said he did not know why it is occurring at this particular time.

The Rev. Mr. King—in Chicago for a guest sermon last Sunday at a Negro church—gave his views at a news conference arranged by a family friend who said he wanted to "give a segment of the northern press a chance to get an unbiased account of what is going on in Montgomery."

King, minister of the Dexter Ave. Baptist Church in Montgomery, is president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. He said the association was formed to direct a boycott that began Dec. 5 in protest against segregated seating required on buses by state and city laws.

As of today, King said, only about 10 Negroes a day ride buses in Montgomery. About 65 per cent of the bus company's patrons were Negroes before Dec. 5, when Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 for refusing to move back to the Negro section of a bus. King said this incident sparked a "spontaneous" boycott by the city's Negroes.

Advertiser

"This is a movement of passive resistance," King said. "We have kept violence out of the picture from our standpoint."

'INTIMIDATION' P. 2-A

Two weeks ago small dynamite bombs were thrown at the homes of King and another Negro leader. King said he did not believe the bombs were intended to do any personal harm but were "a symbol of intimidation."

"I'm well guarded everywhere I go in Montgomery, by my friends," King said. "I asked the sheriff for personal protection and that was denied."

The Montgomery County grand jury yesterday began an investigation to determine if Negroes boycotting the buses are part of a conspiracy violating the law.

"I don't doubt that they will indict some of us," King said.

CONFERENCE LOOMS

He said Alabama law prohibits boycotts "without just cause" but that Montgomery Negroes feel they have just cause.

King said litigation initiated by the improvement association — a federal suit challenging the constitutionality of the segregated bus seating laws, and an appeal of Mrs. Parks' fine—will take several months and that "I am not sure that the people will want to continue the boycott that long."

He said Negro leaders will confer shortly to decide whether to call off the boycott pending court decisions. The reason he gave for possibly ending the boycott was that car pools which have been organized to replace the buses have cost Negroes "a lot of money."

"But even if we decide to go back to the buses while the litigation is on, I don't believe more than 50 per cent of our people would go back until the system is changed," King said.

King later left by train for Atlanta. He said he would return to Montgomery tomorrow night.

York.

The rally was sponsored by the National Association of Business and Professional Women.

"We in Montgomery have discovered a method that can be used by the Negroes in their fight for political and economic equality," he said. "We fight injustice with passive resistance.

"And it works." He said, "The little brown man in India—Mohandas Gandhi—used it to topple the British military machine.

"Gandhi was able to break loose from the political and economical domination by the British and brought the British empire to its knees. Let's now use that method in the United States.

defendant's request, fined the pastor $500 plus $184.50 in court costs for his part in the 17-week-old boycott against segregated city buses.

The fine and costs were converted into a jail sentence since he chose to appeal rather than pay the money. He was sentenced to a total of 386 days. The sentence was suspended, however, after his lawyers served notice of appeal.

King's attorney said that if the state appellate courts uphold the conviction, they will take the appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The maximum penalty under the law could have been a $1,000 fine and six months in jail but the judge explained he did not levy the more severe penalty because of King's activities toward preventing violence during the boycott that began last Dec. 5.

The trial of 89 other Negroes, including 23 other ministers, were postponed pending the outcome of King's appeal. The 90 Negroes were indicted by a grand jury last Feb. 21.

Thursday night, an estimated 3,000 Negroes roared their determi-cient evidence for a conviction.

The Rev. King told newsmen the verdict "will not increase or diminish in any way my interest in the protest." He continued:

"We will continue with the protest in the same spirit, with nonviolence, passive resistance and using the weapon of love."

Almost 25 Negro witnesses testified of long-standing complaints of being abused and humiliated by bus drivers. King's lawyers argued that even if a conspiracy did exist, it had a "just cause and legal excuse" as provided by the boycott law.

State's attorneys used seven rebuttal witnesses, including six veteran bus drivers, who denied they had ever mistreated any Negro passengers.

Convicted Minister Begins Montgomery Protest Appeal

BY ROBERT H. DENLEY

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — The Rev. M. L. King, Jr., began an appeal Friday of his conviction as a Montgomery bus boycott leader while fellow Negroes vowed to continue their mass protest.

Defense attorneys for the 27-year-old pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, who was found guilty late Thursday of violating Alabama's seldom-used anti-boycott law, said his appeal may lead ultimately to the U. S. Supreme Court.

MISSISSIPPI NEGROES HOLD PROTEST MEET

Fear Thinned Group Hears Ala. Minister

Daily world Sat. 4-28-56 Atlanta, Ga.

By PAUL BURTON

JACKSON, Miss. — (INS) — A mass-meeting of several hundred Negroes declared Friday there is a "General State Of Unrest" among Mississippi's Negro population and accused Gov. J. P. Coleman of issuing what was termed "an open invitation to violence." P. 1

The Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership met under the watchful eyes of a dozen State Troopers, and spokesmen said fear thinned their ranks.

Normally, from five to seven thousand persons attend the annual session in Jackson. Some 200 were present Friday morning, and an additional 100 joined the afternoon meeting.

The group adopted a resolution roundly criticizing Gov. Coleman for asking New York Congressman Adam Clayton Powell and the Rev. M. L. King, leader of the Montgomery, Ala., Negro bus boycott, not to come to Mississippi.

The Governor's telegrams, and his description of both men as "agitators," the Council said was interpreted as "an open invitation to violence had they appeared."

Coleman was criticized for what the Council called "the effort being put forth . . to give the outside world the impression that there is a tranquil state of race relations in Mississippi . . ."

"There is a general state of unrest among the Negroes in Mississippi," the group declared, charging that Negroes "are not permitted to share in democracy. The resolution added:

Daily world

"As long as the 986,000 Negroes in Mississippi are denied their God-given American rights in the fields of educaton, voting and justice, there will be no thankful er quar there will be no tranquil era in Mississippi." P. 4

The Chief speaker of the morning session, a Montgomery minister who has been active in the bus boycott, urged Mississippi Negroes to form boycotts of their own to achieve their goals.

The Rev. B. T. Lamerth, one of a score of ministers arrested for taking part in the Montgomery boycott called on the Negroes to boycott particularly white merchants operating in Negro neighborhoods.

A WHITE MAN COMES

"A white man comes into our neighborhood and opens up a store," he declared, "and when he gets rich on our trade, he builds a big house downtown ,and you can't go in the back door. We've got to move them out and you can move them out without doing a harmful act. All you have to do is to stay out of his store for 30 days. He'll move out."

Speaking of the Montgomery boycott, Lamerth said Negroes plan to continue it until the Supreme Court specifically knocks down municipal and state laws requiring segregation on intra-state public transportation in Alabama, or until city officials voluntarily agree not to enforce jim crow laws.

A suit attacking the laws will be heard in a federal court in Montgomery May 11.

OBTAIN VOTE

Lamerth urged Mississippi Negroes to strive particularly to obtain the vote in their state. The list of 20,000 registered Negroes in Mississippi has reportedly been shrunk to 8,000 through use of economic pressure applied by the pro-segregation white citizens councils.

The Rev. J. P. Redmen, of Greenville, Miss., chairman of the first session of the fifth annual meeting of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negroe leadership, said fear caused by statements from state officials kept thousands of Negroes away from the session.

He referred to Gov. James P. Coleman's telegrams to two men who had been invited to speak at the meeting. They are the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the Montgomery boycott and U. S. Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, (D) of New York.

Coleman said he felt the men were "agitators" and would stir up strife among the Negroes if they came to Mississippi. Both men replied that previous commitments

The council then asked Coleman to speak and he also refused because of previous commitments.

Rev Lamerth, during his address, prayed:

"May God forgive every race-baiting citizen from the governor on down."

MONTGOMERY, Ala. --(INS)-- The Rev. M. L. King, Montgomery Negro minister, will not speak in Jackson, Miss., Friday, but he said the request of Gov. J. P. Coleman was not responsible.

Coleman wired King, and New York Rep. Adam Clayton Powell asking both not to keep speaking engagements in Jackson Friday night.

King said he has not accepted the invitation to attend a regional conference of Negro leaders in Jackson because he has a previous engagement. He said:

"If I had accepted (the invitation) I would go. I would have a moral obligation to go. I want it understood that Gov. Coleman's telegram had nothing to do with my not going."

The Rev. King added:

"I would not have gone with the intention of disturbing the so-called peace of the community, although I wonder what type of peace he (Gov. Coleman) was talking about?"

Boycott Leader Rips Gradualism

Defender Chicago, Ill.

In his address to the Ohio NAACP, Dr. King went to some detail to reply to Faulkner who recently wrote an open letter to Life Magazine in which he urged Negroes to slow down in their drive for first class citizenship.

"Tell Mr. Faulkner, who encourages the use of gradualism, that segregation is a cancer to the American way of life and that one does not treat cancer by rubbing vaseline on it," stated Rev. King. Sat. 4-28-56

All through his address the speaker emphasized the idea that the protest in Montgomery was being conducted without violence and with love of fellowman and love of country as the most important ingredients.

"We do not have hate in our hearts, we do not want to put the bus company out of business, we want to put justice in business," declared Rev. King.

He also pointed out that the reference to the Negroes' refusal to ride the segregated buses in Montgomery as a boycott is incorrect. "It is a protest. We refuse to cooperate! We refuse to pay our dime to be treated in the manner to which we are objecting."

3 BOARD MEMBERS RESIGN

Alabama Journal Montgomery, Ala. 9/

Next Move Is Awaited In Gray's Draft Case

Tues. 9-18-56

By JOE KOENENN

With the resignations of three members in his hand, State Selective Service Director James W. Jones, late yesterday praised local board 51 as "one of the best in the state."

He added that he certainly regretted their action" which came, according to the members, as a result of intervention from the national director in the induction of Negro Atty. Fred Gray.

A spokesman for the office of the national director said today that Gen. Lewis B. Hershey was merely exercising his legal rights as director and added that if the board reviewed the "new evidence" and still insisted on keeping Gray in a 1-A classification, there was nothing the general could do about it.

The spokesman said that since Hershey had nothing to do with appointment of board members, he would have no comment to make.

In submitting their resignations, the three men agreed that, in their "personal opinion," the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had brought pressure to bear in the case."

They also agreed that no state or local pressure has been brought to bear on them and that they have not heard of any action by Gov. James E. Folsom in the case.

FOURTH MEMBER REMAINS

A fourth member, W. Glenn Harrison, did not resign but said that he did not condone Gen. Lewis B. Hershey's action in the case. He plans to stay on, he said, to see "how much rottener the thing gets." He added that he might resign later on.

Advertiser

In letters addressed to Jones, the board chairman, F. A. Miller, and members, G. C. Gilder Jr., and Hugh M. Smith quit their nonpaying jobs with the board. Their action follows a similar resignation last month by Joseph Petranka, head of board 157. 1-2-A

GRAY CASE UNDECIDED

The induction of the bus boycott leader remains undecided. Hershey, national director, has twice asked that the case be reopened. Now that the board no longer exists to consider the case, national or state officials may transfer it to any other board in Alabama, or Gen. Hershey may let the whole matter drop. If neither of these courses are followed, the new board 51 will have the matter before it when it is formed. Tues 9-18-56

Jones said that it would be a minimum of 20 days before board could be re-constituted. He pointed out that the resignations must first be acted on by a Presidential termination of appointments and then new recommendations must be processed by the Governor's office. These recommendations would be submitted to Washington where the President would issue appointments.

Jones pointed out that his office had nothing "to do with the Gray case whatsoever." He said that calls for inductees to board 51 would, until a new board is appointed, be divided and reassigned to other boards in the state.

WAS PART-TIME MINISTER

Gray, at the time of his 1-A classification, served as part-time minister for a church here. He appealed that classification arguing that he is now a full-time clergyman and should, therefore, be exempt from service. The board contended that Gray's full-time ministerial duties came after his classification and that it was too late to change his status. Hershey ordered the board to re-open the case and to delay Gray's induction for 30 days. This would have meant that Gray would be inducted Sept. 17. Hershey issued a second order which delayed the case indefinitely.

Miller, in his resignation letter said, "The decision of the national director to play politics with draftees renders my position as chairman of Local Board 51 untenable."

OTHER LETTERS QUOTED

Smith's letter said in part. "Together with my fellow board members I have spent many hours in regular meetings of the board over a four-year period. We have had many difficult decisions to make during these years and I am proud to say that without exception we have made every possible effort to accord fair and just treatment to every registrant and have never allowed any outside agency or individual to influence our decisions.

"Our decision to classify the registrant (Gray) in 1- Awas upheld by the State Appeal Board and the Presidential Appeal Board

"If General Hershey has the authority to over-rule our local board then our usefullness is ended. I must necessarily resign as my conscience would never allow me to vote for the induction of any registrant while Fred David Gray is allowed by administrative order to evade his responsibility to his country."

The fifth member of the board Richard O. Grable, also submitted his resignation but for a different reason. He has been selected to serve in the National Guard as a warrant officer. Selective Service rules prohibit members of the Guard or reserve activities to serve on selective service boards.

WCC Seeks 'Walkout' In Autauga

By STEVE LESHER

Four new developments occurred yesterday in the controversial Fred Gray draft case, building fires under Alabama's hot potato to a new peak.

From Washington, the national Selective Service director refused to accept resignations from six Alabama draft board members.

Sen. Lister Hill backed to the hilt a request for a congressional investigation into Alabama draft deferments.

Advertiser

An Alabama white citizens council has organized a committee to ask for the resignations of a local draft board or that they halt inductions.

Mont. Ala.

In Montgomery, a city commissioner revealed he had Fred Gray under "protective surveillance" but that he would now call police off Gray's trail.

6 RECEIVE LETTERS

In letters to six Alabama draft board officials, Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national draft director, said he would not take action on the board members' resignations. Letters were sent to Peyton Drake of Local Board 137 in Madison County; Paul L. Reaves, James E. Holmes and Carl J. Strang of Local Board 3 in Barbour County; James M. Stanton of Local Board 33 in Hale County and F. J. Petranka Jr. of Local Board 157 in Montgomery County.

Montgomery

Petranka said he has written to Hershey "asking him to take immediate action on my resignation.' Stanton said his resignation would stand and there was ndication that the other four men would not be influenced by Hershey's request trat they reconsider their resignations.

HILL BAKCS PROBE

Meanwhile, in a telegram to H. M. Gipson, chairman of the Autauga County draft board, Sen. Hill said that he "strongly" feels that "a thorough investigation should be made" of draft deferments in Alabama.

The Autauga board has halted inductions and wired Hill, Sen. John Sparkman and Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts of the fourth district requesting a congressional investigation into draft deferments in the state.

Hill added that he is "contacting both the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the Sen-Operations urging such an investigation." Earlier, Sparkman had said he agreed a "check" should be made, but questioned whether a congressional probe was necessary. No comment has been received from Roberts.

In Lipscomb, Ala., a small community near Bessemer in Jefferson County, the Lipscomb White Citizens Council has organized a committee to ask for the resignations of Local Board 70 in Bessemer, or that the board halt inductions.

A spokesman for the council, James W.artley, said his group contacted the board for an appointment "but we never received a reply from them.'

Hartley said purpose of the appointment was "to ask the board to either turn in their resignations or halt inductions from Bessemer." He said the Lipscomb Council is affiliated with the Alabama Assn. of Citizens Councils of which State Sen. Sam Engelhardt Jr. of Macon County is executive secretary.

NO ACTION TAKEN

A draft board spokesman, Van D. Jones, said "no action was taken on the counciil's request for an appointment because the chairman of the board was absent from the meeting and we felt we should hold off action until he was present."

Montgomery

Hartley revealed the committee originally was formed in order "to probe into the Gray case." Hartley said the Bessemer board clerk informed him that if the Gray file was to be opened, it would be opened in Montgomery. missioner Clyde C. Sellers said he was called off a "protective surveillance" of Gray after the 25-year-old Negro attorney charged he was being "intimidated and humiliated" by local police.

FOLLOWED BY POLICE

Gray told The Advertiser he was followed "without apparent reason" by two motorcycle patrolmen on at least one occasion for "about 20 minutes." He said he was stopped by "the same policemen" one morning, for a check of "my headlights and windshield wipers on a bright, sunny morning." Sellers said he ordered the surveillance because of threatening telephone calls he (Sellers) had received in connection with Gray.

Sellers said since Gray objected, he would call a halt to any extraordinary protection of Gray.

DRAFT CONTROVERSY

The controversy began shortly before Gray's scheduled induction into the Army last Sept. 17 when Hershey ordered Local Board 51 of Montgomery to reopen the Gray case.

Gray had appealed to the state and Presidential Appeals boards on the ground he was a minister and therefore exempt from draft. His appeals were denied.

When Hershey stepped in and sparked a total of 14 resignations of draft officials in the state; halting of inductions in Autauga request or a congressional probe.

In his letter to six draft officials refusing to accept their resignations, Hershey described his interventon into the Gray case as "routne procedure in the operation of the Selective Service System."

He said "it . . . comes as a matter of great surprise to me that certain members of the system find it necessary to resign when the director of selective service requests reopening to consider new evidence."

Hershey stressed the "fundamental . . . principles of religious freedom" which led to the law that "exempts, not defers, ministers of religion."

ACTIVITY BASIS

He said "the determination in each individual case, as to whether such spiritual leader qualifies for ministeral exempton under the law, is resolved on the basis of his ministeral activities and not on the secular activites n whch he might engage for purpose of earning a livelihood, whether such activities be carpentry, fishing, tent-making or of a more professional character, such as the practice of law.

"Let us not forget that greatest of them all worked as a carpenter and that His ministry at times was on a part-time basis."

The letter concluded "I am taking no action on your resignation because Selective Service in your community can ill afford to do without your services.'

sumably, in the view of Gen. Hershey and top draft officials. But to us it seems entirely reasonable that the Montgomery officials feel they made a correct decision on the basis of the circumstance at the time that decision was made. What happened later, their opinion seems to be, is irrelevant and represents a circumstance which would not have developed had the board's original ruling been allowed to stand.

There is an obvious need for further clarification of the situation. It is imperative that the public know the facts and feel fully satisfied as to the operation of selective service.

The issue should not be allowed to drag on.

PROBE REQUESTED

Members of the Autauga County draft board have ordered all inductions in the county stopped and have requested a congressional investigation into draft deferments in Alabama. The members are (left to right) W. C. Godwin, Allie Trice and Chairman H. M. Gipson. Sen. Lister Hill yesterday wired Gipson that he was in favor of such an investigation.

The Fred D. Gray Draft Case

The functioning of selective service in Alabama is involved in developments in the case of Fred D. Gray, a Montgomery Negro attorney who, it has been claimed, has been serving as a minister.

It is essential that selective service continue working well, and it is absolutely necessary that the public generally have confidence in it. It is, further, essential that the members of local draft boards have the freedom to act as they see fit in specific individual cases without facing the prospect of Washington reversal of their decisions on questionable grounds.

As we understand it, the Montgomery board, which has resigned, holds that when it classified Gray, who has been active in the bus boycott, the attorney was not preaching. But when selective service headquarters in effect reversed the board's decision, it was held — by headquarters—that Gray had at that time begun serving as a minister on a full-time basis.

Whether Gray had been, or had not been, preaching before is irrelevant, pre-

Draft revolt in Alabama subsides

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 22—(AP)—A revolt among Alabama draft officials over the Fred Gray case appeared to be subsiding today with only one local board still refusing to call up eligible draftees.

The Bullock County board which was given a quota of seven for December, said it was "unable to find" any acceptable 1-A registrants but that three volunteers from the county were available.

Members of the Autauga County board decided to resume normal operations and fill the December quota of five as usual. The county was given no quota for this month.

FOURTEEN Alabama draft officials resigned in protest against an indefinite delay ordered by Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national selective service director, in the scheduled induction of Gray, a Negro attorney here who has been active in the fight against bus segregation.

Three of the five members of Gray's board resigned and no quotas have been assigned that board since then.

Lawrence K. Andrews of Union Springs, a member of the Bullock County board, said his group hasn't budged from its announced plan to refrain from calling up any more draftees until the Gray case is settled.

AT A MEETING this week attended by Robert Owens, board chairman; Andrews and Earl Brannon, the other member, the group decided it had made a "diligent search," but had been unable to find any 1-A acceptable registrants to meet the December quota.

At Clayton, Paul I. Reaves, a member of the Barbour County board which announced that all members as well as the county appeals agent, Circuit Judge George C. Wallace, had resigned, said the group has never quit functioning.

Reaves explained that Gen. Hershey declined to accept resignations of the board members and they decided to continue their work. He said the county's quota of four for next month probably would be met with volunteers.

H. M. GIPSON, chairman of the Autauga County board which balked earlier at inducting registrants and called for a congressional investigation into the draft situation, said the board has been "satisfied with the investigation."

The board halted inductions shortly after Gray's induction was held up.

At that time the board explained that its action was taken "until the public mind is clarified on why certain registrants receive indefinite postponement of induction and others do not."

GIPSON SAID the Autauga County board never did take the position that "we would withhold inductions until the Fred Gray matter was settled."

"We felt that a general misunderstanding was going on in regard to draft postponements and we wanted it cleared up," he said. "We feel that this has been done."

Draft Board on Strike

Dixie whites can dish it out, but when it comes to taking it, it's a horse of a different color. In Alabama, the draft boards are plenty worked up because, Negro, the boards were persecuting received consideration from powers beyond the boards' reach.

The board members said they were going to protect their boys, and not send anybody from Bullock county until they could send Attorney Fred Gray.

"WON'T DRAFT" TOWN IGNORED IN NEW QUOTA

Daily World Fri. 10-19-56 Atlanta Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — Alabama's Selective Service Commission is filling their draft quota for November without the help of three county draft boards.

Autauga, Barbour and Bullock counties, who had rebelled against the Selective Service headquarters' deferment for Fred Gray, a Montgomery Negro minister, were not requested to furnish a single draftee.

"If they saw they're not going to send in any draftees as a part of their protest, why send them a quota?" Selective Service Director James E. Jones said Thursday.

He said he hadn't planned any immediate action against the protesting trio, because he didn't believe the revolt to be serious enough."

"The only thing that I'm really concerned about," he said, is that the men at these draft boards are good men and we would hate to lose them, but the issue is between the Boards and Washington."

The three boards had previously demanded a Congressional investigation of the National Selective Service System, contending that National Director Lewis B. Hershey had intervened on behalf of Gray.

They said that Gray, who acted as an attorney in prosecuting a suit attacking Alabama segregation laws, had therefore relinquished his draft status as a minister.

Members of the Bullock County Board had resigned their posts, while the other two draft boards refused to draft anybody until the Gray case was altered to their satisfaction.

Jones announced a November draft call of 375, 50 higher than that of October and 108 higher than the September call.

Draft Call Will Bypass 4 Counties

No Quotas Assigned To Boards Balking Over Fred Gray Case

If Alabama meets its November draft quota of 753 it will be without help from boards in four counties which balked over the handling of the Fred Gray case.

Two of the boards have flatly refused to call up any more registrants until the young Negro attorney who has been active in the Montgomery bus boycott is inducted. Members of the other two boards resigned.

State Selective Service Director James W. Jones said he didn't assign quotas in Autauga, Barbour or Bullock counties because he has been informed they had no registrants available.

He added that a similar situation exists as far as Gray's local board is concerned. A majority of Local Board No. 51 in Montgomery resigned after Gray got an indefinite delay of his induction which the board had ordered.

In all, 14 Alabama draft officials resigned in protest after Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, National Selective Service Director, ordered the young Negro's induction halted.

TAKING NO ACTION

Since then Hersey announced he was taking no action on the resignations. However, most of the Alabama officials have reaffirmed their intention to quit.

Jones said he had no alternative but to skip over the boards which aren't functioning since his office has no authority to induct anyone without approval of local draft officials.

He ordered Bullock County's quota canceled this month, after the Bullock board reclassified its eligible registrants and put them in an occupational exempt category.

Shortly before, the Bullock board announced that it was setting up a new "F.G." (Fred Gray) classification for all youths in the county and wouldn't call up any more "until Fred Gray goes."

PLAN ABANDONED

This plan was abandoned in favor of using established classifications for exemtpion.

The Negro attorney was exempt several years under a 4-D or practicing minister classification. After he achieved prominence during the bus boycott, his local board reviewed his case and put him in 1-A.

Gray was ordered up for induction in August, but was given a 30-day delay on instructions from National Selective Service. Hershey asked the local board to reopen Gray's case but members declined.

When the local board refused to reopen Gray's case, Hershey ordered the induction put off indefinitely which triggered the resignations of three members of his board. Advertiser

2 More Boards Request Probe In Draft Case

Advertiser Montgomery

By STEVE LESHER

A congressional probe into Selective Service procedures has been requested by two more Alabama draft boards as a result of the red-hot draft controversy surrounding a Montgomery Negro attorney.

Fri 10-5-56

One of the boards may halt inductions if the investigation is not begun "reasonably soon," a spokesman said.

Members of the Limestone and Covington county draft boards reported yesterday they notified their congressmen and U.S. Sens. Lister Hill and John Sparkman that they are in favor of a congressional investigation into draft procedures.

RESULT OF DEFERMENT

Spokesmen for both boards said no names were mentioned in the letters to the congressmen but both said the requests for a probe were a direct result of an indefinite deferment granted Fred David Gray, a 25-year-old Negro attorney, by National Selective Service Director Gen. Lewis B. Hershey.

The Autauga County draft board initiated the move for an investigation earlier this week when they reported they had contacted Hill, Sparkman and Congressman Kenneth A. Roberts of the fourth district and asked the 83 draft boards in Alabama to act on a request for a probe.

Hill wired the Autauga board that he would back the request and would contact two Senate committees to start the ball rolling.

SPARKMAN BACKS 'CHECK'

Sparkman was quoted as saying he agreed "a check" should be made on the handling of the Gray case but added he "didn't know" if a congressional investigation would be necessary.

Roberts has not replied. The Covington board contacted Congressman George Grant of the second district, while Congressman Robert E. Jones of the eighth district was contacted by the Limestone board.

Grant previously had stated he was "fully in favor" of a probe into Selective Service procedures and Jones said yesterday he "would be most happy to assist Senator Hill and Senator Sparkman in their endeavor to enlighten the people of Alabama." Jones said he had not recieved the request from the Limestone board.

INDUCTIONS HALTED

Although the Autauga board coupled their request with an immediate halt of inductions in the county, neither the Covington nor the Limestone boards took similar action.

But a spokesman for the Limestone board said the question of whether to halt inductions "will probably come under discussion." Thomas H. Gilbert of Athens said if the investigation is not conducted "reasonably soon," it is "likely that the board may vote to halt inductions."

Inductions have been halted in Bullock and Autauga counties.

HERSHEY STOPPED DRAFT

The proposed investigation stems from Selective Service Director Gen. Lewis B. Hershey's order "indefinitely postponing" the induction of Negro attorney Fred Gray.

Board 20 of Covington and Limestone Board 40 wired Alabama congressional leaders calling for the investigation.

Senator Lister Hill has wired the Autauga Board he was following its request and planned to contact Senate committees dealing with the armed services and Government operations.

Autauga Chairman H. N. Gipson said the group had asked Senators Hill, John Sparkman and Representative Kenneth Roberts to seek an investigation "not only for the Fred Gray case but similar cases in Alabama that have not received so much publicity."

Oct. 10-5-56

Alabama has had 14 board members resign since Gray's postponement. It was given the bus boycott leader by General Hershey in order that new evidence could be reviewed on Gray's claim of being a full-time minister.

General Hershey said, however, he would not accept six of the resignations. In a letter to the men, he said their service is "vital" to the selective service system.

He said he was also "deeply concerned to have such resignations tendered without (the members) having the opportunity to review the principles involved."

In addition to the resigning officials and the requested investigation, the Autauga and Bullock boards say they will not draft any more youths until Gray is inducted.

On Sept. 17, three members of Montgomery County Local Board 51 resigned. Since then 11 other draft officials in the state have resigned in protest of Hershey's action.

Six officials who had resigned received letters Wednesday from Hershey refusing to accept their resignations. The six indicated Hershey's letter would not change their plans of deciding against further affiliaton with Selective Service.

It was learned Wednesday that the Lipscomb, Ala., White Citizens Council has formed a committee to ask the Bessemer draft board members to either resign or order inductions halted. The board was asked for an appointment by the council committee but has taken no action on the request.

Draft Board Sends Home Bullock Boys

UNION SPRINGS, Sept. 28 (AP) —Members of the Bullock County Draft Board are standing firm on their decision not to call up any more registrants for the draft until Montgomery Negro Atty. Fred Gray is drafted.

Birmingham Post Herald

Lawrence K. (Snag) Andrews, one of the board members, said today five youths ordered up for the October call have been reclassified in 2-C and 2-A, occupational exemption classifications.

Sat. 9-29-56

The board previously had announced that it was setting up a new "F-G" (Fred Gray) classification for all eligible registrants, white or Negro.

"There is no change in the stand of the board," he said. "Our position is firm that no Bullock County boy shall take the place of Fred Gray in the Army. We have simply used legal and with criticism of the Gray case and in Bullock County the board said it would not call up any draftees until Gray dons a uniform.

Mon. 10-1-56

Gipson said draft boards are "a go-between for the system and the citizens.

Post Herald

"In order to maintain good feeling we believe it is best to hold off further inductions until this thing is cleared up," he said. "The people as a whole are very much dissatisfied now.

"We're not trying to get out of anything. We just want to maintain the good feeling."

Gipson said Autauga County has a two-man draft quota for October and only one volunteer available. He said the other place would go unfilled until "the confusion is cleared up." The other 82 boards had not been heard from so far, Gipson said.

The letter from Gipson and the other two Autauga board members, A. C. Trice and W. C. Godwin, also said:

"A resulting clarification of policy from such congressional investigation is deemed necessary for due administration of Selective Service act of 1948 as amended, in a fair and impartial manner, because of action by the Selective Service System in the indefinite postponement of induction of certain registrants tending to establish a precedent."

Hill, Sparkman and Roberts were not available for comment. Neither was James W. Jones, Alabama Selective Service director.

In letter to Russell—

Hershey explains why he had Fred Gray deferred

News

Fri. 10-26-56 Birm. Ala.

BY JIM FREE
News Washington correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 26 —Gen. Lewis Hershey, director of selective service, said today he ordered deferment for Fred Gray of Montgomery because the local draft board in Alabama refused to reopen the case to check on new evidence that came in after Gray's 1-A classification was upheld by the presidential appeals board.

38 P

In a letter to Chairman Richard Russell (D., Ga.), of the Senate armed services committee, Hershey said this new evidence showed that Gray, a Montgomery, Ala, Negro, assumed full pastoral duties with his church on Aug. 9, 1956.

Draft Case

HERSHEY SAID the local board had evidence that Gray was a parttime minister for a full two years before it reclassified him into 1-A on Feb. 7, 1956.

While Gray also was parttime attorney, Hershey said the board had been exempting Gray for five years from the draft because of his parttime activities as a minister.

After the local board's reclassification, Hershey said, he received a letter from the Alabama state director of Selective Service. This letter advised that the local board felt compelled "to take some action to revoke registrant's ministerial classification, due to the tremendous pressure being brought to bear on the local board because of the registrant's activities in the bus boycott then existing in Montgomery."

CHAIRMAN RUSSELL wrote Hershey earlier this month asking for an explanation of Gray's deferment by national Selective Service headquarters. The Georgia senator was disturbed about this action after the White House appeals board had upheld the 1-A classification.

Russell asked for an explanation of national headquarters apparent delay in handling the case. The Georgian voiced concern about such a deferment based on evidence submitted after the time Gray had originally been ordered into the service.

The senator said his committee might propose changing the draft law to set a cut-off date—after which local boards would not consider new evidence about eligibility for deferment.

Gen. Hershey told Russell that such a cut-off date "if it were practicable, might simplify the administration" of the draft. But, he added that he felt it would be a mistake to establish a cut-off date.

"It is of the utmost importance that the system at all levels retain maximum flexibility, and this flexibility cannot be maintained" under a cut-off date.

HERSHEY TOLD Russell that there has been in the past three years 79 other cases in which he had ordered deferment after action by the Presidential Appeals Board.

In 45 of these cases this was done because the Supreme Court issued a decision holding that it was necessary for preachers to have full-time duties to get deferments.

In 22 other cases the deferments were granted because of new evidence—as in the Gray case.

Folsom Hints Assembly Call On Court's Work Law Ruling

Governor Says Nullification Action Could Be Taken in State

38a Ala

By FRED TAYLOR

Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 26—Gov. James E. Folsom threatened to call another special session of Alabama's lawmakers as a lackluster Democratic primary runoff campaign moved toward Tuesday's voting climax.

Not that the runoff election results would have any bearing on whether Folsom called a sixth extraordinary session in less than a year and a half, since he and those on the so-called "Folsom slate" were overwhelmingly defeated in May 1 voting. Furthermore, he has evidenced no interest personally in the outcome of the remaining two statewide races and a few local ones to be settled in the runoff, even though some of his leaders have.

Nullification Threat

The governor, returning this week from a vacation jaunt to Miami and Havana, said he might resort to the doctrine of nullification, if the U.S. Supreme Court insists on "trying to cram force measures down our throats."

Folsom was referring to the high court's ruling outlawing state "right-to-work" laws governing the railroad industry.

"If such force measures are pushed upon our state, then I will immediately call another special session of the Legislature and recommend the ordinance of interposition or nullification," said the governor.

Alabama, along with 17 other states, has a "right-to-work" law. The one in this state, passed by the 1953 Legislature and signed into law by former Gov. Gordon Persons, has been opposed by Governor Folsom "in theory." And he has said repeatedly he would work for its repeal, but he has made no real attempt to have it repealed.

In brief, the Alabama law provides that a worker is not required to join a union, unless he so desires.

As for the doctrine of nullification, Alabama's Legislature already has passed an interposition resolution on the segregation question, declaring the high court's integration decision "null, void and of no effect."

Author of the resolution was Talladega's freshman Rep. Charles W. McKay Jr., chairman of the Sylacauga White Citizens Council, who defeated Gov. Folsom for Democratic national committeeman in the May 1 primary.

Folsom, who let the resolution go into effect without his signature, called it "hogwash" and urged the legislature to authorize a constitutional convention to enact nullification "legally."

ALABAMA

Observers are convinced that Governor Folsom's refusal to sign the McKay resolution, and his "soft" attitude on segregation, were contributing factors in his lopsided defeat for the key party post.

But the governor pointed out that "I recommended four constitutional conventions and such an ordinance of interposition could have been accomplished legally in any one of them."

He added that he "did not veto the McKay resolution of nullification. I just did not sign it, because it was of no effect as a resolution."

"I did sign the only real segregation bill passed by the legislature, and that was the 'freedom of choice' bill, which is in no way a force bill," declared Folsom.

Two Statewide Races

He was referring to the Boutwell "freedom of choice" constitutional amendment, which will be voted on statewide Aug. 28, and a statutory enactment implementing this proposal to set up three types of public schools. Parents and guardians would have the right, under these measures, to send children to all-white, all-Negro or to mixed schools.

The two statewide races to be decided in Tuesday's balloting are those between veteran Public Service Commission President Jack Owen, seeking a second term as head of the state rate-making body, and Birmingham's Billy Tucker, insurance man and former Auburn football star, and a runoff for the one remaining unfilled Democratic delegate-at-large seat.

Selma's N. L. Horne, railroad man, who is strictly unpledged, is opposed for this delegate place by Anniston's H. R. Batchelor, loan and insurance man, who leans to Adlai Stevenson. Horne led Batchelor in the first primary.

Folsom Hails State Future, Defends Rep. Powell's Visit

Advertiser Fri. 5-11-56 Montgomery, Ala.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., May 10 (AP) —Gov. James E. Folsom today urged University of Alabama students to remain in this state when they graduate, and share in Alabama's golden future.

Addressing a Governor's Day audience, Folsom said "Markets are going Southward . . . industry must follow. The payrolls are coming to Alabama because we are blessed with more navigable streams and water than any other state."

He urged the students to remain in Alabama and, if possible, "organize your own business."

About 4,500 persons were on hand for the speech.

The governor touched on the visit to the executive mansion at Montgomery of Rep. Powell, Negro congressman from New York. Powell's visit at the mansion was used against Folsom in his unsuccessful race for Democratic national committeeman.

Folsom intimated that he discussed means of keeping an Alabama segregation suit out of the U.S. Supreme Court with Powell.

"I've heard a thousand stories about a social affair in my house with a Negro congressman," Folumm said. "I never answer charges during a campaign, but now I will.

Advertiser

"The congressman was in my office, to the back of the house, on a matter of business and business only.

"For another thing, I never drink Scotch."

Folsom also said he had replied to "resolutions from the British Isles" urging more rights for Negroes during the recent racial strife in the state.

The governor said his reply was that "100 years ago it was a penitentiary offense to teach a Negro to read and that today we have one of the best educational systems for Negroes any place in the United States.

"When you resolute to free the Gold Coast colony slaves in America and when you do something about it, then you send me a resolution about Alabama," Folsom said he replied to the unidentified authors.

"As long as I am governor, the boys in khaki uniforms won't be sent abroad to protect these slave colonies or any other slave colonies."

Preview Of A Pattern

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

The Montgomery (Alabama) City Lines, Inc., grievously hurt financially by the boycott of its busses by Montgomery Negroes, canceled its segregation ruling on hearing of the Supreme Court's decision. The City of Montgomery declares it will continue to enforce local laws and ordinances requiring segregation on public conveyances. Daily World P. 6

The officials point out the decision was handed down on a South Carolina, not an Alabama, case and that technically it did not deal with segregation at all. Montgomery Negroes, realizing they are caught in the middle, have voted to continue their boycott of the bus lines. Tues. 3-8-56 Atlanta, Ga.

Legal opinion agrees the Supreme Court's decision of outlawing segregation on intra- as well as inter-state transportation. But it is true that technically the court's ruling dealt with whether in enforcing South Carolina's segregation laws the Columbia bus drivers were acting as employees of the company or as special police officers of the state. And Montgomery Negroes would be working against their own cause if they complied with local laws, and would be arrested if they didn't.

This may all seem quite frustrating to many on both sides of the segregation controversy. But it supports informed predictions that adjustment to desegregation ruling will have to be worked out state by state and community by community. It supports deductions that the high court, in ruling on the narrowest grounds possible, is giving latitude for adjustments to be made in just this fashion.

And one can hardly avoid noting such a process nevertheless may be affording the two races time to hammer out the multiplicity of new accommodations necessary for them to live side by side in harmony.

Look Who's Riding

Editor, The Advertiser:

As a very interested citizen of Montgomery it seems that the Negro citizens would realize that while they are walking in the cold rain and mud the leaders and "big wheels" are riding in big new cars. Advertiser

These leaders don't feed them and they should think of that before donating their grocery and rent money. I feel for people who are so foolish as they can't see what is best for those who live here in the South. The North is North—the South is South and one or two people can't cram the North's ways on the South simply because they want to. Stop and think Negro citizens, if not I hate to think of Montgomery's future! Mon. 2-6-56 P. 4-A Montgomery, Ala.

Futile Gesture

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have talked to any number of Negroes since this boycott started and am convinced that it is not the responsible educated type of Negro who is back of this. For many years Negroes and whites have gone along side by side in harmony, and these agitators from elsewhere come and prey upon the emotions or ignorance of a certain class and stir up the trouble. My maid tells me that many Negroes are told that "white people have it in for them." She also says they are told the bus men and white people will "jump on them" if they ride the buses.

If they were not being intimidated by their own, many would have started riding long ago. The futility of their actions is so apparent.

Don't they know that even if the federal court should outlaw segregation on the bus and other public transportation within the state, it would be a simple matter to just do away with such public transportation? So what do they hope to gain? Surely a small handful of disgruntled citizens, be they black or white, cannot change our way of life in the South which will endure until the end of time.

Mon. 2-6-56 P. 4-A

After continuously reading articles concerning Autherine Lucy and the Alabama bus boycott, it is time all America and Alabama know how I feel as an American soldier and a native of Birmingham.

I am on foreign soil defending my country in the interest of peace and humanity, defending the rights of 160,000,000 fellow citizens, trying to protect human rights and the right to pursuit of happiness.

My pals ask me why I don't go north because the South is getting worse instead of better. But I have them to know the Negro has made and is still making great progress and you can't solve a problem by running away from it.

To Lucy and all Alabama, I am with you even to death. Keep the good work up without violence. The pen is mightier than the sword. Retaliate without the use of destructive means. Use divine guidance. Then we will learn peace doesn't mean the absence of war, but the presence of justice.

The men can fight and die together on foreign lands during combat, why can't we live together during peacetime?

I have brothers who fought with the Army and the Marines during World War II and this past Korean conflict, and yet they had to come back home only to be denied the rights which they gallantly and heroically fought for.

We have as Negroes shown that we can produce some of the greatest, as Joe Louis, Mrs. Bethune, Ralph Bunche, Marian Anderson and Lena Horne.

Upon the completion of my tour of duty, I am coming home, not to start trouble, not to run from it, but as spiritually and intelligently as I can to help make it better.

I am very sorry to hear from [The Manchester Guardian] correspondent in Washington of a regrettable incident in connection with the recent agitation over Miss Lucy. He tells me that a colored student from England appeared in the city and represented himself as our correspondent—or, at all events, purported to be gathering material for an article on our behalf.

I write to say that we have no knowledge of this man at all and that we have not commissioned him or any other person, (apart from our regular correspondents, Alistair Cooke and Mr. Freedman), to write for us on this difficult subject. Montgomery, Ala.

For your interest I am enclosing all the material which we have had on this subject from our correspondents and in our editorial columns. I am not enclosing news agencies' messages. What Did Th Supreme Court Actually Rule?

Advertiser P. 4-A Thurs. 4-26-56

IT NOW appears that Montgomery City Lines, acting presumably on instructions from the parent National City Lines, may have acted with unseemly, unnecessary haste in ordering drivers here to disregard city and state segregation laws. Montgomery, Ala.

Second-look appraisals of what the court actually meant in its Monday ruling leave considerable doubt that the court intended to abolish segregation on intrastate transportation. Since the court seemed to leave standing the decision by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals that "We do not think the separate but equal doctrine can any longer be regarded as a correct statement of the law," wire services and most newspapers jumped to the conclusion that bus segregation had gone the way of school segregation.

The very brevity of the Supreme Court's ruling, however, should have generated some doubt that the court was laying down a broad new principle of law. Also, the court knows the turmoil existing in the South today resulting from the school ruling, and the justices could hardly be unmindful of the consequences of another exacerbating ruling at this critical time.

IT IS idle to argue that the Supreme Court simply rules on the law without regard to what happens. The court has found it expedient often before to employ the proverbial law's delay, and might very well have done so in the bus case if the court has any feeling at all for social consequences of its actions. And we cannot believe the court is totally devoid of such feelings.

The Associated Press, which said categorically Monday that the Supreme Court had ended segregation on intrastate transportation, hedged yesterday with the following:

WASHINGTON, April 25 (AP)—Government lawyers were divided today on what the Supreme Court meant by its cryptic action Monday in a case challenging race segregation on intrastate buses.

The Court's brief order refusing to review a lower court decision was widely interpreted at the time as ending segregation on any form of public transportation. But some lawyers reviewing the case said the high court could have acted on narrow, technical grounds.

The Supreme Court almost never elaborates on its orders. No explanation could be obtained from it today as to just what it meant.

According to legal opinion here and in Washington, the court might have simply declined to consider a matter which had not been through final judgment in the lower courts.

IF THIS is true, the bus company has painted itself into a corner, announcing that it will not defend segregation although, as the AP story indicates, laws requiring separation of the races on intrastate transportation may remain intact. In any event, National City Lines would have been well advised to have waited until its attorneys had time to weigh the effect of the court's ruling.

But if the bus company is guilty of haste, the Supreme Court is guilty of vagueness and the nation's press, perhaps, of conclusion-jumping — none of which has helped an already sorrowful situation.

Advertiser P.4-A 3-7-56

Dear Mr. Hall:

When I invited you to work with Ted Poston on the series you had proposed on race discrimination in New York. I did so because in my judgment he was best qualified by background and experience to get the full story. Poston has been covering race relations in this city for more than 20 years and if Murray Kempton or I or anyone else were to prepare a series of this sort, he would be the first man to interview. As I wrote you, Kempton entirely concurs with my estimate of Poston.

Montgomery Ala.

I can only assume that your reply ignores my proposal that you work with Poston (and reiterates your desire to collaborate with Kempton) simply because Poston happens to be a Negro. That is your privilege. But I am sure you would not expect me to abide by Montgomery's segregation system in handing out assignments on The Post.

As a newspaperman I had also hoped you would realize that in offering Poston's services I did so in all good faith; the fact that he has lived as a Negro in this city for most of his adult life would surely make him more rather than less sensitive to the discriminations that survive here. In short, I was proposing an arrangement under which you would obtain maximum knowledge and perspective about the New York story. At the same time I made it clear that all the facilities of The Post would be at your disposal; I am sure Kempton and I and everyone else here would have done whatever we could to supplement Poston's effort to make your inquiry a fruitful one.

You say that you want to do this series with Kempton because of your "prior plans and personal relationship" with him. Yet you also say that, if he is unavailable, you would be willing to undertake the project with me. To the best of my recollection we have never met; I must therefore conclude that the only thing that qualifies me as a satisfactory substitute for Poston is that I am not a Negro.

I am sure you will realize on reflection that for me to replace Poston under these circumstances would be an affront to one of my most valued associates. It seems to me an unhappy consequence of the segregation position that a Southern newspaperman would prefer to get an inadequate story with the help of someone like myself rather than work with a Negro reporter who could most effectively help him.

It seems to me equally sad that you apparently cannot consider the lively prospect of publishing Poston's report side by side with yours in The Montgomery Advertiser—as I had offered to do in The Post.

I fear the world will quickly weary of our published communications; let me simply express the hope that you will reconsider your decision and come up to New York to start working with Poston on Monday.

In any case we are, of course, proceeding with our series.

Sincerely,

JAMES A. WECHSLER,

The New York Post
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Wechsler:

Thank you for your March 15 telegram bearing on my proposal to equalize press coverage of race disharmony between New York and Alabama. I am, of course, running your statement in full in the Saturday edition of The Montgomery Advertiser.

I had originally proposed that I handcuff myself to your star columnist, Murray Kempton, for a week in New York as he rooted out the story of New York's racial discrimination. Kempton told me he had planned for sometime to do such a New York series, that he would be delighted to bird dog the story for me, and also that he was going to render the series regardless of whether I came to New York.

I made ready to take plane this weekend, not as an act of sniveling or frivoling, but to play a part in surrendering the South's corner on the production of news of race strife. If the story of race strife is national, then the American press has a duty to nationalize it.

Kempton assured me the story grew on trees in New York. A Nov. 8 editorial in The New York Times uncorked the phrase, "the explosive issue of segregation in New York's own schools."

Your Mayor Robert Wagner followed along with the statement:

"I have been increasingly concerned with the realistic situation of factual segregation in our elementary and high schools."

Plainly the story was there, informing the nation of the sorrowful but evident fact that the Negro encounters rejection wherever he migrates in significant numbers. I say compassionately, as my father wrote years ago in The Advertiser, it is a hard lot in life to be born a Negro.

Anyhow, my first proposal and your acceptance did not mesh. My lively, antic friend Kempton has gone silent and his ancient project is sunk without trace. Next, since you are an editor and I am an editor, I proposed a parley-at-the-summit collaboration with you. Again, you rejected my proposal.

Your alternate proposal—my reliance upon the assistance of the well known Negro reporter, Ted Poston—is obviously an inadequate arrangement for obtaining this particular story.

By the way, I have lately printed some nettling things about the news handling of race strife in Chicago (where a hundred policemen are on duty today to guard 24 Negro families at Trumbull Park) and Detroit. The response was a phone call from that austere Roman, John S. Knight, who publishes in both these cities. He said that he was directing his papers to give me anything I asked should I wish to visit either city. He was as good or better than his word, for almost instantly I had a challenging but hearty invitation from Basil Walters, who bosses Knight's Chicago Daily News, to come and get it, free style.

Finally, Mr. Wechsler, even though Kempton is a fugitive from me and his own project, I have the hope that our exchange of notes may have made some Southern editors and publishers wonder if the time hasn't come to rise from their inert hams and commence staffing Northern race strife to give the American people perspective on what Adlai Stevenson calls "an American, not a Southern, dilemma."

Give my regards to Broadway.

Yours faithfully,

Dear Sir. Montgomery Ala.

I am not sure that you are interested in what I have to say, but after reading an article which appeared in one of our news papers [The New York Post] which I think as a Negro, I am very much interested. I Thank it is only my duty to rbing something to light, now that an opportunity has arrived.

I am not saying that I agree with the Policies, or the laws of the South the sole purpose of this letter is simply to give you, or whome it may consurn some idea of what it's like here in thi Great City of N.Y.

I am happy to say that we Negroes do have quite a number of privilidges of which we are diffently deprived in the South, but I will have to confess that equality is far, far from what our great northern press would have others to believe.

We are supposed to have laws that say you cannot refuse employment or housing facilities to a citicen because of race, creed, or color. Well I can tell you about the only difference one can earnestly see is that in the South the policy is to say straight forward that he is against the Negro and every thing he represent. And the policy here is to deceive, conive and pretend that we are all brothers while if the truth was known, he really feel as you do in the South. I wish to thank you sir for giv-

Courier-Journal P. 8

To the Editor of The Courier-Journal:

Since this Alabama bus boycott and segregation mess has started, the white race of people in the South should stop and think why the Negroes are in their Southern states. I myself am a Negro and I am proud of my race of people. For one thing, they are honest people if the Southern white people let them be. The Southern white people brought the Negroes to this country and treated them like dogs. Did they have to? No, they didn't; they did it because they could.

My guess is that they would like for it to be that way today. The Southern white people should not care much about mixing in their schools or on their buses. After all, you may as well mix in the day as to mix at night. And I am sure you want to know why I say these things, because there aren't any full blooded American Negroes in the U.S.A. If there are I haven't seen any, because the Negro race of people are black as soot. The Negro in this country today is mixed with white people. And why? Because the Southern white people sold them like stock for mixing in the South. You don't call that mixing, or do you? Thomas Jefferson once said, "All men are created equal, all men are born the same." God made the Negro equal to any race above the grave, although once made a captive and sold to man, a slave. Of all the crimes recorded our histories none tell of a crime more brutal. It was said by men of wisdom, "No knowledge shall they have, for if you educate a Negro you unfit him for a slave."

No Color Envy

Reading my Sunday Courier-Journal I don't like what I read, so I am going to attempt to answer one question for John C. Epsie, Sr. First I am going to ask him one. Why would he think anyone in his or her right mind would want to be changed from Negro to white? I have never in my life heard one Negro say he wished he was white. Oh yes, we stare at the other races, wishing we could give our children better advantages, lovely homes, plenty of nice clothes for all occasions. Yes, we look real long at you white people, but not because of color.

Take my color; I like it fine. I am clear brown.

Louisville, Ky.

I can look in my mirror when I get up in the morning or any time of day and I like what I see. But on the other hand, if I were white I could get a fat-paying job at Goodall Plant or Corning Glass. It does look like they would hire half of each race, but I don't suppose that will ever happen down here in Kentucky.

When you see or hear of someone "passing," it's for money alone. All this "superior" and "aristocratic" business should first come from within. Imagine having to tell folks, "I am a superior race, I am an aristocrat." Whatever you are and wherever you are, Father Time will take care of us all.

The wheels of the gods grind slowly, but surely.

Alabama Trial; National Tragedy

New Orleans, La.

The views expressed in this column do not necessarily express the editorial opinion of the Louisiana Weekly.

(San Jose Mercury, March 23)

Thinking, feeling Americans in all parts of the country must experience a sense of profound sadness, not to say alarm, when they read of the so-called bus boycott trial now in progress in Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 4-7-56

The spectacle of a community so torn with fear and mutual distrust that one portion seeks legal action against another over a simple matter of personal choice is indeed a sad one.

There can be little doubt that the Negroes on trial for "conspiracy" to boycott racially segregated buses feel persecuted. There is no doubt whatsoever that their white neighbors are acting out of economic and political fear.

In such an atmosphere of fear and suspicion it seems unlikely the court will arrive at anything approaching a just verdict. Indeed, what sort of verdict is possible in a case whose basic feature is an incredible attempt to force the use of a public conveyance? There is as much sense in this as there would be in an attempt to force all blue-eyed blond individuals to ride San Jose City Lines buses for any reason whatever.

Were the race issue not so explosive in the South, the Montgomery trial would make excellent Gilbert and Sullivan. Unfortunately, the trial has all the makings of a first-class national tragedy. The issue is a fundamental one: should a citizen, whatever his race, creed, color or political belief, be allowed free choice in meeting a simple, everyday need: transportation?

In all justice, the answer should be as simple as the question: yes.

The Montgomery bus trial will make no friends for the South outside of the South. It will not aid the South in its attempts to nullify or delay implementation of the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling.

It will set back, for who knows how long, efforts by men of good will in both races to find a common meeting ground where the legacy of slavery can be ameliorated and eventually dissolved.

In the larger picture, the nation as a whole will suffer because of the trial for the simple reason that it cannot ignore the South. The South is still, albeit grudgingly, a part of the Union; its citizens are still Americans.

Where this tragedy will lead one can only guess. There is more at stake for the Nation in the decision of the Montgomery court than too many persons realize. At this point, perhaps prayer is the only weapon left to men of goodwill.

Desegregation: Economic Weapons

Daily World P. 2

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

The Negroes of Montgomery, Alabama, have started something which will not be stopped by the conviction of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., on the charge of organizing an illegal boycott. The bus boycott is not halted. Trials of 89 other defendants were suspended pending appeal of the King case, and that may take several years to reach a final adjudication.

Sat. 4-7-56

It is difficult to see how that process can do anything but hurt the segregationists' cause. For even eventual upholding of this conviction — which is by no means certain — would not kill the idea of nonviolent use of economic power. Meanwhile at every step there would probably be a continuance of bad publicity for the methods adopted to enforce white supremacy. Also, unhappily, there may be a spreading use and abuse of boycotts, damaging to both races and to the South as a whole.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Montgomery boycott developed as a protest by most of e city's 50,000 Negroes against discrimination on the busses. In e King trial there was abundant testimony intended to show stification — which might be a defense under the law. It left tle doubt that treatment of the Negroes on busses fulfilled but alf of the "separate but equal" standard.

Southerners honestly convinced that the two races will do etter if kept separate — at least in certain associations — will find eir case damaged by the ugly evidence of insult and humiliation this record. Senator Eastland recently declared segregation was ot based on any sense of racial superiority. But as practiced it often hard to disengage from manifestations of "white supremacy" which are not pretty even when as unconscious as the scrimination practiced in the North.

Negroes have by no means been the only ones to employ onomic weapons in the segregation struggle. Whites months go began firing or denying credit to Negroes who signed petions for desegregated schools. Whites have set in motion some of the most harmful rumor-bred boycotts of business firms accused — usually with no truth — of aiding the NAACP. Whites, indeed, appear to have suffered most, being also on the receiving end of boycotts by Negroes for supporting the White Citizens Councils.

It is clear that the economic weapons are dangerous ones, and southern leaders are deeply concerned by the harm they are doing. One remedy is to expose the false reports which start many of them. But a more fundamental answer is also being sought in steps to cultivate moderation and positive improvements in race relations. Leaders in Montgomery would be well advised to follow this course.

So far the Negroes there have had all the best of it — especially in national and world opinion. They have asked for a rule which obtains on busses in other southern cities like Memphis. This still aims at segregation, but with a first-come-first-served rule. Whites are seated in front, Negroes in the back, but either race may overflow its own area if there are seats elsewhere. Whites at present are in the poor position of trying to compel Negroes to ride busses. Also to stand even though there may be empty seats.

Moreover, some of the Negro leaders appear to understand that the spirit in which economic weapons are used is vital. They have emphasized calmness and nonviolence. Mr. King pleaded on one occasion, "We must use the weapon of love. We must have compassion and understanding for those who hate us." Economic power, if exercised in that spirit, will not be easily stopped.

The Negroes of Montgomery, Alabama, have started something which will not be stopped by the conviction of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., on the charge of organizing an illegal boycott. The bus boycott is not halted. Trials of 89 other defendants were suspended pending appeal of the King case, and that may take several years to reach a final adjudication.

It is difficult to see how that process can do anything but hurt the segregationists' cause. For even eventual upholding of this conviction — which is by no means certain — would not kill the idea of nonviolent use of economic power. Meanwhile at every step there would probably be a continuance of bad publicity for the methods adopted to enforce white supremacy. Also, unhappily, there may be a spreading use and abuse of boycotts, damaging to both races and to the South as a whole.

The Montgomery boycott developed as a protest by most of the city's 50,000 Negroes against discrimination on the busses. In the King trial there was abundant testimony intended to show justification — which might be a defense under the law. It left little doubt that treatment of the Negroes on busses fulfilled but half of the "separate but equal" standard.

Southerners honestly convinced that the two races will do better if kept separate — at least in certain associations — will find their case damaged by the ugly evidence of insult and humiliation in this record. Senator Eastland recently declared segregation was not based on any sense of racial superiority. But as practiced it is often hard to disengage from manifestations of "white supremacy" which are not pretty even when as unconscious as the discrimination practiced in the North.

Atlanta, Ga.

Negroes have by no means been the only ones to employ economic weapons in the segregation struggle. Whites months ago began firing or denying credit to Negroes who signed petitions for desegregated schools. Whites have set in motion some of the most harmful rumor-bred boycotts of business firms accused — usually with no truth — of aiding the NAACP. Whites, indeed, appear to have suffered most, being also on the receiving end of boycotts by Negroes for supporting the White Citizens Councils.

Fri. 3-16-56

It is clear that the economic weapons are dangerous ones, and southern leaders are deeply concerned by the harm they are doing. One remedy is to expose the false reports which start many of them. But a more fundamental answer is also being sought in steps to cultivate moderation and positive improvements

Leaders Call for Stoppage March 28

NEW YORK — (UP) — A group of New York Negro ministers Friday night called on the nation's Negroes to stop work for an hour on the Wednesday before Easter to offer up prayers in support of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

The call came from a meeting organized by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, New York Democrat, in protest against the arrest of church leaders in the Montgomery boycott.

Powell, a Negro, called for a prayer campaign "for deliverance from persecution and for the deliverance of persons afflicted with racial prejudice."

He said the "National Deliverance Day of Prayer" would be held on Holy Wednesday, March 28.

"Between the hours of 2 p.m. and 3 p.m. on that day, no Negro man, woman or child shall work or attend school," he said.

Powell said the prayer campaign was approved by an emergency meeting of Negro spirtual leaders in New York City.

Powell is pastor of the Abyssinian Methodist Church, which claims the largest Protestant congregation in the world.

Powell said he told the leaders of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott about the plans for the day of prayer. He said they told him they would join the program.

Powell, named chairman of the Prayer Day movement, said the entire demonstration should remain a spiritual one with religious leaders providing the impetus.

He termed the campaign "a spiritual answer to those "people behind 'the dark curtain' of Alabama who have cast aside the laws of the nation and the moral laws of God."

He said it was the general feeling among his "colleagues in Congress that the anti-Negro movement in the South was aimed at keeping the Negro from voting."

Powell said the firemen, policemen and hospital attendants would be exempt from the work halt March 28.

Rap Powell's Sponsorship Of Prayer Day

NEW YORK (NNPA) — Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat, of New York has been accused by a group of Baptist clergymen on Long Island with political motivation in promoting a "national deliverance day of prayer."

Mr. Powell, pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church here, is promoting the day of prayer in connection with racial tensions and violence in the South.

The Baptist Minister Fellowship, composed of ministers of fifty churches in Queens, Nassau and Suffolk counties, made the charge against Mr Powell at a meeting Tuesday.

The Rev. James R. Moore, executive secretary of the group, said Thursday that it was the general feeling among members that Mr Powell was promoting the day of prayer "as an opportunist, for his own political prestige."

The Long Island ministers have planned a "week of fasting and praying for freedom from oppression of all minority groups through out the world." The week is set for March 26-30, inclusive.

On each of the days, eight churches in central locations in the three counties will hold prayer services at noon and 8 p m. Special collections will be taken, the money going to further the efforts of the ministers in Montgomery, Aa., who are leading a boycott of the bus lines there in protest against segregation rules on the buses and harsh treatment by the drivers.

A Negro attorney who has been active in the fight against bus segregation in Montgomery faces trial in Recorder's Court July 28 on a drunk driving charge.

Charles D. Langford of Montgomery was arrested by city police on a residential street shortly after 2 a.m. yesterday. He was taken to jail and later released on $200 bond.

Under Alabama law, conviction of driving while intoxicated means automatic revocation of the driver's license.

Langford as an attorney has represented Negroes boycotting segregated city buses and also the four Negroes who won a three-judge federal court order holding segregation unconstitutional.

Powell says bus boycott may spread

News 3/14
Birm., Ala.

NEW YORK, March 12— AP —Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) says the Negro boycott of buses in Montgomery, Ala., may spread to other cities.

The Negro congressman said yesterday he would send a telegram to the Chicago owner of the Montgomery line telling him the boycott may hit his buses in other cities.

PHON. 3-12-56

The congressman-clergyman discussed the boycott during a "prayer meeting for national deliverance" at the community church. He said the meeting was one of a series and the first to be held in a non-Negro church.

POWELL SAID he would ask the National Bus Lines president, E. Roy Fitzgerald, "to reexamine the Montgomery situation or face the possibility of people walking in other cities as well."

Powell did not indicate specifically how a spread of the boycott might be accomplished.

The New York City Democrat also told of replies he had received to letters he sent to President Eisenhower and the FBI on the civil rights situation.

The reply from a presidential assistant, he said, was "patently deceitful, sheer hypocritical buck-passing."

POWELL SAID he urged Eisenhower to call a conference of Southern white and Negro leaders and also join with a biracial committee of clergymen in five minutes of prayer "for the deliverance of the persecuted and the salvation of the prejudiced."

The reply from Eisenhower's office, he said, suggested that recommendations for a bipartisan civil rights commission and a prayer period should come from Congress.

The congressman said a letter to the FBI asking for investigation of the White Citizens Councils in the South brought this reply from Asst. Atty. Gen. William F. Tompkins:

"The organizations to which you refer, along with many others, have been under review. Appropriate action will be taken if warranted."

Southern white man Negro's best friend

CLEVELAND, March 12—(AP) —"The finest friend a Negro has in the world," says a Negro minister indicted for boycotting buses in Montgomery, Ala., "is the Southern white man."

However, the Rev. L. Roy Bennett, president of a Negro ministerial alliance in Montgomery, added that a "substrata" element is fighting for survival and causing confusion.

The Rev. Mr. Bennett addressed a rally here yesterday where $3274.18 was collcted to aid Montgomery Negroes in their legal battles.

"All we want is a dime's worth of ride for 10 cents," he said, adding that "we're going to fight until we can sit down where we darn please."

Congressman Calls Arrests 'Barbarism'

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Rep. Adam C. Powell Jr., New York Democrat, asked "White House" protection Thursday for Negroes indicted in Montgomery, Ala., in connection with a bus boycott there.

PHON. 3-24-56

Powell, a Negro, said in a telegram to the President that the arrest of Negro ministers in Montgomery, on boycott charges is a "new low in American barbarism."

It was announced Wednesday 115 persons had been indicted, but the sheriff's office in Montgomery estimated Thursday the number was around 90. Among those taken into custody were 24 Negro ministers and around 50 other persons.

Court Fines King $500 On Boycott Law Charge

Judge Orders Continuance In 89 Cases

By TOM JOHNSON
And FRANK McARDLE

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Negro leader of the bus boycott here, was convicted on a charge of violating a state anti - boycott law and was fined $500 and costs in Circuit Court by Judge Eugene Carter yesterday.

Judge Carter ordered a continuance in 89 other cases of Negroes charged with the same violation until a final appeal action is completed in King's case.

The jurist suspended payment of the fine until the appeal is heard by higher courts. The appeal eventually could go to the U.S. Supreme Court.

BOND

Defense attorneys prepared to post a $1,000 appeal bond. They had previously stated they would carry the case "all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court" in the event of a conviction.

As King and his wife left the courthouse, they encountered a lively demonstration on the sidewalk. Television cameramen and news photographers fired away as a crowd of about 300 clapped and waved their hands.

They chanted, "Long Live King," or "Long Live The King" and "We Ain't Gonna Ride the Buses No More."

No demonstrations occurred in the courtroom.

Judge Carter announced he had been satisfied about the guilt of King in violating the anti-boycott law. But he added that he was levying a fine lower than the maximum because the minister apparently had "discouraged violence" in the bus boycott movement.

MOTION DENIED

Earlier a motion to dismiss the evidence entered by the state and rule a verdict for the defendant was denied by Judge Carter.

In his summary arguments, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford argued that the state had proved King had engaged in a conspiracy to hinder and prevent the operation of the bus company without "just or legal cause."

Defense attorneys Arthur Shores of Birmingham and Fred Gray of Montgomery, in their summary said that the state had failed to prove King had been a party to any conspiracy or agreement to hinder the bus company's business and that if such a conspiracy existed it existed with "just cause." Shores said King was merely a spokesman for the Negroes who selected him for their leader.

Shores, one of the six Negro attorneys defending King, said that the Baptist minister "didn't volunteer to be a rabble-rousing crusader, as the state attorneys have presented him."

Interpretations of the anti-boycott law took up most of the arguments. Thetford charged a group of 16 to 18 Negro leaders carried out the boycott "to gain personal power and influence." He added the boycott resulted from "hysteria built up at mass meetings" promoted by King and others. He pointed to violence in the firing on city buses and charged that King was directly responsible for boycott activity.

Thetford said the Montgomery Improvement Assn. had spent $30,000 for the sole purpose of keeping the bus boycott alive.

King himself was called as the final defense witness.

The state put him through a fairly brief but vigorous examination during which the young minister denied that he had ever urged Negroes to refrain from riding buses.

He said his "emphasis" has been "let your conscience be your guide."

Another witness, the Rev. Robert S. Graetz, pastor of the all-Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, had earlier testified that on the "several occasions" he heard King speak, the Negro leader never openly advocated that bus patrons remain off the buses.

Graetz said he had heard "two or three compromise proposals" for ending the boycott discussed at meetings of the executive board of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., and had submitted such a plan himself.

He said the board had been "interested" in the compromises but none was ever "completely acceptable."

King was asked if he ever advocated violence on the part of protesting Negroes. He replied that his stand had been the "very antithesis of that," that he had urged non-violence.

He described the improvement association, of which he is president, as a group formed on the day the boycott began to improve race relations and "uplift the general tenor of the community."

NO SALARY

He said he is paid no salary but that seven office workers receive money for their services.

Thetford tried to show that the resolution adopted at the first mass meeting (Dec. 5 at Holt Street Baptist Church) was actually prepared during the preceding afternoon by a committee headed by King.

King admitted he was a member of a committee but said he did not recall helping draft the resolutions. He said his impression was that the resolutions were planned during the afternoon and actually drawn up that night.

Thetford referred to another portion of the minutes of the afternoon session which referred to an agreement to continue the boycott indefinitely, and asked King if such an agreement was reached.

"That's true according to the minutes," he said. "I just don't remember the discussion."

'SPONTANEOUS'

Thetford directed his questioning at trying to show that the boycott did not develop spontaneously" on the night of Dec. 5, as some Negro leaders have maintained, but was planned hours before by a group of 20 persons at the Mt. Zion AME Church.

Did the executive committee of the association agree during the afternoon to set up finance and transportation committees, as mentioned in the minutes of the meeting?

King's reply: "I don't remember."

Thetford tried to show that there were, as he phrased it, "two boycotts"—the first one planned for one day only (Dec. 5) and the second, which developed later, planned for indefinite duration.

"Did you have anything to do with the first boycott?" asked Thetford.

"No, I didn't," said King.

"Do you know anyone who did?"

"No, I don't," King replied. "It was a spontaneous beginning."

ONE-DAY BOYCOTT

Did the Montgomery Improvement Assn. take what started out to be a one-day boycott and, with its money and planning, extend the boycott indefinitely, Thetford asked.

"No, I wouldn't say that," the minister answered.

Thetford again referred to the minutes of the Dec. 5 afternoon session which referred to certain "recommendations" of the executive board being given to that night's mass meeting.

The solicitor wanted to know what the recommendations were.

King said he didn't know.

Was an agenda for the night's program drawn up at the afternoon meeting, Thetford asked.

"I imagine so," replied King.

Did the executive board draw up the three items the Negroes are said to demand as the price for ending the boycott — that is, a different seating arrangemnt, courteous treatment and the hiring of some Negro bus drivers?

"I don't remember," said King. He testified he "couldn't say" who formulated the demands or where or when they were drawn up.

"DIDN'T REMEMBER"

But he added, "I think they were done at the Holt Street Church (at the first mass meeting). I really don't remember." In any event, he said, the demands reflected the wishes of the "4,000 Negroes" present at the Dec. 5 mass meeting.

He confirmed that the weekly budget of the improvement association is $3,200 — "approximately that."

Thetford asked if all of the approximately $30,000 donated to the improvement association had been spent for the boycott.

King admitted "most of it" had. He said the money came from "free-will" offerings.

Asked how many white persons are members of the improvement group, King said he didn't know because "we don't keep records on the basis of race."

SOME OTHERS

He said he did know that Graetz was a member.

Thetford asked if there were any others.

"I know we have some others," said King.

"Who are they?"

"I don't know," said King.

King, pastor of the Dexter Avenu. Baptist Church, testified he came to Montgomery in 1954.

Thetford asked how many times he had ridden the city buses?

"Only Once," King replied.

Graetz preceded King on the witness stand.

He said, though, he couldn't remember having heard King urge Negroes to refrain from riding buses, he did "recall that there were times when they referred to people not wanting to ride."

The defense put on seven other witness before resting the case. All of them testified that as bus passengers they were abused and referred to in derisive terms.

REBUTTAL GIVEN

In rebuttal to the passengers' testimony, the state called bus drivers J. B. Saddler, O. T. Rainwater, C. H. Williams, W. H. Mills, C. E. Moseley, and O. O. Martin.

Each of them testified he had driven buses for several years on predominantly Negro lines and denied the use of abusive language or discourtesy.

They said—and Manager J. H. Bagley confirmed—that the seating arrangement now in existence on buses reserves an equal number of seats for whites and Negroes.

Bagley said, superintendent of the bus company since it began business 20 years ago, there were 93 or 94 bus drivers employed on Dec. 5, the day the boycott began. None of them, he said, was a Negro.

Asked if he would hire a Negro driver, Bagley said, "It's never been the custom to hire Negro drivers for either drivers."

Anyway, he answered: "I've never had an application."

Negro pastor denies urging bus boycott

Thurs. 3-22-56

By REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 22—(AP)—The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., denied today he ever encouraged any Negro to refrain from riding segregated city buses during the 17-week-old mass boycott.

The 27-year-old Negro Baptist minister, first of 90 Negroes called to trial on boycotting charges, also testified in his own defense that never at any time did he advocate violence during the boycott but had urged his people instead to refrain from violence.

Defense attorneys rested their case at the conclusion of King's testimony. The state announced it would have some rebuttal evidence before the guilt or innocence of King is turned over to Circuit Judge Eugene Carter to decide in the absence of a jury.

Despite King's disavowal of urging Negroes to stay off the buses, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford sought to show that the Negro minister at least indirectly was a party to that.

Thetford referred to a resolution drawn up by the Montgomery Improvement Assn. which was organized the day the boycott began last Dec. 5. King is president of the association.

KING INSISTED his attitude toward Negroes riding the buses was "Let your conscience be your guide."

The 27-year-old pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church said he urged his people repeatedly to refrain from violence, by contrast his own house was bombed the night of Jan. 30 and that he had received "numerous threats" against his life.

Earlier, the white pastor of an all-Negro church who has helped in the boycott testified he has never heard King urge other Negroes not to ride the buses.

The Rev. Robert S. Graetz, 27-year-old white pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church in Montgomery whose congregation is all-Negro, was called as a defense witness.

Graetz identified himself as a member of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. which has supported the bus boycott and is made up almost entirely of Negroes.

The white minister also testified he has driven his own car in a motor pool which has provided transportation for the boycotting Negroes, but said he has received no money on gasoline.

News P.23

GRAETZ TESTIFIES as he understands it the association intends to continue the boycott until its original demands for better seating arrangement on buses are granted or until some compromise is reached. But he quoted King as saying that the prospects of an acceptable compromise are slim.

AS THEY DID yesterday, the Negro lawyers produced more witnesses who told of white bus drivers habitually refering to them as "niggers;" ordering them to give up seats to white passengers; making them stand while seats in the white section of buses remained vacant, and in some instances ordering them to board the rear of a bus after paying their fare and then driving off before the Negroes could get on.

One witness, Mrs. Mary Banks, said "some drivers act nice and ask white people to get up," but most of the testimony told of what the Negroes called a persistent policy of mistreatment.

State's attorneys in cross-examination brought out that some of the witnesses have attended Negro mass meetings since the boycott started, but they had difficulty getting the witnesses to say that they heard the bus protest discussed at those meetings.

ONE NEGRO, Joseph Alford, said he attended some of the rallies but all he knew about the boycott was what he had read in the newspapers. Alford said he stopped riding city buses two months before the boycott began last Dec. 5.

Defense attorneys yesterday presented witness after witness who told of mistreatment or embarrassment as passengers on city buses.

ONE OF THE 26 Negro defense witnesses who took the stand Wednesday was R. A. Parks, husband of Mrs. Rosa Parks. Negroes have refused to ride city buses here since Mrs. Parks was fined $14 Dec. 5 for refusing to move to the rear of a city bus.

Parks testified he had once been forced to take another bus to reach his destination because the driver of the bus he was riding wouldn't let him off when he buzzed for a stop.

He said he hasn't ridden the buses since the day his wife was fined for violating state and city laws requiring segregated seating facilities on buses.

ANOTHER NEGRO defense witness, Mrs. Gladys Moore, said she stopped riding buses after years of mistreatment of her and members of her race. She said she chose Dec. 5 as the day to stop riding because Negroes as a group picked that date.

"We all decided, 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery decided, we wouldn't ride the buses any more," she said. "We all did it after that thing happened to Mrs. Parks. She was treated so bad."

Other witnesses testified that drivers habitually referred to them as "niggers" and occasionally as "you ugly black apes."

They said numerous complaints were made to the bus company and to the Montgomery City Commission.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "Long live King!" the crowd at the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King shouted as the leader of the Montgomery Improvement Association came out of the courthouse following his conviction.

He was fined $500 and $500 court costs on conviction of violating the state's anti-boycott law for his part in the bus segregation protest that has kept colored riders off the city's busses for 16 weeks.

When he stated his intention to appeal, the fine and costs were converted into a jail sentence of 386 days.

"I find the defendant guilty.

"I could sentence him to six months at hard labor and fine him $1,000 under the law, but I am going to fine him only $500."

It was Judge Eugene Carter who spoke.

His words were among the last recorded in the four-day testimony in the trial of the Rev. Mr. King, accused of leading a conspiracy to violate the state of Alabama's boycott laws.

THE COMPLAINANT was the Montgomery City Bus Lines, whose operation, the state charged, was being hindered by the boycott or protest waged by the Montgomery Improvement Association.

Following the decision, William Thetford, county solicitor, said that the state agreed to postpone trial of the 91 other so-called "boycott cases" pending the outcome of the appeal filed by the Rev. Mr. King.

Judge Carter granted the indefinite postponement until the Alabama Supreme Court and the Federal Supreme Court reviewed the case.

"I can say that I expected the judge's decision. Of course I hoped for the best, but was realistic enough to prepare for the future.

"When this is heard by a higher court, I feel confident that the decision will be reversed.

"We have carried on our movement under the color of the Constitution . . .

"The movement will go on. We will continue our non-violent, passive resistance protest emphasizing weapon of love."

JUDGE CARTER told the AFRO following the decision:

"I hope that this (decision) will end the struggle in Montgomery. We have always been a friendly people, here. The races have gotten along well in the past.

"I SAW one of my good friends among the indicted. I am not going to tell you who, though," the judge chuckled.

"No comment," snapped Solicitor Thetford.

"There is always the Man Upstairs," said young Fred Gray, who handled a portion of the final argument.

"We had prepared for an appeal bond 24 hours ago, so we anticipated the decision."

"I am not surprised. I had hoped that it would have turned out differently. But, I am not fearful nor surprised," said the minister's wife, the attractive Mrs Correta King, as she kissed her husband affectionately on the cheek.

Baltimore, Md.

AFTER ARRANGEMENTS were made for the appeal bonds, about 5,000 people waited for the Rev. Mr. King to emerge from the court house.

"Long live King!" they shouted.

"Are we going to ride the buses?" someone yelled.

"No!" the throng thundered as the Rev. Mr. King moved through the crowd of well wishers and newsreel cameramen.

Thursday morning saw the defense present six more bus riders who said that they had been mistreated by the drivers of the city bus lines.

Miss Willa L. Moore said that she hadn't ridden a bus since 1949, when a driver took her past her stop and told her:

"N—r you're lucky you can ride a bus."

J. B. SADDLER was asked if he ever used harsh words in talking to colored passengers.

"No, I asked them to kindly move to the rear."

Q.—Did you ever use the word n—r, black ape, or cow, in referring to colored people?

A—No, sir. I never use such terms. My colored folks know that I treat them nice.

T. Ringwater, C. H. Williams, W. H. Mills, C. E. Mosely and O. O. Martin were other white bus drivers who "never used derogatory remarks," they testified.

J. H. BAGLEY, manager of the bus lines, returned to the witness stand in rebuttal.

Under the cross examination of Peter Hall, one of the defense attorneys, Bagley admitted that the company had no policy against hiring bus drivers.

Bagley admitted that the National City Bus Lines, the operator of the Montgomery bus firm, operated the city buses in Mobile.

"Don't they have a first-come-first-served policy in Mobile?" asked Hall.

"So, I have learned," said Bagley.

"Isn't Mobile in the state of Alabama?" said Hall.

"I imagine so—I mean it is," said Bagley.

"Well, if both cities are in he state, why can't the Montgomery company grant the wishes of the Improvement Association for the same seating arrangement?" said Bagley.

"I don't know," he said.

ON THE MATTER of courtesy, Bagley admitted that "perhaps, there should be more courtesy on the part of bus drivers."

"Now, with this testimony in mind, do you think that the demands of the colored citizens of Mongtomery are unreasonable?" asked Hall.

"I object. That calls for a conclusion," said Solicitor Thetford.

"Sustained," said Judge Carter.

"Do you think that if granted the three demands that the boycott would end?" asked Hall.

"Objection sustained."

On that note ended the trial testimony.

IN SUMMATION, Thetford traced the history of the boycott from Dec. 5 until the February indictments.

"A handful of men met at Mt. Zion AME Church on the afternoon of Dec. 5 to plot continuance of a one-day demonstration," the solicitor charged.

"A wave of violence, which the government admits can't be directly linked to the defendant (the Rev. Mr. King), but was inspired by the hysteria at the Holt Street Baptist Church on the night of Dec. 5.

"It was after that Holt Street meeting that certain demands were made, he charged.

"Now we are not putting people in jail for not riding buses. I don't care whether they ride or not.

"But the law says that people can't conspire to hinder the operation of a legal enterprise," he said.

GRAY, WHO opened the defense summation, said that the government "failed utterly to prove without a reasonable doubt that a conspiracy existed."

He cited the portion of the law which dealt with "without a just cause" and pointed out on the contrary Mayor W. A. Gayle and Bagley, the bus official, both government witnesses, admitted that colored citizens had complained of conditions on the buses long before Dec. 5, 1955.

Arthur Shores concluded the defense argument by pointing out that substantial citizens in the community representing a women's civic group, a Democratic club, a women's political organization had testified that colored people had aired grievances against the bus company over the years.

"You have heard from the witness stand how bus drivers were called 'mean,' used nasty names and were generally abusive.

"THE ARREST of Mrs. Rosa Parks was the spark that ignited this smouldering resentment against this intolerable condition.

"To control this mass action, the ministers of this city organized. They appointed as their leader the Rev. M. L. King, no rabble-rousing crusader, but a man in whom they had confidence.

"With the Rev. Mr. King as their spokesman they made three very simple demands. A demand for courtesy, better seating arrangements and the employment of colored drivers.

"Even Mr. Bagley, head of the bus company, admitted that the demands were not too excessive.

"On the contrary it was the 'get tough policy' of Mayor Gale and the influence of the White Citizens Council, which Gayle joined, that has kept this demonstration from being settled.

"IN THE INTEREST of justice, I don't see how this defendant (the Rev. Mr. King) can fail to be acquitted because the government has not proven that he engaged in an illegal conspiracy 'without cause.'

After Thetford delivered his rebuttal, Judge Carter, without a momen'ts deliberation, found the defendant guilty. He pronounced the fine of $500.

Rep. Charles C. Diggs (Dem., Mich), told this writer: "Alabama missed a great opportunity to counteract the bad reputation of withholding justice for colored persons in the South."

BASIL BROWN, his legal adviser, said:

"As an observer, I feel that the appeals court will reverse Judge Carter. If this case did not have the racial angle, it woud have been thrown out, I believe."

G. H. Nelson, a supporter of the movement, said: "If Rev. Mr. King goes to jail, I will go, too."

Another spectator, a Montgomery resident, Mrs. Lucille Lewis, said:

"Well, I don't think it was a fair decision. I intend to walk even in expensive high heel shoes. You'll never see me on a bus again."

William Jones said he wasn't permitted to board a bus at Maxwell Field Air Base.

Willie Chisholm said: "I was upset when the drivers used the word n—r."

Joseph Allen said: "In November, 1955, I was trying to help a pregnant woman off the bus with her heavy packages, when the driver impatiently drove off before she could get both feet on the ground. She stumbled and fell."

R. S. Smiley, and Miss Mary Banks told of similar experiences..

THE REV. ROBERT C. GRAETZ, white pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church, an all-colored congregation, said that the Montgomery Improvement Association, of which he was a member, stressed "non-violence."

The Rev. Mr. Graetz said that he had driven in the car pool and had accepted no money for gasoline.

The Rev. Mr. King took the stand to conclude the defense case.

Under the examination of Arthur Shores, the pastor said that the Montgomery Improvement Association was organized to "improve race relations in the community."

The organization was financed by "free will offerings," he said.

NONE OF the officials received compensation, he testified. Certain regular drivers were given $24 a week for the upkeep of their cars, he said.

Stating that he had never urged anyone to stay off the buses, Mr. King said he advocated non-violence.

On the contrary, he testified, "my home has been bombed and I have received numerous threats."

He insisted that the boycott "was a spontaneous reaction of the people. The Montgomery Improvement Association was organized by the ministers to give it guidance."

Under cross examination of Thetford, the Rev. Mr. King said that he could not tell how much had been collected by the Improvement Association to carry on its work.

Before resting its case, the government called five bus drivers in rebuttal to the parade of bus driver accusations.

"The decision did not astound me," said Orzell Billingsley, one of the defense attorneys.

"I think that we made a good record for appeal," said Arthur Shores, chief defense counsel.

Convicted Minister Begins Montgomery Protest Appeal

BY ROBERT H. DENLEY

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — The Rev. M. L. King, Jr., began an appeal Friday of his conviction as a Montgomery bus boycott leader while fellow Negroes vowed to continue their mass protest.

Defense attorneys for the 27-year-old pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, who was found guilty late Thursday of violating Alabama's seldom-used anti-boycott law, said his appeal may lead ultimately to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Circuit Court Judge Eugene W. Carter, who conducted the four-day hearing without a jury at the defendant's request, fined the pastor $500 plus $184.50 in court costs for his part in the 17-week-old boycott against segregated city buses.

The fine and costs were converted into a jail sentence since he chose to appeal rather than pay the money. He was sentenced to a total of 386 days. The sentence was suspended, however, after his lawyers served notice of appeal.

King's attorney said that if the state appellate courts uphold the conviction, they will take the appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The maximum penalty under the law could have been a $1,000 fine and six months in jail but the judge explained he did not levy the more severe penalty because of King's activities toward preventing violence during the boycott that began last Dec. 5.

The trial of 89 other Negroes, including 23 other ministers, were postponed pending the outcome of King's appeal. The 90 Negroes were indicted by a grand jury last Feb. 21.

Thursday night, an estimated 3,000 Negroes roared their determination to continue the bus boycott.

At one of the regularly-scheduled twice-a-week mass prayer meetings that have been held since early December, the Rev. King urged that Negroes continue their spirit of "passive resistance" and "non-violence" in their protest against bus service.

Boycott leader on trial

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "No matter how this court case ends, we are not afraid. None of us are guilty of wrong doing.

"We feel that we have the right to protest for right."

So said the Rev. Martin L. King, Saturday, on the eve of the trial in which he and 92 leaders of the Montgomery Improvement Association face trial for violating the Alabama State boycott law.

THE BOYCOTT violation stems from a "passive resistance protest" against the Montgomery City Bus Lines now in its 16th week.

The prosecution, headed by City Solicitor William Thettford, is arguing that the association engaged in a conspiracy to hinder the operation of the bus company.

The Rev. Mr. King is president of the association.

He and three other officials of the association went on trial first.

"THE REV. MR. KING is being tried first with the Rev. LeRoy Bennett, vice president, E. D. Nixon, treasurer, and the Rev. E. N. French, secretary, as officials of the association," said Fred D. Gray, the group's attorney.

"I imagine the theory of the prosecution is that by convicting the Rev. Mr. King, first, they will demoralize us," Gray said.

"I am not aware of the legal strategy in this case," the Rev. Mr. King asserts.

"However we feel we have the right to protest and that there was no basis for the action taken against us.

"We certainly are not going to become demoralized. Everyone is in high spirits and is looking forward toward final victory."

MEANWHILE, AS the trial of the 92 demonstrators got underway, the protest entered its 16th week.

The Improvement Association which sprang up spontaneously with the start of the boycott, has blossomed into a major operation.

The organization maintains permanent offices in the Citizens Club in West Montgomery and has a paid staff of seven persons.

Mrs. Maude Ballou is chief of the office. Three of the members handle the more than 150 letters a day which are received from all parts of the nation.

Most of them contain money.

"The response has been tremendous," the Rev. Mr. King reports.

"IT IS DIFFICULT to single out any particular area that has given us moral and financial aid.

"However, we have a tremendous task. It costs us at least $3,000 a week to operate our car pool.

"It will cost us thousands more for the legal work. We are trying to answer every letter and telegram with as personalized a touch as possible," he said.

After 15 weeks of walking, does it appear that the citizens are weary of it all, the AFRO asked Dr. Richard Harris, proprietor of the Dean Drug Store.

"If the heavy rains of Wednesday and Thursday didn't stop them, nothing else will," Dr. Harris reported.

"Have no fear . . ."

"NEARLY THREE inches of rain fell during those two days. It was one of the worst downpours in recent years," he said.

"But not a person rode a bus. It was a strange sight to see the empty buses slushing along the streets while colored persons slushed along the sidewalks dripping wet from the rain coming down in sheets.

"A flood warning had been sent out. But they kept walking. It seemed as if God put us to the real test.

"Today the sun is shining. Maybe God is smiling because we passed the test," Dr. Harris continued.

WHILE GRAY huddled with Arthur Shores, Orzell Billingsley, Peter Hall and Robert Carter to map last minute legal maneuvers, Sunday, the association staged two prayer meetings.

Both were held simultaneously Sunday night at Bethel and Hutchinson St. Baptist Churches.

For three hours sympathizers prayed and sang hymns seeking "God's guidance as we enter our greatest hour of trial," according to the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, pastor of the First Street Baptist Church and the program chairman of the association.

"We are asking for strength and power of endurance," the Rev. Mr. Abernathy explained.

ON SUNDAY, the Rev. Mr. King spoke to his Dexter Ave. Baptist Church congregation on the subject, "When Peace Becomes Obnoxious."

The keynote of his sermon was found in a newspaper headline the day after Miss Autherine Lucy was driven from the campus which read:

"Peace comes to the University of Alabama."

"That is when peace becomes obnoxious," the pastor said.

The usual Saturday night hilarity is missing. The taverns that are usually filled with revelers are empty. The theatre business is off.

"PEOPLE JUST aren't acting like they used to," said a waitress at the Tiajuana, "they are all filled up with the boycott.

"We used to have to book at least 10 or 11 drunks every Saturday night, but it's only one or two persons who get out of line these days," said one of Montgomery's two colored policemen.

Even the sale of "colored" whiskey at the state store is lagging, reported a clerk.

MEANWHILE, RUMORS are flying by the dozens. There are reports that the city officials are at the throats of each other over who is responsible for the "bungling of the boycott."

Mayor W. A. Gayle was "unavailable" to the AFRO, Saturday.

The mayor, it was learned, has been subpoenaed as a defense witness in the boycott trial.

There is a report that certain civic officials promised that the indictment of the boycott leaders would be dropped, if they withdrew the suit pending in U.S. District Court which attacks the constitutionality of the bus segregation law.

"I have never been approached with such an offer," says Gray. "If such a one were made, I am afraid that I would have to laugh at the party making it," he adds.

King Says Boycott Part Of Revolt By Oppressed

Montgomery, Ala.

Wed. 2-15-56

CHICAGO, Feb. 14 (AP)—A leader of the 10-week-old bus boycott by Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., said today the boycott is part of a world wide revolt of oppressed peoples.

"It's part of something that's happening all over the world," said the Rev. M. L. King Jr., 27-year-old Negro Baptist minister.

"The oppressed peoples of the world are rising up. They are revolting against colonialism, imperialism and other systems of oppression."

He said this revolt was an apparently spontaneous movement throughout the world. He said he did not know why it is occurring at this particular time.

The Rev. Mr. King—in Chicago for a guest sermon last Sunday at a Negro church—gave his views at a news conference arranged by a family friend who said he wanted to "give a segment of the northern press a chance to get an unbiased account of what is going on in Montgomery."

King, minister of the Dexter Ave. Baptist Church in Montgomery, is president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. He said the association was formed to direct a boycott that began Dec. 5 in protest against segregated seating required on buses by state and city laws.

Advertiser

As of today, King said, only about 10 Negroes a day ride buses in Montgomery. About 65 per cent of the bus company's patrons were Negroes before Dec. 5, when Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 for refusing to move back to the Negro section of a bus. King said this incident sparked a "spontaneous" boycott by the city's Negroes.

p. 24

"This is a movement of passive resistance," King said. "We have kept violence out of the picture from our standpoint."

'INTIMIDATION'

Two weeks ago small dynamite bombs were thrown at the homes of King and another Negro leader. King said he did not believe the bombs were intended to do any personal harm but were "a symbol of intimidation."

"I'm well guarded everywhere I go in Montgomery, by my friends," King said. "I asked the sheriff for personal protection and that was denied."

The Montgomery County grand jury yesterday began an investigation to determine if Negroes boycotting the buses are part of a conspiracy violating the law.

"I don't doubt that they will indict some of us," King said.

CONFERENCE LOOMS

He said Alabama law prohibits boycotts "without just cause" but that Montgomery Negroes feel they have just cause.

King said litigation initiated by the improvement association — a federal suit challenging the constitutionality of the segregated bus seating laws, and an appeal of Mrs. Parks' fine—will take several months and that "I am not sure that the people will want to continue the boycott that long."

He said Negro leaders will confer shortly to decide whether to call off the boycott pending court decisions. The reason he gave for possibly ending the boycott was that car pools which have been organized to replace the buses have cost Negroes "a lot of money."

"But even if we decide to go back to the buses while the litigation is on, I don't believe more than 50 per cent of our people would go back until the system is changed," King said.

King later left by train for Atlanta. He said he would return to Montgomery tomorrow night.

More Buses Cut Off in Montgomery!

Sat. 3-17-56

Pittsburgh, Pa.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—"We are not trying to run the bus company out of the city," the Rev. M. L. King Jr. told The Courier Saturday on the heels of news that the local bus line is discontinuing service on twelve of the city's fourteen bus routes.

The Rev. Mr. King explained that service on the city's best-paying line has been suspended daily because nobody will ride the buses. He said, "Our aim is to see that justice and fair play prevail. Better treatment on the buses is our real aim."

The Montgomery Improvement Association, which is spearheading the local boycott of city buses, has set up an office to handle its affairs with a staff of six full-time employes.

The Rev. Mr. King said that the office is being run on a budget of $3,500 per week or $400 per day.

HE POINTED out that extensive outlays of cash have been earmarked for the forthcoming March 19 trial of over 100 Montgomery citizens and other court action on charges of having allegedly instigated the boycott.

The Rev. Mr. King explained that "litigation costs money." He said that $18,000 is being set aside for the court cases which are being handled by five of the South's leading lawyers.

Handling the cases will be Attys. Arthur D. Shores, Fred D. Gray, Peter Hall, Orsell Billingsley and Charles Langford.

The Montgomery Improvement Association has also set up a finance committee which is chaired by the Rev. R. J. Glasgow. E. B. Nixon is treasurer.

In commenting on the effectiveness of the strike the Rev. Mr. King stated that spirits of the boycotters are "still up very high." He said, "We are still determined. We are still asking the nation to continue in prayer."

Calling attention to the nationwide "Day of Prayer" scheduled for March 28, he said, "We are going to have a local day of prayer on March 18. All churches will come together in a mass prayer meeting, preparing for the trial and asking God's guidance on the eve of the trial.

"We want to come together in big numbers."

MAYOR W. A. GALES of Montgomery called attention to the "valiant struggle to maintain segregation in city buses" and called for contributions to aid the deflated company's coffers. The Mayor stated that he had received $55 from an anonymous group of fifty-three Atlantans.

The Mayor also revealed that he had received another check for $1 from Atlanta.

The Rev. Mr. King Jr. said Friday that the MIA finance committee was currently drawing up a financial report and that much-needed funds were flowing there to help the victims of the protest.

HE SAID that the $25,000 reported earlier was the amount raised in Montgomery since Dec. 5. The total, he said, did not include the money that had come from other parts of the nation during the past two weeks.

Dr. King said that Negroes had applied for a franchise for a jitney service about six or seven weeks ago, but were turned down by city officials. He said that with the expiration Thursday of the present bus franchise, the company would probably further reduce service.

Declining to say whether the MIA would again seek a franchise Dr. King said that the decision would have to come from the executive board of the MIA.

He did say, however, that they would like to start some sort of transportation system.

Regarding current expenses, Dr. King said that the car pool had been extended, an office was set up with paid employed.

Sheriff Says Gun Permit Denied King

with "complete police protection.

Despite King's statements that a meeting is planned to discuss ending the boycott, the minister denied telling two newspapermen that such a meeting was scheduled last Wednesday.

The newspapermen on two separate occasions were told by King that the Montgomery Improvement Assn.'s executive board would discuss the possibility of ending the boycott at the Wednesday meeting. King later said the newspapermen misunderstood him.

The meeting was held in protest of segregation and inhuman treatment of the colored people of the South. It was sponsored by ministers of Gary, Hammond, East Chicago and Michigan City.

King was convicted under a 1921 state law making it illegal to enter into a boycott to the detriment of a business without legal grounds or a "just cause."

Leader Of Bus Boycott Is In Demand

The Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, has lost 18 pounds since the bus boycott started last December.

He has been in demand all over the country for speaking engagements. The young minister was scheduled to speak at Concord Baptist church in Brooklyn last Sunday.

The cleric's wife, Coretta, 28, is a native of Marion, Ala. and attended Antioch college in Yellow Spring, Ohio, and the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

They were married in 1953 and have a daughter, Yolanda Denise, four months.

Alabama Preacher Appeals

First of 90 Negroes Convicted in Boycott

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(UP)— A young Negro minister, the first of 90 Negroes to be tried for violating a little-used Alabama anti-boycott law, was found guilty Thursday of boycotting segregated city buses and fined $500.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter returned a verdict of guilty against the Rev. M. L King, prefacing the announcement with the remark that he thought King "started a fire he couldn't stop."

Carter continued the cases against 89 other Negroes.

Defense attorneys immediately appealed the verdict to the state Circuit Court of Appeals.

King, a 27-year-old Baptist preacher, said he "somewhat expected" the decision but he had also been optimistic enough to "hope for the best."

He said a "realist" always has to look for the worst but he predicted that the verdict will be "definitely reversed" in higher court.

When asked what effect he thought the verdict might have on this city's large Negro population, he said "It will serve to make our people more determined."

the Rev. Martin Luther King jr. before the court to begin what could become a prolonged series of trails. Each of the ninety defendants, exercizing his right, asked for a separate hearing.

Mr. King, twenty-two, whose home was bombed in the early weeks of the mass protest by Negroes against segregated city bus facilities, was singled out by Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford as one of the boycott leaders.

But Mr. Thetford ran into difficulty at the outset of the trial in trying to link the pastor of the Dexter Ave. Baptist Church to a 'conspiracy" to hinder operations of Montgomery City Lines buses.

Judge Carter allowed the first witness, bus company manager J. H. Bagley, to identify Mr. King as one of several Negroes he conferred with at the start of the boycott last December, but he sustained defense objections to some other questions.

He refused to permit Mr. Thetford to introduce two documents as state's exhibits although he permitted Mr. Bagley to identify them as papers he had received shortly before and immediately after the bus protest began Dec. 5.

Eight Negro attorneys represented the defendants, including Robert Carter of the legal staff of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in New York.

The number of defendants was reduced to ninety today when the solicitor dismissed three indictments because he said further investigation has thrown "considerable doubt on their guilt."

The bus boycott began after a Negro seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was arrested and fined $14 for disobeying a driver's order to move to the rear of a bus where Negroes were to ride. City and state laws require segregation in all public transportation.

Rev. King Trial Tops Mark For Coverage, Court Records

The boycott trial of Rev. M. L. King, in addition to attracting the widest news coverage for any single trial in Montgomery County history, produced an awesome collection of court records.

Testimony from 77 state and defense witnesses coupled with the vast array of documentary evidence will consume at least 500 transcript pages, according to Hallowell Lewis, court reporter. Lewis is preparing a transcript in testimony on appeal which he said will "take up at least that many pages." The bulky court records will include 51 state prosecution exhibits in addition to the testimony.

Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter, who served as presiding judge in the four-day court bout, said the King trial drew "more press, radio and televsion coverage" than any other single trial since he has been serving as criminal judge of the 15th Judicial Circuit.

Judge Carter left town yesterday for a welcomed rest after the court ordeal. His whereabouts were not disclosed, although it was believed he was exercising his favorite hobby—fishing.

Court costs of the Rev. M. L. King trial was not available yesterday. The full total is expected to be revealed next week.

'We Won't Retreat One Inch'

Afro-American

By CHARLES H. LOEB

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (NNPA) —A Montgomery newsman dropped a bombshell on the state's easy - going conspiracy case against the Rev. Martin L. King, alleged leader of the three-month-old bus boycott.

He was Joe Azbell, city editor of the Montgomery Advertiser, a state's witness who had covered so many of the meetings of the Montgomery Improvement Association that the state had depended strongly on his testimony as "a qualified expert" to find the Rev. Mr. King as the "chief conspirator" in what it alleges is an effort to ruin the business of the Montgomery City Lines.

* * * P. 6

UNDER EXAMINATION the newsman related how he had attended the various "pep meetings" of the organization often finding himself the only white person present.

The prosecution won from him an admission that he had seen the Rev. Mr. King at many meetings and had heard him address the audiences on several occasions.

Then the vital question:

Q—What did he tell the people? Sat. 3-31-56

"HE TOLD THEM let your conscience be your guide on whether or not you will ride the buses."

He was asked if he had attended a meeting held at Holt St. Baptist Church on December 5.

A—Yes.

Q—Who was the chairman?

A—That was hard to tell.

Q—What do you mean? Who was on the rostrum?

Baltimore, Md.

A—IT APPEARED to be spontaneous. Almost all the colored ministers in town seemed to be there.

Q—What seemed to be the purpose of the meeting?

A—Mind you, I'm not saying this, just quoting the speakers. They said that colored people desired all of the rights guaranteed in a democracy. They said that they would not retreat one inch from obtaining these rights.

Q—Did they talk about the bus protest or boycott?

A—Someone introduced Mrs. Rosa Parks as an outstanding citizen who had been arrested on the buses, but it seemed that everybody at the meeting had some kind of grievance to air against the bus company.

Q—DID THE REV. MR. KING speak?

A—Yes, I wrote a story and quoted him in my newspaper. He said that no colored person in Montgomery should be intimidated and that no intimidation should be made against any other person and added, let each person's conscience be his guide on whether or not to ride the buses.

By this time the courtroom began to stir with interest. The chagrin of the solicitor, William Thetford, was evident.

When the trial opened, Mr. Azbell, although a state witness had been permitted to cover the trial instead of being isolated outside the courtroom with other witnesses. Another Montgomery newsman, whose stories had been thought bitterly slanted against the defendants, was denied this courtesy.

With a gesture of resignation and unconcealed agitation the examination was abruptly ended.

DEFENSE COUNSEL Arthur Shores then, after a consultation with the defendant, had Mr. Azbell recall how the Rev. Mr. King had quieted an angry group of people who had gathered around his home shortly after it was hit by a bomb.

"I was scared," said the newsman, "really scared, but the Rev. Mr. King came out on his porch and told the people to quiet down and to use no violence against anybody. He probably saved me from great danger."

'Tired of being treated like dogs'

(AFRO Staff Writer)

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "We got tired of being treated like dogs by the bus drivers so we decided to walk."

"Who do you mean by 'we'," asked Judge Eugene Carter.

"All 50,000 colored people of Montgomery," the witness replied.

The spectators in the jammed courtroom applauded.

"Cut out that noise," said the judge. "we don't have anything of that in here. I have a big jail back there and I will put all of you in it.

"YOU MAY FEEL like that, but don't give vent to your feelings."

The incident occurred during the Wednesday morning session of the trial of the Rev. M. L. King, reputed head of the Montgomery Improvement Association.

The trial was in its third day.

The witness, Mrs. Gladys Moore—one of 20, most of whom were domestic workers—testified Wednesday about the abuses that they had suffered at the hands of drivers of the Montgomery City bus lines.

BEFORE MRS. MOORE took the stand, an appeal for a judgment of acquittal had been denied.

Fred Gray, defense attorney, contended that the state had failed to show that the Rev. Mr. King took part in a conspiracy to violate the state's boycott laws.

He also contended that the state had failed to prove that if a boycott existed it was "without a just cause."

Mrs. Moore, whose testimony had the courtroom buzzing, said she had been riding the buses since 1942.

Under the examination of Orzell Billingsley Mrs. Moore said she had ridden the buses up until Dec. 5.

Q.—ARE YOU familiar with the seating arrangement on the Montgomery city buses?

Q.—Well, tell the court.

A.—Colored people can't sit in the 10 front seats reserved for white people.

Q.—What about other seats?

A.—If you sit in any seats in front of the back door up to the seats reserved for white folks, you will get asked up if a white person gets on the bus.

Q.—Have you ever been on a bus when something unpleasant happened to you?

A.—YES, hundreds of times.

Q.—Tell me, what happened?

A.—I have handed my dime in the front door to the bus driver and while walking toward the back of the bus he has pulled off without me.

Q.—You mean, that you have paid him your dime and he wouldn't let you on through the front door, so you had to walk to the back door and he pulled off leaving you standing?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—What else have you seen happen on the buses?

A.—The bus drivers have been just plain nasty!!

Q.—What do you mean by nasty?

A.—They would call colored people "Apes", "N----rs," "Boy, and girl."

"FOR MY INFORMATION," asked Judge Carter, "Why did you stop riding buses on Dec 5?"

"Because Mrs. (Rosa) Parks had been mistreated," she replied.

"Where did you meet to decide upon starting the boycott?" persisted the judge.

"We didn't meet anywhere," she replied.

"There was no meeting or anything?" Judge Carter pressed further.

"No, it was just something inside of us. And we decided not to ride the buses again," she said.

"Who do you mean by 'we' the judge pressed again.

"The 50,000 colored people of Montgomery," she said. The spectators applauded.

And the judge cautioned them against further demonstrations.

THE PATTERN for the defense which, apparently is attempting to show that colored citizens had a right to protest against the practices of the bus lines, was set by the testimony of Mrs. Thelma Glass, secretary of the Women's Political Council.

In the spring of 1947, she said, a delegation from the council went to the officials of the bus company to protest the manner in which the drivers were treating colored passengers.

"We protested the discourteous manner in which colored persons were being treated," she said.

We also asked the company to discontinue the practice of having colored passenger hand their money through the front door and walk to the back door to enter the bus," said Mrs. Glass.

Similar complaints were made to the bus company officials and city commissioners in November 1953 and March 1955, she testified.

MRS. SADIE BROOKS, an official of the Women's Federation of Montgomery, testified that her organization had several conferences with the city commissioners and the bus company officials about the bus situation.

She also related an incident in 1954 when a bus driver "whipped out a pistol and chased a colored man off a bus."

Mrs. George Gilmore told of an incident during October 1955 when she attempted to board a Court St. bus at Montgomery and S. Jackson Sts.

"I tried to enter the front door and the driver said—"N..r," give me that money. He then told me to get off and enter through the back door.

"While I walked to the back door, he drove off and left me.

Wednesday afternoon 20 bus riders told of their grievances against bus drivers. They included:

* * *

MRS. VEOLO BELL—"I have been on the buses many time to find colored people standing with 10 empty seats in the front of the bus for whites."

Mrs. Martha Kate Walker—"In November 1955, my blind husband was injured by a Maxwell Field bus because the driver drove off before my husband could get off."

"I complained to the bus officials, but I have heard nothing until this day."

Judge Carter excluded from the record the testimony of Mrs. Estelle Brooks, who testified that on Aug. 7, 1950, "My husband was killed following a dispute with a bus driver."

The judge ruled that because she was not present when her husband was shot, the testimony had to be stricken from the record.

MRS. HENRIETTA BRINSON—"On the Cloverdale bus was the meanest man I ever saw. He would call colored people 'Black apes' and other bad names."

MRS FRANCES RUTLEDGE — "Yes, I have had plenty of trouble with them. Things such as making me get out of my seat for a white man."

MRS. LULA MAE HARPER—'In September 1955 I was on a bus when a driver said: 'I hate all N....."

* * *

MRS. LOEVA PERKINS — "I was seated in a seat just in front of the door when the driver asked me to give up my seat.

"I got up and got off the bus."

MRS. IRENE DORSEY — "I was putting a nickel and five pennies in the box when a penny dropped.

"The driver said "N---r pick up that penny."

Mrs. Dorothy Lois Jackson—'I was standing at Hall and Payne. The driver let the white people get on, but said he wouldn't let colored people get on at that stop."

Mrs. Janie Pace—"Since 1952 I rode the buses every day, twice a day. I don't believe that a day passed without an unpleasant experience."

Mrs. Anita Birney—"It was about two years ago when a driver insulted me and I haven't rode a bus since."

MRS. BARBARA MURPHY—"In January 1955. I gave a driver a dollar for change and he swore I didn't give it to him."

Mrs. Geneva W. Johnson—"On July 4, 1948, I was humiliated."

Mrs. Odessa Williams—"They treated us like we were dogs."

Mrs. Odella Garner — "I stopped riding in August 1952. I just couldn't take that kind of treatment anymore."

Mrs. Jessie Logan—"I have been riding the buses 40 years. I have been trouble caused by the bus drivers 40 years."

Mrs. Parks—"He called us black apes."

Mrs. Inez Ricks—"You can put your packages on the first 10 seats but you can't sit down."

* * *

MRS. MARY HARRIS—"There had been so much controversy over the buses that since 1954 I haven't ridden them anymore."

During the Wednesday morning session, Mayor W. A. Gayle told of meeting with colored citizens to settle the bus protest.

Under cross-examination by Arthur Shores, defense counsel, the mayor told of meetings in January 1954, June 1954 and March 1955 in which colored citizens complained of the bus situation.

Earlier, he had testified that two meetings had been held since Dec. 5 in attempts to settle the bus dispute.

He said that the colored citizens wanted more courtesy, a first-come-first-served seating arrangement and colored bus drivers.

HE RECALLED that a group of white and colored citizens met at City Hall on Dec. 19 and at the Chamber of Commerce on Dec. 21 but nothing had been accomplished.

"Are you a member of the White Citizen's Council? Shores asked Gayle.

"Yes."

"When did you join."

"During the last part of January of this year."

"Are the other City Commissioners members of the Citizens Council?

"I believe that they are."

"Did you join the Citizens Council in January in an effort to settle the bus protest?"

"No, I wouldn't say that." ....

On Tuesday, a Mrs. Beatrice Smith testified that she had been beaten and cut by an unknown man because she rode the bus.

Mayor Gayle was asked by Shores:

"Does Mrs. Beatrice Smith work for you."

"She told you twice yesterday that she didn't."

* * *

AT THIS POINT an objection was raised because he was supposed to have not known what a previous witness testified.

"Well, does she work for anyone in your family," Shores persisted.

"She works for my mother-in-law," the mayor replied.

The mayor was the concluding witness for the prosecution.

Mr. Gray, in arguing for a motion to dismiss the case, said that the state had not proved that the Rev. Mr. King or the Montgomery Improvement Association had "engaged in illegal activity."

He pointed out that of the thousands of colored persons in Montgomery, the state could produce only two colored witnesses who said that they were intimidated for riding the buses.

A day before trial deadline in Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Some 90 Montgomery leaders went on trial to show "just and legal excuse" for hindering the operation of a lawful and legal business with reference to the bus boycott.

On the day before, an air of peace and tranquility permeated the colored Montgomery community as preparations were made for the legal battles in Circuit Court.

The bus boycott subject found its way into sermons in every colored church in the city as the ministers emphasized the cause for which their leaders faced prosecution.

SOME 100 "visitors" — among them reporters from as far away as India and France—were in attendance as a capacity crowd heard the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. preach on "When Peace Becomes Obnoxious."

Prior to the sermon the congregation had received precise instructions regarding the impending trial.

Member were asked to be courteous to visitors — many who came to give support and encouragement; to be hospitable to both white and colored friends.

AS A finale announcement, the Rev. Mr King acknowledged his connection with the "untouchable" NAACP and stated that the Board of Trustees had voted to purchase a life ($500) membership in the association.

Even in the Sunday schools children were told, among other things, that they were expectd to be especially well behaved during the coming week.

As nightfall cast its dark shadows on Montgomery. there was a inate feeling that the Montgomery citizens were ready—both legally and spiritually—for the Monday morning battle in Circuit Court.

'Conspiracy' Established, Says Boycott Trial Judge

Washington, D.C.

Wed. 3-21-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 20 (AP)—A Negro leader today told how a smooth-running motor pool provides transportation for bus-boycotting Negroes protesting racial segregation.

Other witnesses testified that the newly organized Montgomery Improvement Association, which came into being the day the boycott started last Dec. 5, arranged for the car pool and has paid for gasoline and other expenses of the drivers.

The testimony highlighted the second day of the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., first of 90 Negroes brought to trial on boycotting charges.

King is president of the Improvement Association, and the State is endeavoring to link him to a "conspiracy" to hinder the operation of the racially segregated Montgomery City Lines, Inc.

The indictments against King and 89 other defendants charge violation of a State law that prohibits a conspiracy to impede the operations of a lawful business.

At one point today, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter said he thought the State had already established "a prima facie case of conspiracy." But he did not say the prosecution had succeeded in linking King to it.

[Four bus drivers testified they were shot at about the time the Negroes began boycotting the city transit system, the United Press reported. A fifth said a brick was thrown through the rear window of his bus.

[Testimony of the five was admitted over the objections of defense attorneys. The first driver to testify, George Henderson, said he was fired on six times last Dec. 6.]

Rufus Lewis, chairman of the Improvement Association's transportation committee, told the court how the committee inaugurated the car pool soon after the Negroes stopped riding city buses.

Lewis said the committee arranged to pay volunteer drivers $4 a day for the use of their cars and bought gasoline for some. He said approximately 200 Negro motorists volunteered to get other Negroes to and from work.

He said the committee worked out a detailed list of "dispatch" stations to get Negroes to work in the morning and "pickup" stations to get them home at the close of the day.

Lewis said mimeographed lists of the stations have been distributed in Negro communities and read at the mass meetings held twice weekly

Describes Pool

Rufus Lewis, chairman of the association's transportation committee, told the court how the committee inaugurated the car pool soon after the Negroes stopped riding city buses in protest against segregated seating facilities.

Lewis said the committee arranged to pay volunteer drivers $4 a day for the use of their cars and bought gasoline for some. He said approximately 200 Negro motorists volunteered for the assignments of getting other Negroes to and from work.

Although he would not concede that the purpose of the pool was to "keep Negroes from" patronizing the bus company, the witness did say its function is to provide transportation for those "who want rides in preference to riding the buses."

He said the committee worked out a detailed list of "dispatch" stations to get Negroes to work in the morning and "pickup" stations to get them home at night. One such list was introduced by the state as evidence.

Another witness, the Rev. U. J. Fields, drew a stern warning from Judge Carter after he insisted he could not remember whether the bus protest had been discussed at any of the Negro rallies which he said he attended.

"You know whether they were or not," the judge admonished. "Now tell the truth."

Fields, prompted by the prosecution, did recall telling the grand jury last month that the Improvement Assn. at its organization meeting on Dec. 5 recommended continuing the boycott indefinitely "until conditions improve."

Negro Freed After Charge In Car Pool

A Negro service station operator who admitted selling gasoline for use in a car pool during the bus boycott here was excused of a contempt charge yesterday by Circuit Judge Eugene B. Carter as a tired grand jury made a partial report, then recessed until Monday.

Montgomery, Ala.

The Negro, Clarence H. Adams, was summoned before the grand jury to testify yesterday but said he couldn't remember the names of persons conducting the car pool to whom he had sold gasoline. The station is located at 1031 W. Jeff Davis Ave.

GETS WARNING

Judge Carter, informing the witness he could be sent to jail for contempt or to prison for perjury for lying under oath, dropped the charge against Adams when the witness' memory suddenly "became refreshed."

Adams said that while he was before the jury testifying his "mind became a blank" and he couldn't remember the names of the customers. Judge Carter instructed the Negro to return to the grand jury Monday with records showing the names of persons in question. Adams said he would present the names.

Meanwhile, another Negro was sentenced to county jail for five days for refusing to testify before the grand jury in another case.

The grand jury, in its busiest session in the county's history, returned 114 true bills and six no bills yesterday, before recessing until 2 p.m. Monday. The past week the panel examined 232 witnesses, a record high number for Montgomery County.

Al Wells, foreman, read the jury report before Judge Carter, Circuit Solicitor W. F. Thetford, and Asst. Circuit Solicitor Robert Stewart.

The report states that the grand jury "cannot complete its duties and make a final report until sometime next week."

Seeks Boycott Link

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who is trying King without a jury, said he thought the state had already established "a prima facie case of conspiracy." But he did not say the prosecution had succeeded in linking King to it.

How Car Pool Works

Refus Lewis, chairman of the Improvement association's transportation committee, told the court how the committee inaugurated the car pool soon after the Negroes stopped riding city buses in protest against a law segregating seating facilities. A suit to have the bus segregation law held unconstitutional was filed in federal court after the boycott began.

Lewis said the committee arranged to pay volunteer drivers $4 a day for use of their cars and bought gasoline for some. He said 200 Negro motorists volunteered to get other Negroes to and from work.

Lewis said mimeographed lists of the stations have been distributed in Negro communities and read at the mass meeting held twice weekly in Negro churches since the boycott started.

Begun By Ministers

The Rev. U. J. Fields, secretary of the Improvement association, testified that the organization grew out of a meeting of the International Ministerial association, a group of Negro clergymen.

The Improvement association's financial secretary, Mrs. Erna Dungee, returned to the stand when the trial opened its second day today and identified further checks paid to service station and car pool drivers.

At one point in the proceedings today, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who will decide King's guilt or innocence in the absence of a jury, said he thought the state already had established "a prima facie case of conspiracy." But he didn't say the prosecution had succeeded in linking King to it.

Negro defense attorneys complained about the manner in which some of the prosecution's evidence was obtained, but the judge overruled their protest. The objection came in cross examination of one of two city detectives, K. W. Jones, who made an investigation for the solicitor's office.

After Jones had testified about questioning drivers in the car pool, Atty. Arthur Shores of Birmingham questioned his right as a city detective to make an investigation for the solicitor's office.

Shores said he might want to question the detective further on that point.

The defense also objected to testimony from a bus driver, George Henderson, who told of six gunshots fired at his bus the night of Dec. 6, one day after the boycott began. Two of the bullets struck the bus, but no one was injured.

Henderson said he couldn't tell whether a Negro or white man fired the shots, but that he could see a gunflash from a nearby house in a Negro section of Montgomery.

Defense attorneys sought to exclude Henderson's testimony on the grounds that it was not connected with the defendant King but Judge Carter overruled the motion, saying it was part of the overall picture.

Lewis said the committee arranged to pay volunteer drivers $5 a day for the use of their cars and bought gasoline for some. He said approximately 200 Negro motorists volunteered for the assignments of getting other Negroes to and from work.

Fields, prompted by the prosecution, did recall telling the Grand Jury last month that the improvement association at its organization meeting on Dec. 5 recommended continuing the boycott indefinitely "until conditions improve."

Before he took the stand, the Baptist minister refused to swear to the customary witness oath, protesting, "I don't swear. It's against my religious convictions." But he promised to tell the truth and the judge accepted that.

Fields, who is secretary of the improvement association, testified that the organization grew out of a meeting of the Interdenomination Ministerial Assn., a group of Negro clergymen in Montgomery.

The association's financial secretary, Mrs. Erna Dungee, wife of a Negro doctor, returned to the stand when the trial opened its second day this morning. She identified further checks paid to service stations and car pool drivers.

Mrs. Dungee testified, in reponse to questions, that she saw King at several of the mass meetings since the boycott began and that he spoke at some. But she said she couldn't remember the nature of the discussions except that they dealt with the "protest."

She and Lewis both said the improvement association has devoted nearly all its efforts to supporting the bus boycott, although, they added, it has done some charitable work, such as helping collect food and clothes for needy Negroes.

Car Pool Drivers To Be Honored In Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (SNS) — Car pool drivers in the currently court-banned free transportation system, are scheduled to be honored at the banquet session tonight of the week-long Institute on Non-Violence and Social Change sponsored by the Montgomery Improvement Association.

T. M. Alexander, Atlanta business man and native of Montgomery, is scheduled to be guest speaker at the "Driver's Banquet" slated to be held on the Roof Garden of Ben Moore Hotel.

The Rev. Ralph David Abernathy, MIA president and director of the institute, said that he expected approximately 200 share-the-ride drivers to attend this bread-breaking for freedom.

The week-long institute is a combination celebration of the anniversary of the bus seating segregation protest which began Dec. 5, 1955 and preparation for meeting the new situations in the expected change-over.

A giant mass meeting Sunday afternoon at First Baptist Church where the Rev. J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention will be the headline speaker, will close out the institute. Provisions are being made for an over-flow audience to hear the program through a loudspeaker system installed in the park in front of the church, weather permitting.

At a strategy session of the Alabama White Citizens Councils, held here Tuesday night, Dec. 4, the night before the anniversary of the protest State Senator Sam M. Englehardt, Jr., secretary of the organization, reacted derisively to the speech the night before by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association.

Dr. King said in his prepare[illegible] text which he skipped over to sav[illegible] time at the MIA meeting, in part:

"If we are to be fair and honest we must also commend the white community at this point. If there had not been some discipline and moral sensitivity in the white community, we would have had much more violence in Montgomery. All of this renews my faith in the vast possibilities of this community.

Daily World P. 3

"I am aware of the fact that the vast majority of white persons of Montgomery and the State of Alabama sincerely believe that segregation is both morally and sociologically justifiable. But nobody has been able to convince me that the vast majority of white people in this community, or in the whole state of Alabama, are willing to use violence to maintain segregation.

Montgomery Pastor

Walking Is Honorable Protest Leader Says

Daily World P. 1 Tues. 5-1-56 Atlanta, Ga.

BY WILLIAM GORDON

Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

"Negroes in Montgomery are not afraid anymore," said one of the town's local leaders yesterday at a mass meeting of the Atlanta Voters League.

The Rev. Solomon Seay, pastor of the AME Zion Church of Montgomery, told a group at Wheat St. Baptist Church that "we have sold the Negro people in Montgomery that walking is honorable and that you must pay the price for freedom."

FIRE FOR FREEDOM

The distinguished minister and former college president added: "Too many people have remained comfortable while others are suffering."

He called the bus protest in Montgomery a part of world movement. He said a "fire for freedom has been started all over the world, some of the effects of which have just reached Montgomery.

"We are proud," he said, "to help fan the flames of this fire which is burning away a lot of the scars, the bigotry, the injustices all over the world."

He said people have become restless, as a result of this fire. "They are tired of the old ways," he added.

BRAIN-WASHING

Rev. Seay said black people have been brain-washed too long. He also said the concept that black people have at one time been easy to be brain-washed does not mean that they will still stand for this "act of injustice."

The big job, today, he pointed out, is to arouse people, even those who may be sleeping through the fire, he added.

Rev. Seay challenger Negroes on registration and voting. He was critical of those who "vote merely because my street is paved, or some special favor has been given me by public officials.

The Rev. Seay cited the work of Rev. M. L. King, Jr., Any young persons who has the energy and wisdom of Rev. King commands all of his respect and that he is willing to answer his call any time of day or night. He called Rev. King one out of every 100,000 persons.

The Rev. Seay also warned against the act of contentment. He said complacency and contentment could be dangerous, especially when it comes to Negroes.

TOO COMPLEX

"We don't have time to relax during times like these," Rev. Seay said. "We don't have time to take vacations, the issues and problems are too complex."

He also warned against the leadership outside of Montgomery believing that the job has been won there. He said, the work by citizens and sympathizers has just begun, and that Negroes in the city are aware of what is to be done there

His warning to "negative forces" in Montgomery was that they are holding on to a culture breaking apart in a thousand pieces.

Rev. Seay was one of the ministers arrested along with 95 others in the Montgomery bus protest. His trip to Atlanta was part of a speaking agenda which will take him into many parts of the country.

Montgomery Negroes Vote To Keep Boycott

Constitution Fri. 4-27-56 Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 26 (AP)—More than 4,000 Montgomery Negroes voted at a mass meeting tonight to continue their five-month-old boycott of city buses despite the bus company's order to end segregation.

Without a dissenting vote, they shouted approval of a resolution vowing to refrain from riding buses as long as city and state officials persist in their determination to enforce segregation laws.

The resolution was presented by the Rev. M. L. King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. which was organized to promote the boycott.

Although Montgomery City Lines has announced an end to segregation as far as its policy goes, the resolution said city and state officials "have indicated both orally and in writing that they intend to, and will use, all means available, including the arrest of bus drivers and passengers," to enforce segregation laws.

Consequently, the resolution continued, "the conditions heretofore existing remain the same because of the position taken by our public officials."

The Negroes vowed to "carry on our mass protest until such time as the matters stated above are clarified."

The Rev. B. D. Lambert offered the motion to adopt the resolution.

explaining "We have walked for almost 20 weeks and it's only a few days more until May 11."

That is the day set for hearing on a pending suit in federal court challenging Montgomery city and Alabama state segregation laws.

The Montgomery Affair Bears Fruit

Wash. Fri. 4-27-56

Carrying on into its fifth month, the struggle of the Montgomery, Alabama citizens must have borne fruit in that representatives of the Montgomery Transit System cited the South Carolina decision handed down Monday by the Supreme Court in ordering an end to segregation on its Montgomery buses. We commend this action because there is no point in postponing in that case the inevitable.

It is significant in that even ahead of South Carolina, where the suit started, the Montgomery system jumped to the conclusion that it had no other option.

B'ham, Ala. P.8

The Alabama case is internationally known now and while some of the contenders were indicted and the leader, the Rev. M. L. King, Jr., was tried and convicted of violating an Alabama boycott law, seldom if ever used, designed to outlaw the method employed by the contenders, the others were not tried, pending the appeal made in the King case.

All through the struggle Rev. King, a leader for law and order; the resort was of the pattern of passive resistance and altogether non-violent. This attracted the attention of the trial judge who took into consideration Rev. King's attitude in handling the record affair which wrote in letters of bold relief the epic of an undaunted courage and the cool and collected emphasis in which things hoped for may be realized.

However in spite of the inconvenience and discomfort attendant in the long procedure, it has not been without its recompense, commending it to a cherished place in the history of the struggle of a people.

Dr. King gives us a new insight on a new leadership. He exemplified the coolness and the patience with which the trying tension of the times find its answer and its pattern.

U.S. Supreme Court May Act On Two Bus Petitions Monday

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 12-16-56

Montgomery should know tomorrow whether or not its buses will be integrated in the immediate future.

Tomorrow the U.S. Supreme Court holds its opinion day session. Unless it acts then, the matter must wait until at least Jan. 14 when the court returns from its Christmas-New Year recess.

Before the court are two petitions seeking a rehearing on its decision holding city and state bus segregation laws unconstitutinal.

Formal issuance of the opinion however, has been deferred until the court decides if it will grant a rehearing. Requests for the reconsideration were filed by the city and the state Public Service Commission.

Meanwhile, assuming the decision will be made in their favor, Negroes have been attending "courtesy and non-violence" classes in preparation of riding the buses again.

A Negro boycott leader, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, paid the classes were "being held in hopes of stopping any violence that may occur."

'Turn other cheek' policy—

Boycotters trained how to meet desegregation

B'ham, Ala.

Dec. 12-15-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 15 —(AP)—Montgomery Negroes propose a "turn the other cheek" policy to avoid violence when opportunity comes for them to ride on desegrated buses.

"Our people must return to the buses peacefully and not boastfully," said the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a leader in the year-old bus boycott now nearing its end.

Negroes have voted to return to the buses the day the U. S. Supreme Court's recent decision outlawing segregated seating on buses goes into effect.

Abernathy directed an institute on non-violence and social change here last week as part of an educational program to prepare Negroes for non-segregated public transportation.

"THE NEGRO minister said as many as 1000 Negroes are attending weekly classes to "prepare our people for the return to the buses and for integration in general." He didn't amplify on the latter.

An effort will be made, he noted, to have a Negro clergyman or civic leader aboard "every bus day and night" during the early stages of the changed seating arrangement.

The integration classes are being held in Negro churches under sponsorship of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., which has coordinated the mass Negro boycott in protest of bus segregation.

In additional to the weekly instruction, Negro civic clubs also are being urged to spread the doctrine of nonviolence at their meetings.

"We are trying to get the idea of courtesy," the MIA vice president said.

"We feel our people must not misconstrue the (Supreme Court) decision as a victory decision. We feel it is a step toward democracy. Our people must return to the buses peacefully and not boastfully."

Abernathy said Negroes need to realize that "the (white) people who have always sat where they please on the buses are losing something. We must be sympathetic," he added.

Sat. 3-24-56

NEW YORK — Support for the 26 ministers and others who went on trial Monday for their part in the resistance campaign Montgomery, Ala., was voiced the same day by more than 400 ministers of all races and creeds.

The ministers approved a statement sent out by the Fellowship of Reconciliation to some 1,600 ministers, 400 of which had been returned by Friday and others were coming in at the rate of 100 a day.

TEXT of the statement follows:

As Christian ministers we rejoice in the leadership our brother pastors in Montgomery are giving in the nonviolent campaign for racial brotherhood. It is fitting that such leadership should come from those whose Master was a living demonstration of unarmed love and brotherhood.

At the same time we are saddened that any Christians should segregate themselves from their fellow Christians and fellow citizens. The most grievous aspect of the situation with which we are confronted is the inadequate concern and witness of the churches.

Judgement must begin at the house of God. A culture that breeds or tolerates such a widespread malady as is being manifested in many southern communities is in need of thorough change.

THE CHANGE is impossible unless and aroused church repents of its own sinful practice of segregation even at the Lord's table, and proclaims and itself practices the Biblical truth that all men are made in the image of God and are of eternal worth in his eyes, and that in Christ all men are one.

To those in the Church and outside who at great risk and cost are witnessing to these truths in prejudice-ridden and disturbed communities, we send gretings, and for them we offer prayers.

For those white and Colored people working together in the South in recent decades, who overcame the hooded Klan and wrought at least temporary improvements of great significance in many fields, we record our gratitude.

WE SAY THESE THINGS not as persons who are themselves righteous or with any notion that the disease of "white supremacy" and its manifestations in personal and social life are confined to parts of the South. We pray for greater sensitivity and a relaization of our own shortcomings.

We are well aware that our first responsibility is for conditions in our own several communities in all parts of the land and that it is only in the degree that we meet that responsibility that we shall be absolved of the charge of hyprocrisy in speaking about conditions and people in other parts of our land.

We are also citizens of a nation and therefore have a responsibility for the welfare of other Americans.

WE ARE NOT competent to deliver a professional judgment as to the ways in which the Federal Department of Justice or other agencies may, under the law, intervene in the situation which has developed in certain southern communities.

But it is now incumbent upon the heads of these agencies to give top priority to study of all the available means to give substance to the constitutional guarantees which every American has as a matter of right and to put such means promptly into effect.

We believe that on President Eisenhower rests a special responsibility in this situation and that this responsibility confronts him with a very special opportunity. Under the constitution he is charged with reponsibility for "the general welfare" and the conduct of the foreign relations of the nation.

HERE IS A situation which profoundly affects the health of our society and which is probably the most crucial factor in America's relations with nations to which the great majority of al the earth's people beling.

Recent events have shown that the President's influence and prestige are greater by far than that of any other person in this country and perhaps anywhere in the world.

Let him now as the recognized spokesman of the "free world" speak on this issue in our own homeland. Let him speak out against segregation in every form.

Let him call upon every citizen in every state, and especially the political leaders and officials in Southern states, to stop all efforts to nullify the Supreme Court decision.

LET HIM POINT OUT that discrimination on grounds of race and color and the subversion of justice and judicial process in the interest of maintaining discrimination and segregation is a sword pointed straight at the heart of the free America which the people of the South as well as other sections in their inmost hearts wish to preserve.

Let him, as he has done on other occasions, appeal to the heritage of the Hebrew prophets and Christ and on that basis speak to "that of God" in the hearts of white men, even the most prejudiced, in order that they may recognize "that of God" in their fellowmen, whatever be the color of their skins.

Let him consider going personally to Alabama and Mississippi on this mission of peace and good will. This is a time and an occasion for the highest, the most unusual, the most Christian kind of statesmanship.

The exercise of such statesmanship now might well have a great cleansing and healing effect on our own national life and would enhance immensely the stature of the United States in the eyes of the world.

Local action along similar lines was taken in the following cities:

HARTFORD (Conn.) — Adherents of three great faiths — Catholic, Protestants and Jews will join in prayer March 28 for "deliverance" of the leaders and others arrested for boycotting buses in Montgomery, Ala.

Church bells will ring for 5 minutes at noon March 28. Offerings of the preceding Sunday will be forwarded to the Montgomery Improvement Association for distribution to those hit by the "economic squeeze."

Three religious services will be conducted on National Prayer Day at Metropolitan AME Zion Church and at St. Benedicts Church. Services at Zion Church begin at 8 p.m. and those at Benedict Church at 7 p.m.

BOSTON — The Massachusetts House of Representatives will cease all work fro m11 to noon March 28 as an "expression of syupathy with the colored citizens of Alabama."

The action honors these citizens, the order says, "who at the risk of life, liberty and property seek through nonviolent means to bring a greater measure of equality to all Americans. . . ."

It orders that March 28 "be noted on the journal of this house as Brotherhood Day so that all our citizens will be reminded that in this historic commonwealth in the words of our Constitution:

"All men are born free and equal" and further that all men have the right "of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness."

LOS ANGELES — The NAACP has ualled a mass meeting to be held in Olympic Auditorium March 27 in support of National Day of Prayer called for by Rep. A. Clayton Powell March 28.

The Florence Fair Employment Practices Committee of that city has urged all business houses to close their doors, churches to hold prayer vigils and workers of all races and creeds to stop work between 2 and 3 p.m. on that day.

DETROIT — The Baptist Ministers Conference of Wayne County sent the following message of encouragement, in part, to the Montgomery Improvement Association:

"Ears throughout our vast re public and in many recesses and quarters of the world without our bounds have been filled with the challenging accounts of the experiences of citizens of color of your city.

"We make known our unequivocal endorsement of your stand for fair play and will lend whatever support we can to the fulfillment of your ideals, ambitions and efforts.

"We are aware of the works of such celebrated pioneers of Alabama as W. H. McAlpine, J. A. Foster, Andrew J. Stokes, C. O. Booth, W. R. Pettiford, J. Wilhite and, more recently, Dr. D. V. Jemison."

Bus-Integration Advice Being Given Negroes

Louisville, Ky.

Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 14 (AP)—Negroes awaiting the end of bus segregation in Montgomery are being schooled by their leaders to remain peaceful, "even if others strike first."

38b Ala.

And to guide them, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy disclosed in an interview today, an effort will be made to have a Negro clergyman or civic leader aboard "every bus day and night" during the early stages of integration.

The United States Supreme Court has ruled City and State bus-segregation laws unconstitutional. The formal order has not been issued pending action on a request by City and State authorities for a rehearing.

If the court acts on the rehearing petition Monday, the integration notice may reach Montgomery later next week.

Meanwhile, Mr. Abernathy said as many as 1,000 Negroes are attending weekly classes designed to "prepare our people for the return to the buses and for integration in general." He did not elaborate on the latter.

Instruction Led by Boycott-Directing Group

The weekly instruction periods, held in Negro churches, are conducted by the Montgomery Improvement Association, the organization that has directed the long mass Negro boycott against segregated city buses. Mr. Abernathy is vice-president of the M.I.A.

Ministers and other M.I.A. leaders along with officers of civic clubs and volunteers in each neighborhood are acting as instructors, the Baptist minister said. Besides the weekly classes, Negro civic clubs are also urged to spread the doctrine of nonviolence at their meetings.

"We are trying to get over the idea of courtesy," Mr. Abernathy said.

"We feel our people must not misconstrue the (Supreme Court) decision as a victory decision. We feel it is a step toward democracy. Our people must return to the buses peacefully and not boastfully."

New Negro Has Emerged In South, Dr. King Tells Group

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK — A new Negro has emerged in the South today, a Negro capable of decisive, united action, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the Montgomery bus boycott, told the United Negro College Fund symposium in Hunter College Assembly Hall, Tuesday night. The Hon. Chester Bowles, former United States Ambassador to India, was the principal forum speaker, and Dr. King was one of four Negro leaders who took part in a panel discussion, "The Negro Southerner Speaks."

"The Negro in the South has taken a new look at himself," Dr. King said. "With his migration to urban centers and the improvement of his educational and economic status, he has re-evaluated his position. No longer cowed by threats and intimidations, his attitude is a reflection of the sense of dignity being gained by colored people throughout the world today."

Mr. Bowles likened the 27-year-old Dr. King's successful leadership to that of Mohandas K. Gandhi, in his address on some international aspects of race relations.

"As Gandhi appealed to the basic decency, honesty and democratic spirit of the British, so great new Negro leaders will now appeal to the conscience and the decency of their white neighbors throughout the South," Mr. Bowles said. "Eventually the day will come, and I doen not believe it is now far distant, when American law will protect all Americans against discrimination on the basis of race, or creed, or color, and we may live with each other in understanding and peace.

"When this great day comes, it will be the courageous, democratic spirit of Gandhi and such men as Luther King which has made this new freedom possible, and it will have been achieved in the finest tradition of the human race," Mr Bowles stated.

Dr. William J. U. Wallace, president of West Virginia State College, the first fully integrated state college in the South; John H. Wheeler, Negro attorney of North Carolina, who has argued segregation cases before the U. S. Supreme Court; and Dr. King also served as panel discussants.

August Heckscher, director of the Twentieth Century Fund, Quincy Howe, ABC commentator, and Carl Rowan, Negro author and staff writer for the Minneapolis Tribune interviewed the panel members.

The symposium was the eighth in a series inaugurated by the United Negro College Fund in 1949. Whitney North Seymour, former president of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, headed the volunteer committee. Sponsors in addition to the Fund, included the New York clubs of twelve college groups: Barnard, Bennington Bryn Mawr, City College of New York, Mt. Rev. King Tells Five Ways To 'Speed Up' Integration

Weekly, New Orleans, La.

Sat. 12-15-56

MONTGOMERY, ALA. (ANP) The Rev. Martin L. King, this city's staunch leader of the successful year old bus boycott against segregation, told a packed church crowd here five ways of speeding up integration last week.

Speaking at the opening of a southside Negro institute on passive resistance to Montgomery's racial segregation, the young minister and leader said Negroes can speed up the "inevitable end" of segregation by:

"We must continue to gain the ballot...one of the basic keys to the solution of our problem." He said both the Democratic and Republican parties have "betrayed" Negro hopes.

2. "We must continue to struggle through legislation."

3. "We must donate large sums of money to the cause of freedom."

4. "Negroes must develop intelligent, courageous and dedicated leadership...one of the pressing needs of the hour."

5. "And, we must have the moral courage to stand up and protest injustice wherever we find it."

Rev. King declared that "Negroes should meet every act of violence toward an individual Negro with the fact that there are thousands of others who will present themselves in his place as potential victims."

"This dynamic unity, this amazing self-respect, this willingness to suffer, and this refusal to hit back will soon cause the oppressor to become ashamed of his own methods," he stated.

The brilliant minister said the Montgomery example had taught Negroes to stick together to achieve their goals. He added: "We have found a new and powerful weapon; nonviolent resistance."

Rev. King said that for the success of the boycott the white people of the city must also be commended. He said if there had not been some discipline and moral sensitivity in the white community, we would have had much more violence in Montgomery.

The 27-year-old leader said "Nobody has been able to convince me that the vast majority of white people in this community, or in the whole state of Alabama, are willing to use violence to maintain segregation. It is only the fringe element, the hoodlum element which would resort to the use of violence."

Rev. King told the overflow hymn-singing crowd that Negroes must continue to believe that the most ardent segregationist can be transformed into the most constructive integrationist, but he warned that the battle against segregation is far from won.

ICC's Ban On Segregation Brings Railroad Directive

P. 1

Montgomery, Ala.

Louisville and Nashville Railroad will remove signs designating white and Negro waiting rooms at all of its Alabama terminals today.

W. F. Glover, trainmaster for the L&N in Montgomery, said he had not received definite instructions to remove the segregation signs but expected the orders early today.

The L&N has displayed the signs on its separate waiting rooms since the Union Station was erected.

SEPARATE ROOMS

Employes at the Greyhound Bus Station and Trailways Bus Terminal here have received no instructions to remove the signs. Both have separate white and Negro waiting rooms.

The L&N order is in compliance with an ICC order banning segregation in interstate travel.

The reports the L&N is removing the signs were confirmed by officials of the company at Mobile and Birmingham.

An L&N representative at Mobile said the instructions came from L&N headquarters at Louisville, Ky., Flomaton, Pensacola, Fla., and Chattahoochee, Fla., are other terminals of the L&N in addition to Mobile, Montgomery, Birmingham and Decatur, main points.

WITHIN STATE

Ending of segregation in passenger travel applies only to passengers crossing state lines. Segregated facilities will be provided for passengers whose destination is within the state of origin.

In Birmingham, a delegation of Southeastern Grehound bus drivers was assured by Public Safety Commissioner Robert Lindbergh, head of the police department, that they would not be arrested if they failed to enforce segregated seating on the buses because of the ICC order and company instructions.

NO PROTEST HEARD

No protest had been heard from Montgomery drivers last night.

Lindbergh took a firm stand on the issue. He declared, "As long as our ordinances are on the books concerning this matter, we are going to enforce them."

He said there would be "plenty of policemen" on hand at the train terminal today to enforce the ordinance. Lindbergh said the "ICC is not a judicial body and therefore cannot abrogate Birmingham city ordinances."

Montgomery Commissioner Clyde Sellers last night declined to comment as to whether the city plans to enforce its segregation laws at the L&N station. station.

Sellers said he wants a "chance to study the matter further" before making a statement.

AFTER SIGNS BROUGT DOWN

Sellers To Circulate City Ordinance On Segregation To Trainmasters Here

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 1-11-56

Signs denoting segregation in railroad terminals came down in Montgomery yesterday.

Today, copies of Montgomery's city ordinances requiring separate eating and toilet facilities will be issued to local trainmasters.

City Commissioner Clyde Sellers said, "We will enforce Montgomery's laws as long as they are in effect. Our laws require separate eating and toilet facilities in train terminals. We are checking to find out if separate seating facilities in waiting rooms are required by law. If they are, they too will be enforced."

The Interstate Commerce Commission ruled recently separate facilities for Negroes and whites in waiting rooms and on trains would be integrated.

Mrs. H. A. Clenny, chief clerk and crew dispatcher of Western of Alabama Railroad here said their employes have been instructed "not to cause any incidents on the trains or in their waiting rooms." She said Western would obey the law.

W. P. Glover, trainmaster of Louisville and Nashville Railroad here, said, "We will comply with the ICC ruling. We have not been issued any orders from city officials. If there is conflict, we will decide how to smooth it out when that time comes."

No incidents were reported yesterday. Several Negroes were reported to have used white waiting rooms yesterday at Union Station.

from Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, delivered the typewritten excerpts personally to the L & N train station and to Greyhound and Trailways bus terminals.

CHECK MADE

Meanwhile, Sellers said he and city attorneys have not determined whether segregation provisions of the City Code are directly applicable to waiting rooms.

"We are checking to find out if separate seating facilities in waiting rooms are required by law," Sellers said. "If they are, they too will be enforced."

The search of city laws was begun when the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that companies engaged in transporting interstate passengers must abolish separate facilities for the races.

Signs designating separate waiting rooms already have been removed at local train stations as rail officials indicated they would comply fully with the ICC order.

IN MUSCLE SHOALS AREA

State Bus Line Lifts Racial Barrier

Advertiser Wed. 5-2-56

FLORENCE, Ala., May 1 (AP)—Shoals Transit Inc., drivers stopped enforcing racial segregation in the Muscle Shoals area without incident "about two days ago," Manager Tom Bolen said today.

Bolen said "everybody is still sitting in his own place." He said city officials agreed, "the only thing to do was to sit tight and see what happens.

"My drivers have told me that there has been no pronounced change so far," the bus line manager said. "In some ways things have been going even smoother than before the Supreme Court decree.

"I do not believe we will have any trouble here at all unless it's fomented from the outside."

Bolen said that if any one objects to where any one else is sitting "he can call the police. We're not law enforcement officers. We're bus drivers."

Shoals Transit Inc. serves the tri-cties of Florence, Sheffield and Tuscumbia. The area has a population of about 55,000, of whom about one-fifth are Negroes.

Bolen estimated the bus line carries about 60,000 passengers per month, of whom one-third are Negro.

Bolen said that federal law "says we can't segregate, and state laws say we can't integrate. We're over a barrel."

Shoals Transit is owned by American Transit Lines, Inc., St. Louis.

"Negro passengers have been unusually courteous," Bolen said, "going to great lengths not to offend anyone. Everybody realizes that we are in a bad situation and the less said about it perhaps the better."

The manager said the company never had signs designating areas for white and Negro passengers but drivers notified passengers where they must sit.

SEGREGATION AND INTEGRATION

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 1-11-56

Early yesterday the sign "Colored Waiting Room" in the left picture upheld segregation at the Union Station but late yesterday afternoon it had been replaced by the sign, "General Waiting Room," in the right picture. The UnionStation and other L&N terminals removed the segregation signs yesterday in compliance with an Interstate Commerce Commission order.

World Sat. 11-3-56 Birm. Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Negro leaders have not abandoned the Montgomery bus protest, it was disclosed Monday by Rev. M. L. King, Jr., leader of the group.

During a telephone call, the Rev. King said, "the boycott has not come to an end; the station wagons were only stopped temporarily Saturday. We will still operate the pool and will still boycott the buses as long as they are segregated."

The young leader had just returned from Boston, Mass., where he had completed a speaking tour. He had not been in Montgomery for more than thirty minutes before making this statement.

Rev. King also said that bus officials have been more inclined to go along with Negroes in Montgomery. The feeling, he added is more favorable now than it has been in the past. The young leader further stated that, without strong protest by city officials in Montgomery, the bus company would have ended segregation long ago.

He also said the protest was as strong as ever, and that Negroes were more determined not to ride the buses until some agreement could be reached.

Bus Segregation Is Defied By Negroes in Birmingham

Times New York Herald 12-27-56

18 Riders Are Arrested Without Violence —Minister Whose Home Was Bombed Leads Move—Mass Meeting Called

By The Associ

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 26 —Negroes in large numbers defied this city's segregation laws today by sitting with whites on buses. The police immediately began to arrest the violators.

The newest attack on segregation barriers was led by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, 34-year-old Negro Baptist, whose home had been bombed a few hours earlier.

Police Commissioner Robert Lindbergh warned that the city's segregation laws would be enforced. Within a few hours, eighteen Negroes had been arrested for having sat in sections of buses reserved by law for white passengers.

No violence was reported. The Commissioned said he intended to "resolve the issue."

"Those who violate our laws, white or colored, will be arrested and the police force has been given the necehsary instructions to implement that policy," he declared.

He said arrests were being made for "violation of the segregation ordinance, and not on some subterfuge; it will be up to the courts to decide."

At a meeting this afternoon, directors of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights voted to ride in sections of buses reserved for whites. About 200 Negroes took part in the meeting. Many of them followed Mr. Shuttlesworth afterward when he boarded a bus.

Mr. Shuttlesworth rode to the university hospital, where his daughter has being treated for burns, and then rode back to the downtown area. He was not arrested.

He sat in a single seat at the front of the bus, but when it became filled he offered the space to a white woman, who accepted.

Times

Later, when police cars were seen in front of the bus, Mr. Shuttlesworth asked another Negro seated in the white section to give him the seat "so I can get arrested."

P. 29-e

On another bus carrying sixteen Negro passengers and seven whites, eight Negroes sat behind the board designating white and Negro sections and eight sat in the white space.

Times 12-27-56

Four white passengers left another bus when several Negroes sat in the white area.

Mr. Shuttlesworth called two mass meetings tonight at which instructions on violating the bus segregation law were to be given.

The dynamite bomb that shattered his home and damaged the adjoining Bethel Baptist Church injured two of his children and a visitor slightly.

"One way I'm sure God wanted us to be unsegregated is because he kept me alive," Mr. Shuttlesworth said at the meeting of directors of his organization.

"I need not tell you there is an element of danger in the fight against segregation," he warned. He urged his followers not to weaken.

As at Montgomery and Tallahassee, Fla., Negroes were urged to avoid violence.

"I don't want any Negro to become involved with a white person with any other Negro, for that matter," Mr. Shuttlesworth said.

The maximum sentence for violating the bus segregation ordinance is a $100 fine and six months in jail for each count.

The attack on the ordinance had been forecast last week. In a letter the Alabama Christian Movement warned the City Commission that Negroes would act on a "first come, first seated" basis unless the racial laws were repealed.

The commission met but took no action.

Mobile Abolishes Sections

BIRMINGHAM, Dec. 26— While the segregation law was being defied here today, transit operators in Mobile decided to abolish separate sections. Drivers were told to handle seating "as diplomatically as possible."

In Tallahassee, Fla., some whites walked to the rear of buses rather than mingle with Negroes sitting in forward seats reserved for whites. No incidents were reported there or in Montgomery, where bus integration began last week.

The Negro Inter-Civic Council of Tallahassee called a mass meeting tonight to urge a return to the bus-riding habit. Negroes voted to end a seven-month boycott of the transit line Christmas Eve.

Leader Gets Traffic Ticket

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Dec. 26— During the arrests today, Mr. Shuttlesworth drove to a bus stop and told the police he had ridden in the white section of two buses.

The police made no effort to arrest him, but gave him a traffic citation for driving without a license.

There were continued reports that Negroes were boarding buses and riding in white sections. When patrol cars showed up, however, the officers were told the Negroes had already left the buses.

After the meeting of the City Commission, Mr. Lindberg issued this statement:

"This is no time for foolish threats and loud and intemperate statements. Personal ambitions must be subordinated to the common good. Individuals must practice restraint to a greater degree than at any time in the past.

"As your Commissioner of Public Safety, the responsibility of maintaining peace and good order rests more heavily upon me than on any other individual.

"We have always endeavored to enforce our laws fairly and impartially, and as long as we have state laws and city ordinances upon our books that are legally enforceable we have no thought other than to enforce them.

"There can be no exception. We will not voluntarily abandon the tradition-honored Southern custom of separate seating of the races on our buses.

"As we understand it, the United States Supreme Court decision [outlawing bus segregation in Montgomery] does not apply here."

Birmingham Negroes Briefed On Challenge Of Bus Seating

Advertiser Sun. 12-26-56 Montgomery

BIRMINGHAM, Dec. 25 (AP) — Instructions of how to ride city buses on a "first come, first serve" basis were circulated among an estimated 1,500 Negroes at a meeting here last night.

The Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, a pro-integration Negro group, is planning a quick challenge of Birmingham's bus segregation laws following a scheduled meeting of the city commission tomorrow.

The instructions were given by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the organization, at a weekly meeting of the group last night.

P. 5-A

REQUESTS IGNORED

Shuttlesworth said the step was in preparation for action following the commission meeting. Up to now, the commission has ignored requests to eliminate or amend Birmingham's racial segregation laws regarding buses.

Shuttlesworth said the instructions were similar to those circulated in Montgomery and Tallahassee. He said the Negroes are being told to be courteous and not to strike back if they are attacked.

The Negro minister said a meeting of his organization's executive board would follow the commission meeting tomorrow, and mass meetings of Negroes would be held in parts of Birmingham tomorrow night.

INCREASING NUMBERS

Bus segregation ended in Montgomery last weekend after city officials were served official notice of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling banning segregation there earlier.

With the exception of a few minor incidents, Negroes have been riding the buses on an integrated basis in Montgomery in increasing numbers. They ended a boycott of the city buses which lasted more than a year.

Monday, a 15-year-old girl was beaten but not seriously hurt by several white men who told her "don't ride the bus anymore."

Capital Pledges All Legal Means Against Bus Decree

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 15 (AP)—City authorities promised today to use every "legal" means available to combat the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation on city buses.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said in a written statement that the City Commission doesn't accept integration as inevitable despite the court ruling, and that it will "do all legal things necessary to continue enforcement of our segregation laws and ordinances of all kinds."

Post Herald

The ordinance requiring separate seating facilities for white and Negro passengers on city buses has been ruled unconstitutional along with Alabama state laws providing the same restrictions.

P. 1

Speaking in a broad sense and not on the bus problem alone, Gayle declared "We shall continue to enforce segregation" to insure "public safety, to protect the peoples of both race, and to promote order in our city."

Ala. 11-16-56

Along with buses, city laws require segregation in restaurants, rest rooms, parks and playgrounds, swimming pools and other activities.

Gayle and Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, who issued a separate statement, appealed to Montgomery residents to be calm and "cool-headed." Said Sellers:

Birmingham

"This is not the time for hotheads, oratory, loud talk or threats."

Ala.

The police commissioner's statement also pledged a continuing "legal" fight to "keep integration from invading our transportation system."

Commissioner Frank Parks, like the other two commissioners a member of the White Citizens Council, issued no statement but agreed with the principles of the other two.

Negro leaders learned with disappointment, meanwhile, that it may be a month before they can ride the buses free from segregation under the Supreme Court ruling.

The Negroes abandoned their long boycott last night with the thought that the integration decree would go into effect in just a few days.

With that in mind, they decided to walk to work or ride with friends until the day comes when they can ride the buses "on a nonsegregated basis." But the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court in Washington said today the formal order won't be issued for about a month.

The court's rules provide a 25-day waiting period to give the losing party time to ask for a rehearing. After that, a certified copy of Tuesday's anti-segregation ruling will have to be sent to the three-judge panel whose decision the Supreme Court upheld.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., who told cheering followers last night that the integration decree should be here within a few days, said today "something will be done" in an effort to shorten the time.

King said he and other leaders hadn't decided what course to take. But there were hints the Negroes might ask the Supreme Court for an immediate injunction against enforcement of the segregation laws during the 25-day waiting period.

Post Herald

Such an injunction was issued by the three-judge panel following its decision last June, but it was suspended pending the appeal to the higher court.

Ala. 11-16-56

Manager J. H. Bagley of Montgomery City Lines Inc., privately owned company operating the city's only bus service, said he intended to take no action toward integrating the buses until the Supreme Court decree is put into effect.

The company is under injunction from state court to continue enforging segregation laws until they are finally stricken down.

Another injunction was issued in state court Tuesday to stop the Negroes from using their car pool as a transportation service. Unless that is reversed on appeal or by injunction from higher court, the Negroes will be unable to use the motor pool while waiting for the formal end of segregation.

Gov. James E. Folsom, meanwhile, made his first official statement on the Supreme Court ruling. He appealed to white and Negro leaders again to seek settlement of their disputes without going to court.

"The only way I know to defeat Supreme Court decisions regarding segregation is to keep such cases out of the courts," the governor said.

He advocated creation of a biracial commission last year with authority to mediate racial differences, but the Legislature turned it down.

A White Citizens Council leader, State Sen. Sam Engelhardt, declared defiantly that the Supreme Court "must make preparations to enforce" its segregation degrees if it expects the Southern people to obey them.

White residents of Montgomery "will never accept" the bus integration decision, the executive secretary of the Alabama Association of Citizens Councils said.

Negroes Still Avoid Using Buses

Post Herald
Birmingham, Ala.
Wed. 11-21-56

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 20 (AP)—Weary Montgomery Negroes still are finding ways to get to and from work without their court-halted car pool and without riding segregated city buses.

For six days since the motor pool was stopped by an injunction, uncounted thousands have found rides with friends, some have used taxicabs, but many simply have walked.

The Supreme Court has said bus segregation is unconstitutional, but formal notice of the integration decree won't be sent out until about Dec 12, after the time has expired for city and state authorities to ask for a rehearing.

Until then, and desegregation has become a reality, the Negroes have pledged to continue shunning the buses, a policy they have followed since a boycott started nearly 12 months ago.

Meanwhile, the City Commission in its first official reaction to the Supreme Court ruling instructed city attorneys today to ask the court to reconsider, even though some officials said privately they thought there is slim chance.

Under federal court rules, the city has 25 days from the date of the Nov. 13 decision to ask for a rehearing.

Such a request might delay the effective date of the new integration policy, but the Supreme Court can put the decision into force without waiting to act on the rehearing petition.

There have been rumblings, too, from the newly revived Ku Klux Klan. A Klan spokesman who wouldn't be quoted by name said a huge rally of robed members from Alabama, Florida, Georgia and Mississippi is planned in Montgomery Saturday. He said he expects 5000 to 10,000 Klansmen to take part.

Post-Herald

The City Commission today turned down a request for a Klan parade through downtown Montgomery Saturday afternoon.

Hooded but unmasked Klansmen have made several public appearances since the bus boycott started here. They rode through Negro residential areas shouting and blowing auto horns on the night the Supreme Court outlawed bus segregation.

Negro leaders said today that no organized effort has been made to transport their people to and from work since Circuit Judge Eugene Carter in state court ordered the car pool abandoned.

Wed. 11-21-56

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy and Rufus Lewis, both officers in the boycott-supporting Montgomery Improvement Assn., said many Negroes have found rides with friends and neighbors, "making their own contacts," while thousands of others have walked.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and Chief G. J. Ruppenthal both said they have seen "a lot of them" walking. A Negro taxicab operator said there has been no increase in business since the motor pool ended.

Manager J. H. Bagley of Montgomery City Lines said there has been no noticeable difference in the number of Negro passengers—300 to 400 a day instead of the 30,000 to 40,000 riders the busline once transported.

Chamber of Commerce officials estimate between 11,000 and 12,000 working Negroes in Montgomery excluding domestic servants who probably number several thousand. There is no estimate of the number who own cars.

Negro pedestrians have found weather conditions ideal for the past week, with mild temperatures and little rain.

Negroes Seek To Speed Up Writ Delivery

Negro lawyers yesterday asked the U.S. Supreme Court to hasten the delivery of a mandate to Federal District Court here stating that bus segregation is unconstitutional.

Ala. 11-18-56

Attorneys for boycotting Negroes in Montgomery filed a petition with the high court in Washington asking that the date of the mandate be effective immediately instead of the 25 to 30 days normally required before notice is sent to the lower court.

A prompt filing of the court's ruling, the petition said, would permit quicker determination of four anti-segregation cases now pending in Alabama.

Attorney who filed the petition are Fred D. Gray and Charles D. Langford, both of Montgomery, and Thurgood Marshall, top NAACP lawyer, and his assistant, Robert L. Carter, both of New York.

The Supreme Court Tuesday affirmed the decision of a special three-judge U.S. Court in Montgomery which held last June 5 that segregation of white and Negro passengers on the city's buses violated the federal Constitution.

It would take the decision of only one justice to grant the Negro attorneys' request.

Gray, contacted here last night, refused to comment on the petition and would not say if any further legal steps would be taken by Negroes to speed delivery of the mandate.

Negroes decided in mass meetings last Wednesday to end the 11-month-old bus boycott when the Supreme Court mandate arrived here. They had hoped it would be a matter of "only three or four days."

Owen 'Working' On New Rules

Thinks He Can Keep Segregation

BY KEN FLYNN
United Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 19 (U.P.)—C. C. (Jack) Owen, public service commissioner, said today he is "working on an order" to maintain segregation on Alabama intrastate buses.

P. 1

"Under the commission's broad rule-making powers I think we can work up an order without using the words 'white' and 'colored' in any of our regulations," Owen stated.

The Public Service Commission head did not say what the order would contain but commented, "I'm working on it now and it should be ready in the next day or so."

Owen had no immediate comment on the conference called by U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. to discuss the enforcement of desegregation mandates.

The public service commissioner was the first state official to declare the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation on intrastate buses as "unworkable" in Alabama.

"The people of Alabama will never put up with integration," he said.

The U. S. District Attorney for Middle Alabama, Hartwell Davis, said here today he would attend Brownell's conference "the same as I would any conference called by the U. S. attorney general as long as I'm district attorney."

But he declined comment on what actions he may be asked to take to enforce the Supreme Court decision.

WHAT NEXT?

Bus Segregation Question Top Subject For Citizens

By AL McCONAGHA

What next in the city bus segregation controversy?

That was the question uppermost in citizens' minds yesterday amid a lull in the brisk events of the past three days. The situation is complex, and numerous rumors have sprung up from various sources.

Here is what has happened to date and a brief examination of possible courses of action being discussed:

On Tuesday, the U.S. Supreme Court exploded a bombshell by upholding a federal court ruling which said racial segregation laws pertaining to Montgomery and state buses were unconstitutional.

On Tuesday, too, Circuit Court Judge Eugene W. Carter granted a temporary injunction halting Negro bus boycotters' motor pool operation.

Judge Frank M. Johnson of U.S. District Court on Wednesday refused to issue an injunction sought by Negro attorneys which would prevent the city from interfering with the Negro transportation system.

That night, Montgomery Negores voted to end the 11-month-old bus boycott and return to integrated buses when the Supreme Court ruling became officially effective here. At this time, Negroes thought it would be a matter of a few days. They decided they would walk and share rides with neighbors until they might ride integrated buses.

On Wednesday also, the Montgomery City Lines announced that buses would remain segregated so long as Circuit Court Judge Walter Jones' injunction of last spring preventing the racial integration of buses is effective.

The City Commission issued a statement Thursday pledging to use every legal means of continuing city bus segregation. They did not name the course such action would take. They also dodged the issue of what action would be taken if buses were integrated.

The Negroes learned Thursday that it would be nearly a month before Supreme Court order would reach here. Indicating their disappointment, Negro leaders said they would seek some method of speeding up the date when bus integration would be effective.

Friday, the Alabama Public Service Commission began work on a plan for maintaining segregation if legally possible by employing its rule-making powers.

PSC President C. C. (Jack) Owen declared that "due to the broad rule-making powers of the commission, we feel sure that we can come up with something to protect the best interest of the general public."

The commission has certain police powers in addition to simple rule-setting, and Owen said the agency was forced to study the situation "from the standpoint of making it safe for the riders of public carriers."

During this time rumors boiled through City Hall, state, offices, and everywhere people stopped to talk.

Some sources said bus company officials were preparing a petition asking Judge Jones to dissolve his injunction preventing integration of buses. It is widely believed that the Montgomery City Lines was anxious to regain Negro passengers who had previously numbered about 70 per cent of its business. The company has announced a loss of $750,000 because of the boycott.

There also were reports that owners of white taxi companies had been meeting with city officials in a desire by the taxi owners to obtain permission from the municipal officers to lower cab rates in what some thought would be the beginning of a white boycott of city integrated city buses.

The next move by the city can only be guessed. The immediate legal stall to integration would be to ask the Supreme Court to review its decision. This action, most observers believe, would offer only temporary relief.

Disenfranchisement of the bus company was another widely talked possibility. However, this would likely mean a law suit, for which the city does not now appear to have good legal grounds.

The problem of what would substitute for the buses was also pertinent. The city cannot afford to operate a bus system at a loss of $750,000 per year. It is thought that perhaps lower taxi rates may have the most meaning in this connection.

The plans of Montgomery Negroes to speed up bus integration so that the race could stop walking and sharing rides with neighbors are beyond even the vaguest guessing.

State officials say privately that they have no immediate solution to prohibit racial integration on buses. But they are equally certain they will come up with something.

How successful they will be is, again, uncertain. One conclusion does seem to be warranted, however. Montgomery buses will not soon be racially integrated.

Owen Confident Of Solution

APSC Chief Sees Seating Worked Out

BILOXI, Miss., Nov. 13 (U.P.)—C. C. (Jack) Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, said today he believes transportation companies operating under state jurisdiction will continue to enforce segregation of the races.

Owen, here for an Alabama Farm Bureau meeting, told United Press that despite today's Supreme Court ruling which struck down an Alabama law requiring racial segregation on intrastate buses "the people of Alabama are not going to put up with integration."

"The public utilities operating under our jurisdiction will be asked to maintain segregation in order to maintain peace and order," Owen said. "We will request they help us carry out a program like that and still be within the law.

"In my opinion the companies can place passengers as they wish as the best way to maintain order. I am sure we get the cooperation of the companies."

Bagley Says Patronage Up On City Lines

By JIM HALL

The second day of integrated buses passed quietly here yesterday. Only one minor incident was reported to Montgomery police.

Det. Capt. E. P. Brown said a local white woman reported that a Negro man winked at her while she was riding a bus near Chisholm.

J. H. Bagley, manager of Montgomery City Lines, Inc., said operations were proceeding smoothly. He estimated that "four or five times" as many Negroes were riding buses today as during the boycott.

"We are putting buses back into operation as fast as the demand for transportation and availability of drivers permits," he said.

USE BUSES

The bus company manager said a check with drivers indicated that regular white customers were continuing to use the buses.

He said he had been informed that a number of Negroes made prior share-the-ride commitments and had paid for their transportation through Saturday.

"If this is true," he added "We ought to have more returning to the buses next week."

Negroes generally were following Friday's seating pattern, choosing seats at random and sitting with members of their own race for the most part.

On buses going into Negro residential sections, they were using the middle and front seats. On those from white sections, Negroes were seating from the middle toward the rear.

In some instances where Negroes concentrated in the front of a bus, white passengers moved to the rear seats.

Montgomery Becomes Another Cradle

That important decision handed down a few days ago by the Supreme Court of the U. S., affirming a decision of the 4th., District Federal Court outlawing segregation in the Montgomery Bus case and where such practices exist elsewhere, bids fair to make Montgomery, once the cradle of the Confederacy, another cradle — but this time one for the emergence of tolerance and the establishment of an acknowledged principle of first come, first served.

The eleven month old Montgomery Bus strike occasioned by the prosecution of Mrs. Rosa Parks a seamstress apparently is nearing its end in a solution of the much advertised issue.

Dr. M. L. King, Jr., leader of the move for ending discrimination on the buses, is to be congratulated for the sane and level-headed manner in which he made a powerful contribution in the emphasis of Democracy.

He insisted all along that law and order be observed, and held that there was within the framework of the law remedial measures for the treatment of every social ill contingent to law enforcement.

The trail was tedious and one often beset with its discouraging and inconvenience, but it is apparent that the safe ground upon which its contestants ventured, make it well worth its cost.

The leaves upon which rested the Plessy vs. Ferguson "separate but equal" principle, have thusly stiffened into tombstones, and the situation is clarified to the extent that its reality will suggest the complete curtailment of all those little ugly reminders penalizing human beings for what they had no choice in occasioning.

Negro Mass Meeting Planned For Tonight

A Negro mass meeting will be held here tonight in the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church to "evaluate" the bus integration situation, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., said.

"This will be something of an evaluation of how things have gone," King said. "We also will give advice on the continuation of riding integrated buses."

King, president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., which sponsored the year-long Negro bus boycott, said the results of the first two days of integrated travel here have been "very encouraging."

The meeting will be held at 8:30 p.m.

Court Won't Speed Order To Alabama

Post-Herald Birmington, Ala. Tues. 11-20-56

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP)—Atty. Gen. Brownell today summoned federal prosecutors in 14 Southern states to a Washington conference on how to carry out the Supreme Court decree against racial segregation on buses.

He set the date, in a circular letter to the 34 U. S. district attorneys in the 14 states, as Dec. 10.

Brownell's letter said that it is clear from the Supreme Court decision of Nov. 13 on the Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation case, that discrimination against bus passengers on account of race is "a crime against the United States."

A number of state and municipal government spokesmen in Southern states have spoken out against the court's Montgomery ruling; several have indicated that various state laws against mixing of races on transportation systems would have to be tested in separate court actions. They said that pending such tests, segregation would be continued on buses.

The Montgomery case was marked by a long bus boycott by Negroes against segregated travel.

Supreme Court aides said the bus case notice now may be mailed about Dec. 12. It will go to members of a special court which sat in Montgomery and handed down the anti-segregation decision affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Brownell's letter calling the Justice Dept. conference went to U. S. attorneys in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Brownell told them the conference "will consider and decide upon measures most appropriate to secure observance of the United States constitution and laws by carriers and all others who may hereafter require segrgation of white and colored passengers on common carriers."

The attorney general told the district attorneys to bring with them copies of state or local laws relating to racial segregation.

He said the Nov. 13 court decision, which struck down Montgomery and Alabama statutes, makes it clear "that any such law, statute, ordinance or regulation must be regarded as a dead letter."

"It is also clear," he added, "that the enforcement or observance of any such discriminatory measure by any common carrier of passengers will constitute in the future a willful deprivation by the carrier of the constitutional rights, privileges and immunities of those discriminated against and a crime against the United States."

"Anyone who commands, induces, procures, counsels, aids or abets the carrier in the commission of such crime is equally guilty," he said.

Officials of the city of Montgomery announced after the court decision that they would use every legal means available to contiue separate seating arrangements for Negroes and whites on Montgomery buses. They said this was required to preserve public safety and promote order.

Post Herald

Non-segregated operation was attempted last Spring by the private bus company which serves Montgomery, but was dropped under a state court order.

Tues. 11-20-56

Ben Franklin, vice president of the Montgomery line, said today his company is still required to segregate passengers under the state court order which "remains in force until further direct order by the U. S. District Court."

Top Court Voids State, Local Laws

Tribunal Cites School Ruling To Ban Separate Seating System

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13 (AP)— The Supreme Court today wiped out state and local laws requiring segregation on buses.

It did so by affirming a decision of a special three-judge U. S. District Court in Montgomery, Ala. That court ruled that enforced segregation of whites and Negroes on Montgomery buses violated the U. S. Constitution's guarantees of due process and equal protection of law.

Post Herald

In a brief unanimous order, the Supreme Court cited its 1954 decision against segregation in public schools. It also cited subsequent decisions outlawing segregation in public parks and playgrounds and on public golf links.

Wed. 11-14

As it has done in several segregation cases since its basic school decision, the high court acted without listening to any argument. Except for citing three segregation-banning decisions, all the court said was:

Birmingham Ala.

"The motion to affirm is granted and the judgment is affirmed."

This affirmation left no doubt that the Supreme Court was outlawing segregation on all bus systems. Earlier this year some question had arisen when the court simply dismissed an appeal from another decision overturning a South Carolina segregation law. That left the decision in effect but led to confusion—ended today—as to the Supreme Court's intent.

Negroes in Montgomery have conducted a long boycott of city buses as a protest against segregation. One of the things they resorted to was operation of a car pool to carry those who used to use the buses.

A state court at Montgomery now is considering the city's attempt to halt the car pool as illegal. The court continued its hearing today after being informed of the Supreme Court ruling.

In neighboring Mississippi, Gov. J. P. Coleman said his state would continue to segregate Negroes and whites on public conveyances, despite the Supreme Court order.

"Our attitude about the decision will be the same as about the school segregation cases," Coleman said. Mississippi's public schools, like many others in the South, still are segregated.

In the bus segregation case, Montgomery's Board of Commissioners and the Alabama Public Service Commission appealed from the ruling of the three-judge court voiding state and local bus segregation laws.

The lower court, dividing 2-1, said "There is now no rational basis upon which the separate but equal doctrine can be validly applied to public transportation within the city of Montgomery." And it said "the application of that doctrine cannot be justified as a proper execution of state police power."

Post Herald

The two judges in the majority said they agreed with a decision of the Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond that "the separate but equal doctrine can no longer be safely followed as a correct statement of the law."

The separate but equal doctrine, now dead for all practical purposes, was laid down by the Supreme Court in a transportation case in 1896 known as Plessy v. Ferguson.

Wed. 11-14-56

The Montgomery court said the two judges in the majority though "that Plessy v. Ferguson had been impliedly, though not explicitly overruled," and that, under the later decisions, there is no rational basis upon which that doctrine can be applied in public transportation.

The City Commissioners of Montgomery contended the special court lacked authority to act. They said it should have dismissed the complaint filed on behalf of Negro bus riders, or should at least have stayed action pending disposition of a similar suit filed by Negroes in Alabama state courts.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson of Alabama filed the appeal of the State Public Service Commission, arguing that the right of the passenger "is only that of being carried safely, and with due regard to his personal comfort and convenience." Patterson said this cannot be done and peace and order maintained in Montgomery and other places "if, by court decree, a Negro man is permitted to sit by a white woman."

The boycott began last Dec. 5 after Mrs. Rosa Parks, a 42-year-old Negro seamstress, was fined $14 for refusing to move to the Negro-designated rear portion of a Montgomery city bus. That night a mass meeting of hymn singing Negroes decided to boycott segregated city buses.

After a few stray rifle shots at buses and several small dynamite bombs tossed at homes of Negro leaders, none of which caused injuries, the boycott continued quietly until the suit by four Negro women was filed Feb. 1.

Bus company officials said that from between 30,000 and 40,000 Negro passengers a day, patronage dropped to 300 to 400 Negroes.

The current legal action by the city indicated that in 11 months the bus company lost $750,000 revenue because of the boycott.

A special three-judged panel heard the case May 11. The judges, all native Southerners, were Richard T. Rives of the Fifth Circuit Court in New Orleans, Frank M. Johnson Jr. of the Middle Alabama District at Montgomery and Seybourn H. Lynne of the Northern Alabama District at Birmingham.

Rives and Johnson found the bus segregation laws unconstitutional. Lynne dissented from the June 5 ruling.

On June 19, by the same 2-1 vote, the group issued a permanent injunction against enforcement of the city and state laws. Then they suspended the injunction "during pendancy" of appeal.

Johnson had no comment today on when the injunction might go into effect, and the other two were not available.

In other actions today, the court:

1. Denied Gov. J. Bracken Lee of Utah permission to file suit attacking constitutionality of the U. S. foreign aid program.

Lee, a Republican, who was defeated for renomination and failed last week to win re-election as an independent candidate, proposed to file suit to enjoin Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey from using tax funds for foreign assistance.

2. Agreed to rule on an appeal by John Stewart Service, contesting his dismissal from the State Dept.

Supreme Court To Rule On Suit Against Union

Post-Herald Tues. 11-20-56 Birm., Ala.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (U.P.)—The Supreme Court today agreed to decide whether workers may sue a union in state courts for damages caused by loss of employment during a strike.

The case came from Alabama, where the State Supreme Court ruled on March 22, 1956, that such a suit is permissible. The high court will schedule arguments soon on the issue, and later will hand down a written opinion.

The appeal was filed by the United Automobile Workers Union, which was sued for $50,000 strike damages in Morgan County Circuit Court by an electrician, Paul S. Russell.

The suit stemmed from a 1951 strike called by the union at the Decatur plant of the Calumet & Hecla Consolidated Copper Co., Wolverine Tube Division.

Russell complained that because of mass picketing and threats of violence he was prevented from entering the plant, thereby losing work from July 18 to Aug. 22.

On the second time in state courts, he was awarded $10,000 following a jury trial.

The union argued in the State Supreme Court that Congress has given the National Labor Relations Board exclusive jurisdiction in this field. But the court held that the board has no jurisdiction to grant redress; and that Russell was entitled to it.

"This court recognizes that the right to pursue a lawful occupation is a property right, and the wrongful interference therewith is an actionable wrong," the opinion said.

Hugo Black Refuses Hurry Plea

Post-Herald Birm., Ala. Tues. 11-20-56

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP)—U. S. Supreme Court refused today to speed up its official notice that it has outlawed segregation on local buses.

Denying a plea by attorneys for Montgomery, Ala., Negroes for immediate action, the court in effect decided to treat the case in a strictly routine way.

The plea for speedy handling actually was denied by Justice Hugo Black as presiding judge of the Fifth U. S. Circuit Court.

Black, however, issued a brief statement saying he had consulted with the eight other Supreme Court justices and found them "in agreement with my views" that the request for immediate issuance of the official notice should be turned down.

As a result, the court's order probably will not be mailed until about Dec. 12. Official notices usually are mailed about 25 days after the court rules.

The official notice, when mailed, will go to members of a special three-judge U. S. District Court which struck down Alabama laws and Montgomery ordinances requiring separation of Negro and white passengers.

Post-Herald

Attorneys for Montgomery Negroes filed their motion for quick action Saturday. They said it was "of great public importance that the opinion or order and judgment of this court issue forthwith."

Negroes in Montgomery have conducted a long boycott of buses as a protest against state and city segregation laws.

Dividing 5-3, the court also decided federal employes paid on a daily basis are not entitled to an extra day's pay for each holiday worked during World War II.

Tues. 11-20-56

Alfred C. Berch, a welder at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, claimed he was entitled to extra pay for working on legal holidays in 1945.

The U. S. Court of Claims upheld him, and the Justice Dept. appealed to the high tribunal. The department said the decision of the Court of Claims caused more than 70,000 similar pay claims to be filed amounting to three-quarters of a billion dollars.

Alabama Asks Court Review On Bus Edict

Advertiser Montgomery Ala. P. 1

The State of Alabama yesterday petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court to re-consider its Nov. 13 decision which outlawed racial segregation on Montgomery city buses.

Tues 12-4-56

The petition for a re-hearing was filed by Atty. Gen. John Patterson in behalf of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

It was not clear whether the state's action would postpone the effective date of the high court's integration decision. Under normal office routine the notice of the decision would be forwarded here Dec. 12 or 13. However, the high court wil' be in session next Monday and could take immediate action on the petition and still have time for the notice to reach here later that week as originally scheduled.

BRIEF PETITION

Patterson's petition to the court yesterday was brief, declaring the bus decision had "wrongfully taken" from Alabama its police powers.

"We earnestly insist that the state's police power has been wrongfully taken from it, and there now exists a 'No Man's land,' in which the state, under the Court's opinion, is powerless to protect property and prevent breaches of peace which will inevitably result from the Court's decision rendered in this cause," Patterson declared. "The Tenth Amendment has been written out of the Constitution."

Continuing, Patterson declared that the Plessy V. Ferguson decision (separate but equal ruling) "should receive the sanction and approval of the court as now constituted."

Earlier in the petition, Patterson noted that laws permitting or requiring the separation of the races "does not necessarily imply the inferiority of either race to the other."

LAWS RECOGNIZED

Patterson further pointed out that such segregation laws "have been generally, even universally, recognized as within the competency of the State Legislatures in the exercise of their police power."

"This has been the expressed opinion of many distinguished and learned justices who have heretofore sat on the Supreme Court of the United States," the attorney general added.

The petition for rehearing was signed by Patterson, Ass'ts. Attys. Gen. William N. McQueen and Gordon Madison, and was also signed by William F. (Pete) Black, counsel for the Public Service Commission.

The Montgomery City Commission, also a party to the original suit as was the PSC, is expected to file a similar petition for rehearing this week. City officials indicated earlier that they intended to make such a request

Negroes seek to speed integration on buses

News P. 1 Tues. 11-18-56

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17—(AP)—Negroes fighting segregation on Montgomery, Ala., buses Saturday asked the Supreme Court to hasten the effect of a decision favoring their cause.

The Supreme Court on Tuesday affirmed the decision of a special three-judge U. S. Court in Montgomery which held that segregation of white and Negro passengers on the city's buses

With day of prayer—

Capital Negroes celebrate boycott

News P. 24 Thurs. 12-6-56 Birm., Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 6—(AP)—Bells of Montgomery's Negro churches sounded early today to begin a "day of fasting and prayer" for a continuing campaign seeking equality of opportunity for Negroes.

It marked the beginning of the second year of passive resistance to segregation by Montgomery Negroes.

While most Montgomery Negro families reportedly were observing the day appropriately, a source at Alabama State College for Negroes said the school's dining hall was operating as usual.

STUDENTS at the large Negro college haven't been directly involved in the bus boycott or the "institute on non-violence and social change" being held here this week.

Montgomery's bus boycott began Dec. 5, 1955, the day a Negro seamstress was fined $14 for refusing to move to the back of a segregated bus. The institute is spreading the word on how the boycott has been conducted to apparent success.

Negroes are waiting for a U. S. Supreme Court decision Nov. 13 banning city bus segregation to be relayed down to Montgomery and halt enforcement of separate seating. They have voted to end the boycott then.

A COURT OFFICIAL said the decision should be sent down about Dec. 12. The date was mentioned before the state of Alabama on Monday and the city of Montgomery yesterday asked the high court to reconsider its ruling. It was not immediately known whether the requests might delay the decision's relay here.

Two sessions of a seminar on "non-violence and the social gospel" were on the institute program for today. Tonight Mahalia Jackson, gospel singer from Chicago, will appear on a musical program. The institute ends Sunday.

Last night Miss Lillion Smith, white novelist of Clayton, Ga., told a "women's night" institute session of between 1500 and 2000 persons that Southern white persons have had to give up four freedoms in order to keep segregation.

MISS SMITH'S speech was read by Dr. Hiland Lewis, chairman of the Atlanta University sociology department, after the author said illness prevented her attendance.

She said the lost freedoms were:

1. "The freedom to do right. There are white Christians in the South who know segregation is wrong."

2. "The freedom to obey the law. . . . We obey our dictators instead. These are sometimes our governors, other times . . . our business employers, our school superintendents, or our boards of trustees or the church."

3. "The freedom to speak out . . what one believes is true . . . the penalities are heavy for those who dare speak out anyway: Loss of jobs, boycott, ostracism, violence sometimes."

4. " . . . We have also lost our freedom from fear." Negroes and white persons "are afraid of each other and themselves."

MISS SMITH said Montgomery Negroes "are helping the white South to find its way, too. You are giving young white Southerners hope. You are persuading some of them that there is something worth believing in and risking for."

Another speaker was Miss Nannie H. Burrough, president of the Women's Auxiliary of the National Baptist Convention, a Negro group. She said the "world requires men who can move mountains."

Mountains listed were undeveloped faith, satisfied ignorance, glorified laziness, family responsibility, gross neglect, immorality and race prejudice.

Pro-segregationists to speak at rally

CLANTON, Ala., Dec. 6—(AP)—Comments by pro-segregation leaders on the Negro-sponsored race relations institute going on in Montgomery might be made tonight to a Citizens' Council rally.

Speakers at a meeting of the Chilton County Citizens' Council will be Rep. Armistead Selden Jr., of the Sixth District and State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon, executive secretary of the Alabama Assn. of Citizens' Councils.

Engelhardt said in Montgomery yesterday "we may have something to say" about the Southwide Institute.

Await Court Order To End Montgomery Bus Boycott

By ENOC P. WATERS JR.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — A spokesman for the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., operators of the local bus lines, against whom a boycott has been directed for almost a year has expressed willingness to abide by the law "what ever it may be."

J. H. Bagley, district supervisor for the company, as referring to the U. S. Supreme Court decision which ruled segregated seating on buses unconstitutional.

Meanwhile local Negroes under the leadership of the Montgomery Improvement Association, continued their boycott of the jim-crow buses of the 352nd consecutive day Monday.

They were walking as usual today and will continue to walk for sometime in the future since the Supreme Court decision will not go into effect here until "about 30 days" from Tuesday, November 13, when the court's mandate is delivered to the Federal district court here.

In an effort to offset the bitter and intemperate statements of defiance made by many white leaders, the city commission asked residents of the city to remain calm and issued assurances that every legal maneuver would be utilized to preserve segregation.

Mayor William A. Gayle, admitted that the city commission was temporarily at a loss as to what legal procedure to follow, but expressed confidence that something would be worked out as attorneys had an opportunity to study the decision.

Meanhile Rev. Martin Luther King, president of the MIA, and leader of the whole boycott movement, expressed disappointment that there will be such a long delay before the decision becomes effective here.

The MIA voted last week to end the boycott when the court's decision goes into effect. At that time it was thought there would be a lapse of just a few days.

Since the MIA is under injunction preventing them from operating their car pool, maintaining the boycott over a long preiod of time now poses new problems.

However, the full effect of the boycott was still being felt Sunday. Late last week Negroes with cars were sharing them with others in an effort to preserve the boycott.

It is expected that this "share your car" movement will be extended to cover the period until the decision is received here.

Bagley said that the boycott which will be a year old Dec. 5, has already cost the company $750,000 in revenue losses.

Attorneys for the bus line are expected to ask the court to lift the injunction which would prevent them from complying with the Supreme Court edict.

"It would appear," Bagley said, "that if the injunction were removed, our present method of segregating passengers would be unconstitutional."

City Commissioners Clyde C. Sellers and Frank W. Parks both deplored the court decision and promised that everything would be done to prevent desegregation of the buses.

Though obviously overjoyed by the decision, Negroes here are restrained and are willing for Rev. King and other leaders of the movement to speak for them and plan strategy.

All are under a self imposed mandate "to do nothing that will upset our victory now."

DEFY IS VOICED AT BUS DECISION

US Court Will Have to Enforce It--Engelhardt

Fri. 11-16-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 15 (AP) — A White Citizens Council leader declared Thursday that the US supreme court must make preparations to enforce" its antisegregation orders if it expects Southerners to obey them.

Commenting on Tuesday's decision outlawing Montgomery city and Alabama state bus segregation laws, state Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon county said that and similar decrees were based on "politics as well as the sociological ravings of outsiders."

White residents of Montgomery "will never accept" the bus integration order, Engelhardt declared adding:

"If the supreme court insists on disrupting our social order, insists on destroying the peaceful relations that have existed here for years, it must make preparations to enforce this order."

Engelhardt is executive secretary of the prosegregation Association of Alabama Citizens Councils.

In Dothan meanwhile, a city bus line owner, Ben May, said defiantly that "I don't have to operate integrated busses and I won't.

"I don't know what will be done," he added, "but we will continue to operate as we have."

May operates the Dothan Transit Co. Tuesday's decision was not directed specifically to any transportation system outside Montgomery.

In Washington today, the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court said formal notice of the decision will be issued in about a month.

Under the court's rules, notice of a decision is not sent out until at least 25 days after the decision is announced.

In the bus segregation case decided Tuesday, a certified copy of the Supreme Court's judgment will be sent to a special three-judge U.S. District Court in Montgomery, Ala., which declared unconstitutional the Alabama and Montgomery laws requiring racial segregation on buses. This week's Supreme Court ruling unanimously affirmed that decision.

Montgomery Bus Ruling Hailed by Negro Leaders

Washington, D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 14 (AP).—"We were badly treated on the buses but now they've given us justice."

That was the reaction of a 78-year-old Montgomery Negro woman to the Supreme Court's decision yesterday that bus segregation is unconstitutional. The woman, Mrs. Susie McDonald, and three other Negro women brought the suit that broke city and State bus segregation laws. must be maintained."

White officials across the South took a strong stand directly opposed to hers.

Charges of unlawful interference with the States, common since the 1954 Supreme Court ban on public school segregation, echoed again across Dixie.

"Glorious Daybreak"

Leaders of the 11-month-old bus boycott in Montgomery indicated the decision would bring the protest to an end, its purpose now removed.

Calling the decision "a glorious daybreak," the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., said at a meeting of the boycott leaders last night that "everyone is very happy." The executive board of the Montgomery Improvement Association, the boycott's co-ordinating group which Mr. King heads, met to discuss the decision.

Mr. King said the group would meet again today to draw up recommendations to two mass meetings of boycotters tonight. He predicted the boycotters would vote to end their protest and return to city buses.

A similar boycott of segregated buses has been conducted by Negroes in Tallahassee, Fla. It began several months after the Montgomery protest started December 5.

The Governors of Mississippi and Georgia, United States and State Senators, a State attorney general and other officials were among those sharply criticizing the decision.

The Montgomery city commission, named in the suit, had no immediate comment. Alabama's Attorney General John Patterson, who had filed an appeal to the Supreme Court from a special three-judge Federal panel, was not available for comment.

President Jack Owen of the Alabama public service commission said that "to keep down violence and bloodshed, segregation

With no immediate efforts reported of Negroes seeking to ride in the front parts of buses, there was no sign of violence here.

A caravan of about 40 carloads of robed Ku Klux Klan members toured Negro residential areas of Montgomery last night, horns blowing, but police said they had no reports of violence.

Officials of the Montgomery bus company declined to comment on effects of the decision. Officials of the parent company, National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago, also refused comment.

The city had indicated the company lost about $750,000 in revenue because of the boycott.

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi said that his State's segregation laws "are not involved" in the decision and would still be enforced.

Precedent Seen

The senior judge on the special panel, Richard T. Rives of the Fifth United States Circuit in New Orleans, said the Supreme Court's upholding the panel would set a precedent for other cases.

Alabama's senior Senator, Lister Hill, said "every lawful means to set aside the ruling" should be used.

Herman Talmadge, Senator-elect of Georgia, called again for congressional limitation of the Supreme Court's power. He said the decision did not surprise him "in view of decisions made recently."

Georgia's Gov. Marvin Griffin said his State would oppose application of the decision by all legal means. His attorney general, Eugene Cook, noted that the decision does not directly affect Georgia.

An intention "to outlaw separate but equal facilities in every phase of our life" was seen in the decision by the chairman of the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, Senator W. M. Rainach.

Alabama State Senator Sam Engelhardt, executive secretary of the pro-segregation Alabama Association of Citizens Councils, labeled the ruling "another invasion of a local self government" and an attack on constitutional government.

Negroes Lose Plea Asking Quick Action

Advertiser Tues. 11-20-56

Montgomery, Ala.

An attempt by Montgomery Negroes to hasten the day when integration of city buses goes into effect met with failure yesterday before the U.S. Supreme Court.

In a decision announced by Justice Hugo Black of Alabama, the court denied a plea by attorneys for Montgomery Negroes who sought immediate delivery of the formal court order on bus integration.

As had been previously announced by the court, the decision outlawing local bus segregation laws will not become effective until the official order is delivered to federal court here.

LONG DELAY

Normally, such orders require about 25 days for delivery, and it was this long delay which local Negro leaders sought to circumvent.

The ruling by the Supreme Court yesterday in effect held that the bus segregation decision would be handled just as any routine decision.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. head of the bus boycott-sponsoring Montgomery Improvement Association, declined comment on this setback last night. However, he indicated further legal steps might be taken in an effort to speed up delivery of the notice.

"I haven't had a chance to look into the decision, nor have I discussed it with our attorneys,"

King explained. "But we hope to agree on a new course of action as soon as possible."

OPPOSING SIDE

The delay of 25 days in mailing out such orders is necessary to permit the opposing side to appeal for a rehearing to the decision.

The opposing side in this case—the Montgomery City Commission and the Alabama Public Service Commission—has 15 days from the date of the decision to request a rehearing.

Neither side has made such a request as yet, but both are expected to do so before the 15-day deadline.

As a result of the delay, the court's order will probably be mailed about Dec. 12, and could be expected to be received here later that week.

BRIEF STATEMENT

Justice Black handled the case yesterday in his capacity as presiding judge of the 5th U. S. Circuit Court. However, he issued a brief statement saying he had consulted with the eight other Supreme Court justices and found them "in agreement with my views" that the request for immediate issuance of the official notice be turned down.

Attorneys for the local Negroes filed their motion for quick action Saturday, declaring it was "of great public importance that the opinion or order and judgment of this court (be) issued forthwith."

CLEAR BUS RULING ASKED

Montgomery Asks Tribunal For Debate Of Case

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5. (UP) —Montgomery, Ala., asked the Supreme Court Wednesday to clarify its Nov. 13 ruling striking down racial segregation on the city's buses.

Memphis Tenn.

The board of commissioners and Chief of Police Goodwin J. Ruppenthal told the justices they are in doubt as to the exact meaning of the decision.

The court issued only a brief order upholding a special three-judge panel in Montgomery which held bus segregation requirements of the city and state unconstitutional.

In its new petition, the city called for full arguments on the merits of the case so all interests concerned will know exactly where they stand.

It said city authorities are not sure whether the decision applies only to Montgomery buses or to all forms of public transportation in the city.

The petition also said the court did not make clear whether it was specifically overruling the "separate but equal" doctrine laid down in 1896 for settlement of such race disputes.

News P. 38 Wed. 12-5-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 5—A Negro newspaper reporter recently returned from Asia and Africa described bus-boycotting Montgomery Negroes today as a symbol of freedom to communist-threatened peoples abroad.

Birm. Ala.

CARL ROWEN of The Minneapolis Tribune told a Southwide race relations institute that the boycotter protesting segregation "fight a battle, not for the Negro but for the survival of democracy in a perilous world."

ROWEN, WHO TRAVELED in Asia and Africa as a reporter and who now covers the United Nations for The Tribune, said in a talk prepared for a luncheon forum:

"Asia and Africa cannot save themselves from communism unless we give them ample reason to believe that they can find equality under the banner of democracy.

"The Negro citizens of Montgomery are serving as a symbol to these people of the ability of oppressed human beings to achieve justice without violence, rancor and bloodshed."

He spoke on the first anniversary of the start of the bus boycott, a mass protest against segregated seating on city buses in Montgomery.

The racial institute, which started Monday, is dedicated to spreading the doctrine of passive rather than violent resistance to color barriers.

ROWEN SAID there are "two basic ingredients" in the Asian revolution—"a hatred of colonial rule and a hatred of racism," and added:

"No Asian or African is stupid enough to believe that all Americans love them when they see that Ralph Bunche couldn't get a room in a white hotel in Montgomery if his life depended on it, or that Negroes who have fought for this country are battling for the right to sit where they please in public buses."

THE REPORTER told the Montgomery Negroes "you are helping to save America by pushing white men toward democracy against their will," but that "many thousands" of white persons are supporting the Negro protest—"even in Montgomery."

He predicted that more white people will begin to speak in the Negroes' behalf "when they shake themselves free of the cliche peddlers who seek to convince them that if all we Americans do nothing long enough, these problems will go away."

"These problems will not solve themselves and it is time more Negroes realized that and began to work with the understanding that nowhere in the world did any people ever get freedom on a silver platter."

Two Negro ministers told the conference last night that white clergymen in the South are influenced in their views by pro-segregation congregations."

Injustice Is Target, Negro Leader Says

Evening Star

The struggle of the Negro for freedom and justice is not a struggle against the white people, but a struggle for democracy, a prominent Southern Negro leader said here last night.

Wash. 12-7-56

Dr. Martin Luther King, president of the Montgomery (Ala.) Improvement Association, which led the recent bus boycott in Alabama, made this statement as he addressed an estimated 3,000 persons in the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church.

Dr. King said segregation is against everything democracy stands for and that, if democracy is to live, segregation must die.

Washington, D.C.

Referring to the bus boycott in Alabama, he said the issue there is not an issue between white people and colored people, but an issue between justice and injustice.

Montgomery Negroes face $15,000 fine for boycott

Enquirer Los Angeles Calif.

Wed. 12-5-56 P. 16

MONTGOMERY — Negroes will not ride the buses desegregated in this "Cradle of the Confederacy" until some-time after official notification of the United States Supreme Court's desegregation decision reaches the Federal District Court here.

Hardships worked upon the Negroes of this city, who have zealously maintained a 12-month boycott of jim crow transportation, resulting in the first clear-cut Supreme Court decision against segregation in intra-state transit, were revealed fully to the nation at large in last week's News Letter of the Montgomery Improvement Ass'n.

Almost perfectly timed with the Supreme Court decision, the State Circuit Court branded the car pool as illegal and ordered it discontinued, the MIA said.

At the same time, Negroes learned that, with the Supreme Court decision, compliance would wait 25 days while the defendants appealed for re-hearing.

This led MIA lawyers to appeal to the Supreme Court for "quick action and immediate delivery" of the desegregation decision.

Refused, "between 30,000 and 40,000 Negroes are walking to and from work. . . . All pick-up stations and dispatch stations have been closed. . . . All station wagons are idle," the MIA said.

Negroes of Montgomery also face having to pay possible "compensatory damages of $15,000", which the city alleges "would have been its two percent . . . of the $750,000 or more the bus company would have taken in revenue had the Negroes ridden segregated buses."

Thus, Negroes face the possibility of being charged for refusing to be segregated.

The MIA revealed that Montgomery newspapers have reported the effort to break up the car pool originated with a "pro-segregation labor group" which "attempted to collaborate with city officials to end the bus boycott by 'swearing out warrants' against car pool operators."

An appeal by Negroes to the Federal District Court for an injunction, restraining the city from "interfering with the car pool operation", was denied by the court.

Complicating the situation further, the bus company must dissolve the injunction brought against it by the city last May, enjoining it from integrating passengers before it is free to abide by the ruling of the Supreme Court, MIA said.

APPEALS FOR FUNDS

Faced with the fact that the end of segregation in transportation is no where in sight, facing possible greater hardships, crisis and dangers, the boycott passed the 12-month mark Monday, Dec. 3, and observed it with the opening of the six-day inter-racial "Institute on Non-Violence and Social Change" which will attempt to introduce peaceful acceptance of desegregation into the city.

For the first time since the first few months of its operation, the boycott, through its leader, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., urgently appealed to the nation for funds "to liquidate financial obligations and to help . . . members of the organization who need help.

"Some . . . are victims of economic reprisals, having lost their jobs . . . for refusing to ride segregated buses.

"Those who instigated federal court proceedings against segregation (are) 'marked' and . . . will encounter difficulty finding employment", the MIA said.

"Ninety ministers and leaders of the protest movement still have cases pending in court and are subject to be tried any day on a charge of conspiracy against the city transportation lines.

"Dr. King's case is still on the docket and must be appealed to the highest court. . . .

"There is need for funds so that the MIA can continue to operate in the interest of Negroes even after the bus situation is ended because Naacp operations have been curtailed in Alabama."

Contributions should be mailed to the MIA by check or money order, at 530 S. Union st., Montgomery, Ala.

City Vows Battle On Desegregation By Legal Methods

Mayor Says Next Steps Not Decided

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Fri. 11-16-56

By AL McCONAGHA

The Montgomery City Commission promised yesterday to seek every "legal" means of continuing racial segregation on buses and asked residents, meanwhile, to remain calm.

At the same time Negro leaders expressed disappointment when they learned it may be 25 days befor the Supreme Court decision outlawing bus segregation becomes officially effective here.

Negroes voted Wednesday night to end their 11-month-old bus boycott pending delivery of the high court's Tuesday mandate to Federal District Court here. They had anticipated only a three or four day delay.

Mayor William A. Gayle told The Advertiser the commission has not decided what legal measures will be taken to maintain bus segregation. He said the commission had wired Washington for a copy of the Supreme Court's decision.

WITHIN 10 DAYS

A plea asking the court to review its decision must be filed within the next 10 days, if at all.

Asked what the city would do if and when Negroes attempted to integrate the now-segregated bus line, Gayle said, "We'll have to wait until that time comes."

The Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. (MIA) which has spearheaded the boycott, indicated his disappointment in the delay of the mandate's delivery to Montgomery.

"Something will be done," he said, "to speed up the Supreme Court order." But he declined to say how the MIA hopes to shorten the time until bus integration becomes effective here.

It was learned last night that King and the Rev. Ralph D. Abrnathy, another Negro boycott leader, were in Birmingham. The nature of their business there was not made known, but the MIA office said they would be out of to n until Saturday.

REMAINED OFF BUSES

Negroes remained off buses yesterday for the 347th consecutive day. They either walked or shared rides with friends. The effect of their extended boycott on Montgomry City Lines Inc. has been crushing. J. H. Bagley, company district supervisor said the company had suffered about a $750,000 revenue loss since last Dec. 5, 1955, the first day of the boycott.

Bagley, asked what the company would do if and when a state injunction requiring segregated buses is removed, said, "If the injuncion is removed, we will operate under the law—whatever the law is. It would appear that if the injunction is removed, our present method of segrgatng passengers would be unconstutonal."

Advertiser

Gayle and Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers issued separate statements yesterday afternoon while Commissioner Frank W. Parks, third commission member, made it clear both colleagues spoke for him.

3-DAY TURMOIL

The long-awaited statement by the commission came after three days of legal turmoil involving bus segregation and Negroes' boycott of city buses which is now nearly a year old.

Tuesday the Supreme Court ruled Montgomery and state laws enforcing bus segregation were unconstitutional. The same day, Circuit Court Judge Eugene Carter issued an injunction halting the Negro car-pool. Judge Frank M. Johnson of U.S. District Court Wednesday refused a Negro plea for action preventing the city from interfering with the Negro transportation system.

The mayor, in his statement, said:

"To insure public safety, to protect the peoples of both races, and to promote order in our city we shall continue to enforce segregation. We ask the honest consideration and cooperation of all citizens with this decision on the part of the city commission."

Sellers said:

"We shall continue to use all legal means to prevent integration from invading our transportation system. This is not the time for hot heads, oratory, loud talk, or threats. The only sensible way to face this problem is with common sense, calm consideration of the problem, and an attitude that the step we take will be a step toward mainaining segregation."

Both city officials deplored the high court ruling.

Gayle said," the recent Supreme Court decisions and the multitude of court actions and publicity following in their wake have seriously lowered the dignified relations which did exist between the races in our city and in our state."

Sellers added "the decision of the Supreme Court is not a decision against Montgomery—but a decision against the entire South. It is a decision against our ideas of Segregation. It is another tool to break down our ideals and to mix the races."

HEADLINE OF THE ALABAMA JOURNAL saying "Segregation Is Knocked Out" has a particular satisfaction for these three serious young men who played major roles in the bringing about of this historic announcement. Shown looking over the Tuesday afternoon paper in Montgomery, Ala., just after the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in travel, are Atty. Charles D. Langford, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., and Atty. Fred D. Gray. Langford and Gray led the legal battle waged by the Montgomery Improvement Association. Rev. King is the president of the association.

Much ado about cabs in Alabama

Oct. 13-56

BY SAM F. KETTE
AFRO Staff Correspondent

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — As I write I am seated in the so-called "colored intra state waiting room" of the L and N Railway station in Birmingham. I am unhappy—the normal vicissitude of life notwithstanding.

Baltimore, Md.

Because of poor weather conditions, and late flights from Knoxville, I decided on Saturday afternoon, to cancel plane reservations from Knoxville, and go by the more "sure" route of the railroads to cover the Montgomery Bus boycott anniversary.

In Knoxville, I was told by the ticket agent at the Southern Railway Station that I would need to transfer from the Southern to the L & N Birm- for Montgomery.

THAT WASN'T the greatest thing I'd heard during the day, but it forecast no particular hazards, although the same poor set of circumstances which I describe here had been part of an experience in New Orleans a few years ago.

The arrival of Hungarian Refugees in Knoxville, and the fanfare that accompanied it, delayed my departure from that city, making our arrival in Birmingham almost an hour late.

At best, it left me no more than 10 or 15 minutes to transfer to the L & N Station here to make my connection.

Afro-American

I WOUND my way hurriedly through the Southern Station subway, through the "white and Inter-State waiting room," and onto the Street where I was told by the conductor on the train that I could get my pre-paid cab to the L & N.

A huge odds-and-ins salesman stood in front of me as I reached the sidewalk.

"You'll have to go down there and git a Harlem cab if you want a taxi" he said, through snuff-stained lips as he pointed down at the entrance to the "colored intrastate waiting room."

As I turned to see what he pointed out to me, other transfer passengers hurriedly boarded Yellow cabs, and sped away toward the L & N Station.

I REFLECTED, then, that colored people do not ride white-driven cabs in many places behind the cotton curtain.

Seeing two cabs standing some 50 yards away with colored men beside them, I assumed that these were the cabs meant for me.

I found, however, that the Harlem cab had a franchise on the colored transfer passengers, and the other colored cabs took cash customers only.

One of the cab drivers standing there, then, pointed helpfully to the telephone hanging on the building beside me.

"They'll answer you if you pick it up," he assured me. I did, and they did.

"ALL RIGHT," the feminine voice on the other end said lazily "pick you in just a minute."

The other two cabs drove away, and I waited for 20 minutes I waited, picking up the phone after about 10 minutes of it to try to speed my accommodations up a bit.

With cabout five minutes left before the scheduled departure of my connecting train from the L & N station, I saw too clearly how stupid it was for me to be standing there waiting for a cab while numbers of Yellow cabs whizzed by me and into line-up position in front of the "White" waiting

Glancing again at my watch, I grabbed my bags and hustled down to one of the vacant Yellow cabs.

WITH SOME uncertainty, I opened the back door and slid my three suiter on the floor.

"I'm in a hurry, " I said to the driver, as he, another snuff-dipper, gazed at me with a "what-do-you-mean" expression. "Let's go to the L & N," I said, pretending not to notice his scowl.

Resolutely, he slid across the seat from the steering wheel, and pointed in the same direction as the bigger snuff-dipper had pointed earlier.

"You hafta go down there," he told me as a young uniformed police officer rushed hopefully to his side.

ACROSS THE street a dusky sedan bearing police markings pulled to the curb and stopped with official curiosity.

Several dozen pairs of condemning eyes glared at me from the sidewalk as I pulled my bag from the cab and set it on the curb.

Exasperated, but still hopeful that I could make the train, I glanced back down to where the Harlem cab was supposed to appear. Nothing showed.

Out of hope then, and almost in a lather, I grabbed the bag and turned for the waiting room immediately behind me.

"Where ya going?" the young officer demanded curtly. I stopped and turned in his direction to answer.

"THAT'S the white waiting room," he told me with emphasis on a word.

"I believe it's the interstate waiting room," I said engagingly.

Turning in the direction of the "colored waiting room to point me an ultimatum, he saw, and so did I, what appeared to be my Harlem cab, at last.

The young officer walked pompously to two other officers who approached us.

Two colored fellows standing on the sidewalk near us (one heavily favoring his left knee) were quick to assure me that the "right" cab was approaching.

I GOT in and made the trip of six blocks in time to make a note of this harrassing harangue while awaiting the "next" train to the bus boycott Capital

Incidentally, I paid cash to the driver of the Harlem cab for the trip over to the L & N. He couldn't decide and wouldn't agree as to which part of my ticket was meant for him.

'NO REAL DISAPPOINTMENT'

Negro Leaders Accept Black's Decision Calmly

Alabama Journal

The refusal of Justice Black yesterday in Washington to speed up a U. S. Supreme Court decision to end segregation on Montgomery buses brought "no real disappointment" to leaders of the Negro bus boycott here.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. said, "We were optimistic enough to hope for the best, but realistic enough to know it was possible the court would deny the request, and we knew that that was the greater possibility."

Press 11-20-56

HEADS MIA

King is president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., coordinating body for the boycott that began Dec. 5. Out of it grew a federal suit on which the Supreme Court ruled a week ago that city and state bus segregation laws are unconstitutional.

Montgomery

The decision will be formally relayed to U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. of Montgomery about Dec. 12, a Supreme Court official said yesterday after Black refused a Negro request to shorten the normal delay. A permanent injunction against city bus segregation here will go into effect when the decision arrives.

Until then, "the protest will continue," King said. "We don't intend to return to segregated buses."

Boycotters voted a week ago to end their protest when the decision goes into effect. Meanwhile, they are walking to work and sharing rides with friends since a state court ban issued last week stopped their car pool transportation.

City officials announced after the court decision that they would use all legal means available to continue separate seating arrangements for Negroes on buses here.

They said this was necessary to preserve public safety and to promote order.

BROWNELL CALLS MEETING

Comment from Montgomery and Alabama officials was not immediately available on the call issued in Washington yesterday by Atty. Gen. Brownell for a conference of federal prosecutors in 14 Southern states on how to carry out the Supreme Court decree against racial segregation on buses.

In a letter to the prosecutors, Brownell said it is clear from the court's decision on the Montgomery case that racial discrimination against passengers on buses is "a crime against the United States."

The attorneys general of two Southern states were quick to react to Brownell's conference.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson of Mississippi said the conference "is just another instance of utter disregard of the rights of states."

In Florida, Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin said Brownell "will do more harm than good" if he attempts to force action to end segregated seating on intrastate buses in the South.

During the federal court hearing, all three members of the City Commission predicted that if bus segregation were ended in Montgomery it would lead to violence and bloodshed.

"It won't be safe on the streets" if segregation is done away with, said Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., a leader in the 11-month-old bus boycott which has cost Montgomery City Lines an estimated $750,000, said no decision has been reached on ending the segregation protest.

He said a mass meeting of Negroes is planned tomorrow night to consider the implications of the Supreme Court decision.

The decision, he added, "places a basic responsibility before the Negro and white community of Montgomery. All persons must recognize the difficulty of adjustment and seek through the principles of love and understanding good will to work in harmony with the new system."

King said "all persons of good will" will accept the Supreme Court ruling and seek to comply with it.

At Tuskegee, state Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County, executive secretary of the pro-segregation Alabama Association of Citizens Councils, predicted the decision would be the end of public transportation in Montgomery.

ENGELHARDT

"I don't believe the white people of Montgomery are going to accept any such mandate from the Supreme Court," he said.

"As far as I am concerned," he added, "they can move the Montgomery City Lines Inc. (which holds the Montgomery bus franchise), lock, stock and barrel to Washington, D. C."

Engelhardt, who owns a large plantation in heavily Negro populated Macon County, said it appears that "the Supreme Court is determined to build a federal oligarchy that will undermine the very foundation of these United States, and spread ill will and discord throughout the nation."

"The Supreme Court apparently will not be satisfied until government by the people, of the people and for the best interests of the majority of all the people

Decision Comes Like Bombshell

Birmingham

BY LYNNE BRANNEN AND HENRY BRADSHER

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 13 —A U. S. Supreme Court decision knocking the props from under city segregation laws fell like a bombshell on the first capital of the Confederacy today.

Although it had been expected, the decision which came the day after the usual Supreme Court reporting day, left many Montgomerians speechless.

Press 11-13-56

The City Commission declined comment as did Negro bus boycott leaders who were busy in court fighting an injunction aimed at putting their bus boycott car pool out of business.

Since Negroes made no attempt immediately to take advantage of the Supreme Court ruling, there were no indications that it might touch off any violence.

their petition in federal court was filed before the city got its request into state court.

Atty. Peter Hall of Birmingham also made this point:

If the car pool is illegal as the city contends, why haven't the drivers and dispatchers been arrested and tried in city court?

Post Herald

"They would have had the Negroes in jail long ago if it were illegal," Hall told the court.

Wed. 11-14-56

The Negro attorney raised that issue to support his claim that even if the motor pool were illegal, the city would have a remedy in its own courts and wouldn't be entitled to an injunction to stop it.

Ninety Negro leaders were indicted in state court last Spring for violation of Alabama's anti-boycott laws in connection with the bus protest. But no charges have been filed in city court for operating the car pool without a permit.

News of the Supreme Court's ruling on city and state bus segregation laws prompted a brief recess in the hearing when an Associated Press bulletin was shown to the judge and to opposing lawyers. None of them made any comment.

Among the first witnesses called after the hearing finally got under way was the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., an organization formed to support the boycott.

City Atty. Walter Knabe brought from King testimony that the Negro churches in Montgomery have financed the car pool, chaneling the money through the MIA.

The Baptist minister, who was one of the 90 indicted last Spring, said car pool drivers and dispatchers receive weekly "contributions" for their services. He also testified "some 17 or 18" church-owned station wagons are used along with private automobiles to provide transportation for the boycotters.

Despite the church contributions, the Negro lawyer insisted the car pool is a "voluntary" plan and that riders pay no charge for their transportation.

"It must be shown that they are used for hire," said Hall. "Otherwise the law will not apply and they are plain individuals, persons or corporations with the right to use the streets and haul anyone they wish."

The city in its petition for injunction made no allegation that the Negroes are charged for their rides. It contended simply that the car pool is a "private enterprise" being operated without a city license.

Judge Won't Intervene In Car Pool Ban

Post Herald

Birmingham

Refuses Injunction To Negroes After Share-Ride Bar

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 14 (AP) — U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. late today refused to intervene to stop enforcement of a state court injunction against continued use of a car pool by Montgomery Negro bus boycotters.

Press 11-15-56

He denied a request by the Negroes for a temporary restraining order to prevent the City of Montgomery from interfering with car pool operations.

The city obtained an injunction in state court yesterday against further use of the motor pool, even though the Supreme Court has outlawed bus segregation and the 11-month-old boycott in Montgomery seemed near an end.

Johnson disagreed with the contention of city authorities that the federal court has no jurisdiction to intervene, but he said "the circumstances of this case do not justify the court's intervention."

The federal judge said that the Negroes have not been threatened with any injury besides that incidental to the enforcement of the now outlawed city bus segregation ordinance. Further, he said they could get no relief from his court that they cannot also get through the state courts and an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Tonight they met to decide whether to end their 11-month-old protest movement in view of the U.S. Supreme Court decision yesterday that Montgomery city and Alabama state bus segregation laws are unconstitutional.

The official spokesman of the boycotters, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., indicated that voice votes of boycotters probably would favor ending the anti-segregation protest.

King, president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. that had co-ordinated the boycott since it began last Dec. 5, said he would urge at the mass meetings that Negroes exercise "calm reasonableness and restraint."

"We will not ask our people to go to the back of the bus and sit as they did formerly," the Baptist minister said. "We will ask them not to abuse their new opportunity with irresponsible actions."

At today's hearing, the Negroes asked Johnson, who participated in the decision upheld yesterday by the U. S. Supreme Court, to let them continue their car pool so long as the boycott continues.

They contended any interference with it would be a violation of their civil and constitutional rights.

State Circuit Judge Eugene Carter ruled against their argument yesterday in a similar hearing. The city's petition claimed that the car pool is an illegal business run on public streets in competition with the city-franchised bus company.

BUS PROTEST LEADERS GIVEN UNUSUAL PRAISE

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(SNS)— A speaker on an Omega National Achievement Week forum Sunday night, Nov. 18 at Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, suggested as a technique furthering the democratic and Christian heritage that you "create good feelings wherever you go."

Two awards and eight citations were made to persons who shouldered the load in the bus protest, challenged vote denials and assisted in the promotion of sports.

Dr. R. D. Crockett, representing Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity on the panel advocated the create-good-feelings technique. Approaching the general theme, "Wanted: Techniques for Strengthening and Furthering Our Democratic and Christian Heritage" from the angle of philosophy and psychology, Dr. Crockett counseled that "you think before you act....think correctly ....think about what the facts mean." He asserted, "do not live by feelings alone...learn to appreciate differences in others."

He urged that the Negro group perform and display themselves in a way "to get people to feel better toward us." He asserted that there were rights other than government provided right. "We have basic, God-given rights," he added.

Leading off the discussion, Jerone Auls, representing Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, explored the economic tools that could be used. He listed selected spending and planned savings, ownership of business, and ownership in existing business.

Dr. Ralph J. Bryson of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity discussed how through drama, music and literature, the heritage can be fortified and flavored.

The Rev. Mr. Robert Graetz, pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church, discussing spiritual techniques, advocated "an open demonstration of the power of love." He placed emphasis on "the power of love to change us," as well as the other group. "We must make changes among ourselves," he declared. He detailed some of the suggested changes as improved standards, correction of faults, removal of community sins, stabilize family life.

He said "we must approach each other and try to get each other to improve" his person, family life and his outlook on his neighbors. We must demand higher standards and work to raise the standards, the Rev. Graetz said. He asserted that the group should make family life stable. As individuals, he added, "we must have Christ in our hearts."

J. D. Thompson, Sigma Phi Chapter basileus, served as moderator of the symposium.

Prof. J. E. Pierce presented citations to Mrs. Aurelia Browder, Mrs. Louise Champney, Miss Claudette Colvin, Mrs. Mattie Hamilton, Mrs. Susie McDonald, Mrs. Rosa Parks, Mrs. Mary Louise Smith and William (Kid) Franklin.

The "Omega Man of the Year" was presented Atty. Fred D. Gray, chief counsel on the bus protest cases and the "Citizen of the Year" award was presented to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, which has shepherded the bus-riders protest. He is pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church.

Dr. King and Mrs. Parks were absent because of speaking engagements out of the city. Dr. G. W. Jones, vice-president of MIA accepted the award for Rev. King and Mrs. Parks' mother accepted for Mrs. Parks.

Basileus Thompson presented a check for $100 to Dr. Jones on behalf of Sigma Phi Chapter.

Bus Company To Continue Segregation

BY HENRY S. BRADSHER
Associated Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 14—The manager of the Montgomery bus company said today his drivers will continue to enforce segregated seating until a state injunction requiring it is dissolved.

J. H. Bagley, manager of the Montgomery City Lines Inc., said the injunction issued last May by Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones still stands despite a U. S. Supreme Court decision yesterday that Montgomery city and Alabama state bus segregation laws are unconstitutional.

A source close to state Circuit Court said bus company attorneys might ask the court to dissolve the state injunction in the next few days. Dissolution was expected to be granted on the basis of the Supreme Court ruling.

Company attorneys were not available for comment. Bagley said he did not know what they might do.

A federal injunction that would override Jones' order still was suspended despite the high court's ruling.

The injunction banning enforcement of the bus segregation laws was suspended last June during appeal of a ruling by a three-judge Federal Court panel here that the Supreme Court upheld yesterday.

U. S. Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives of New Orleans said yesterday that official notification of the Supreme Court's action probably would take two or three weeks to reach Montgomery.

When it did, Rives said, the federal injunction would go into effect.

Thus, unless the bus company moves to knock it out, Jones' injunction might continue to stand for another few weeks.

Clarification Of Bus Ruling Asked By City

The city of Montgomery yesterday petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court in Washington, D.C., for a "clarification" of its Nov. 13 decision banning racial segregation on local buses.

The city, according to The Associated Press, also said the tribunal should reconsider its ruling and grant a hearing to attorneys on each side of the case.

The court's November ruling was given without the usual hearing of agruments and merely affirmed a decision by a special three-judge U.S. District Court in Montgomery that such segregation violates the Constitution.

Last Monday the state of Alabama filed a petition which asked the Supreme Court to reconsider its decision. The special court's ruling struck down city and state laws requiring segregation.

The city's petition said the Nov. 13 ruling left unanswered a question of whether the high court had overruled the old "separate but equal" doctrine established by an earlier decision known as the Plessy vs. Ferguson case.

"The city of Montgomery, motivated by a sincere desire to preserve segregation on public buses as far as possible within the framework of the Constitution of the United States," yesterday's petition said, "is left without guidance as to whether this particular form of segregation violates the Constitution, or whether all forms of segregation of the races on public transportation systems are invalid.

"A possible deduction from the Supreme Court's order is that Plessy vs. Ferguson has been overruled but this court has not yet said so."

The petition also said that the Supreme Court in earlier decisions had "held firm to the principle that in the absence of a showing of irreparable injury, both great and immediate, federal courts must not enjoin the enforcement of state and local criminal laws."

OLD PRINCIPLE

The city said it was also impossible to determine whether this old principle also had been overruled and asked:

"If local and state officials are to be subjected to federal injunction when they act in good faith to enforce the provisions of criminal enactments, are they, under the Supreme Court's decision of Nov. 13, to be subjected to damage suits under the civil rights act?"

The petition concluded:

"These matters deserve the elucidation which will come from a full argument of this case on the merits."

The petitions filed by the city and the state act as an automatic stay on the Supreme Court's official notice of the Nov. 13 decision, pending its ruling on whether to grant or deny the new request. The high tribunal could act on the petitions at its next session on Monday. If it were to deny the petition then, the high court's official notice would go the the special U.S. Distrct Court in Montgomery on Dec. 12 or 13.

ALABAMA ASKS CASE REOPENING

Reversal of Bus Segregation Decision Sought

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3 (AP)—The state of Alabama today petitioned the Supreme Court to reconsider its Nov. 13 decision ending racial segregation on local buses.

State Atty. Gen. John Patterson protested that the Supreme Court's decision had "wrongfully taken" from Alabama the state's police power.

The high tribunal's decision affirmed a ruling by a special three-judge U.S. District Court in Montgomery, Ala., striking down state and Montgomery city laws requiring separation of the races on buses.

Inferiority Not Implied

Patterson's request for reconsideration said the state respectfully submitted "that laws permitting, and even requiring the separation of the races in places where they are liable to be brought into contact do not necessarily imply the inferiority of either race to the other."

Prior to the Nov. 13 Supreme Court decision, Patterson stated, such segregation laws have for years "been generally, even universally, recognized as within the competency of the state legislatures in the exercise of the police power."

"This," said Patterson, "has been the expressed opinion of many distinguished and learned justices who have heretofore sat on the Supreme Court."

The attorney general added that there now exists a "no man's land in which the state, under the Supreme Court's opinion, is powerless to protect property and prevent breaches of the peace which will inevitably result from the court's decision."

Tenth Amendment Ignored

Patterson said the tenth amendment to the constitution, which says that powers not given to the federal government are reserved to the states, "has been written out of the constitution" by the Nov. 13 decision. He asked that the high tribunal reinstate the principles of law outlined in the old case of Plessy vs. Ferguson. In that case an earlier Supreme Court first mentioned the doctrine of separate but equal facilities. The doctrine has been struck down by recent decisions of the high tribunal.

The petition filed today may act as an automatic stay of the Supreme Court's official notice to the special court of its Nov. 14 decision. Under normal routine the Supreme Court clerk would send the notice about Dec. 12 or 13. However, the court could act on the rehearing petition next Mongo to the special court on Dec. 12 or 13.

BUS SEGREGATION IN MONTGOMERY ILLEGAL

Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 11-14-56

By FRANK B. ALLEN

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that racial segregation on city and other intra-state buses is unconstitutional.

It did so by upholding a district court decision which declared that state and local ordinances to enforce segregation on Montgomery, Ala., buses were invalid.

Earlier this year, Montgomery was the scene of a prolonged boycott of city buses by Negroes protesting segregation practices.

In its decision Tuesday, the Supreme Court cited earlier decisions which outlawed segregation in schools and at public golf courses, parks and swimming pools.

Last spring, the coure refused to review a case in which a Columbia, S. C. Negro woman was allowed to sue a bus company because of a segregation dispute.

LAWS ILLEGAL

In the Montgomery case, the district court ruled by a two-to-one majority that the Alabama state and city laws were unconstitutional and said: "The separate but equal doctrine can no longer be safely followed as a correct statement of the law."

Both the state of Alabama and the city of Montgomery appealed the ruling by challenging whether a federal district court had the right to prevent enforcement of state and local laws.

OTHER DECISIONS

In a series of ther decisions Tuesday, the Supreme Court:

1. Refused to consider an appeal by Dr. Sam Sheppard, prominent Bay Village, Ohio, osteopath who was found guilty at a sensational 1954 trial of slaying his wife.

2. Agreed to hear an appeal by former Foreign Service Official John Stewart Service who was dismissed by the State Department in 1951 on loyalty grounds.

3. Turned down an effort by Utah Gov. J. Bracken Lee to block use of government funds for foreign funds for foreign economic aid. Lee, who was defeated for re-election this year, tried to enjoin the spending of such funds on grounds they do not fall in the constitutional categories of "paying the debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

4. Agreed to hear arguments on whether a state can forbid its employes from belonging to a labor union. At issue is an Alabama state law.

Segregation Struggle Seen Failure Bound

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

By International News Service

The South's long struggle to maintain segregated public transportation appear heading for failure Tuesday in the wake of the latest Supreme Court ruling.

Prominent legal spokesmen agreed that the decision by the high tribunal upholding Federal District Court ruling outlawing bus segregation in Montgomery, Ala., had all but ended segregation on buses, trains and planes in the south.

Attorney Generals for South Carolina and Georgia and a spokesman for the Alabama attorney generl voiced the opinion that the "pattern" had been set.

DID NOT THINK

But C. C. Jack Owen, President of the Alabama Public Service Commission, issued a statement in Biloxi, Miss., which he said he did not think "the people of Alabama would abide by the Supreme Court's decision."

"It is, he said, "against the tradition and heritage of the south".

However, South Carolina attorney gerenal T. C. Callison said when informed or the ruling:

"It will, of course, break down segregation in transportation. What the court has done in this case, we think, will be the last word on it." He added that he did not know what plan of action his state would not take.

WOMAN'S CASE

Callison said that the case of a Columbia Negro woman against the South Carolina Gas and Electric Company, which operates Columbia buses, was not directly effected by the Supreme Court ruling.

CAR-POOL PROHIBITED IN MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 11-14-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — U. S. Circuit Judge Eugene Carter granted a temporary injunction prohibiting the use of car-pools in the Montgomery Bus Boycott.

The need for the boycott seemed at an end, however, barring hasty legal maneuvers on the part of the state in conjunction with the private utility companies, as the Supreme Court issued its decision overriding the state laws against segregation on buses in the city.

The official plan of action on the part of Alabama State officials and boycott leaders concerning Tuesday's ruling could not be determined as neither group would offer comment.

Last Spring the Supreme Court refused to review the decision of a Federal District Court that Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown had a right to sue the bus company. Mrs. Brown, who is suing the bus company for $25,000 damages because of difficulty with a bus driver about seating arrangements, is now appealing her case before the U. S. Court of Appeals.

Daily World

Georgia attorney general Eugene Cook, while pointing out that the decision will have no immediate effect on transporation in Georgia, he said.

Wed 11-14-56

PRINCIPLE ESTABLISHED

"The decision establishes a principal of law and will probably be followed in all cases where similar suits are brought.

p. 2

I'm not surprised at any decision the court might rule now to follow through on their pattern of desegregation."

Cook said that any decision of the Supreme Court effects only the parties concerned directly in the case. However, he said, district courts will now probably simply cite Tuesday ruling in making future rulings.

IN ALABAMA

In Alabama, attorney general John Patterson was out of town until Wednesday, but an assistant attorney general said:

"I can't answer at this time whether segregation will stop immediately on Montgomery buses."

Agreeing that the ruling had ended futher legal proceedings in the segregation fight, he said that much depended on whether the owners of the Montgomery bus company "will give up their franchise or not." He said the franchise was strictly between the company and the city and that the state had no hand in the matter.

Montgomery police commissioner Clyde Sellers refused to make a statement before consulting with the city attorney. And Mayor James Morgan said the same thing a short while later.

Negro leaders and attorneys, who led the fight to breakdown Montgomery bus segregation, were in court Tuesday defending their right to boycott buses and use car pools to get Negroes about town and were unavailable for comment.

Rev. King, Jr. Lauds Decision Of High Court

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr, reached late Tuesday in Montgomery, Ala., declared: "We are deeply grateful to hear of the momentous decision of the Supreme Court. If we will seek with understanding and good will, and the deep spirit of Christian love to work out the new opportunity, we will be able to integrate buses without violence or friction.

Asked if the group would comply with a local ruling which abolishes the car-pool which has been the apparent backbone of the boycott, Rev. King said:

"The car-pool will stop, but the boycott will not. We are complying with the injunction of the court."

Rev. King said a mass meeting will be held tonight in Montgomery to plot a new course of action.

He added, that after the high court decision, "I don't see how they can continue to segregate the buses."

City Requests Car Pool Halt

Sat. 11-3-56 Montgomery, Ala.

By JO ANN FLIRT

Negro bus boycotters and Montgomery city officials squared off yesterday for a legal battle over car pools, but the fireworks will be delayed about two weeks.

City authorities went into Circuit Court here with their promised request for an injunction to stop the car pool operations. Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, declining to rule immediately, set a hearing for Nov. 13.

About the same time, Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., in U.S. District Court, denied a previously filed motion for an emergency restraining order to prevent the city from interfering with the Negroes' transportation system.

The judge ordered a hearing for Nov. 14, however, on a companion request for a temporary injunction against the City Commission. A temporary restraining order, Johnson explained, could be issued in federal court without hearing. An injunction cannot.

Explaining his decision, Johnson said the Negroes failed to show that refusal to grant the immediate restraining order would "subject the plaintiffs to immediate and irrepairable injury, loss and damage."

City Atty. Walter Knabe, in a petition delivered about 10:30 p.m. Thursday night to the home of Register in Chancery George H. Jones, asked Judge Carter to outlaw the Negro motor pool as a "public nuisance" and a "private enterprise" being operated without a license and without approval of the city.

Knabe said he sent the petition to city officials late Thursday afternoon and did not personally file the document with Register Jones that night.

The petition was docketed on books at the county courthouse yesterday (Friday) but was dated Nov. 1 (Thursday).

Jones said that since the petition reached him before midnight it could be considered as filed Nov. 1.

The petition said the motor pool, which includes church-owned station wagons as well as private cars, is operated over regular and irregular routes; that the Negores have purchased and hired vehicles, and that drivers and dispatchers are paid for their services.

Negro Attys. Fred Gray and Charles Langford, in their motion in federal court, said the car pool is a voluntary share-the-ride service provided without charge to the riders.

Advertiser P. 12

Any effort to break up the pool, they protested, would violate "the civil and constitutional rights" of the Negroes and is calculated to compel them to ride the segregated buses they are boycotting.

Defendants in the city's suit are the Montgomery Improvement Assn., an organization formed to support the bus boycott when it started last Dec. 5; 14 Negro churches and 27 individuals.

In the first official indication of the economic impact of the long boycott, the city said in its petition yesterday that it had lost $15,000 in revenue as a direct result of the mass refusal of Negroes to ride the buses.

The petition by the City of Montgomery is directed against:

The Montgomery Improvement Association, a corporation; Zion Hill Baptist Church, a corporation; Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, a corporation; Holt Street Baptist Church, a corporation; Church, Mt. Gilead Church; Oak Hall Street Baptist Church, a corporation; Beulah Baptist Church; Lilly Baptist Church; Bethel Baptist Church; Canon Hill Baptist Church; First Baptist Street AME Zion Church; M. L. King Jr.; Erna A. Dungee; E. D. Nixon; B. J. Simms; Hazel R. Gregory; Fletcher Smith; Clarence Moore; Mentha Johnson; H. H. Hubbard; H. J. Palmer; J. H. Cherry; B. M. Averhart; A. H. Juffman; A. Murphy; S. P. McBride; W. J. Johnson; Matthew Kennedy; A. Sanders; Willie James Kemp; Lewis Christburg; S. Heard; J. W. Hays; R. J. Glasco; M. W. Richburg; J. G. Marcus; Thomas McCloud; W. Moss.

CONSPIRACY CHARGED

Gray and Langford charged in their injunction request yesterday that the city is conspiring to "interfere with the civil and constitutional rights" of Montgomery Negroes who have refused to ride city buses since last Dec. 5.

The car pool which at one time numbered 250 to 300 privately owned automobiles was devised shortly after the boycott began as a means of providing transportation.

Negro leaders asked the city for permission to operate a bus service of their own but were turned down.

In recent months, 20 or more church-operated station wagons have joined the car pool along with the privately owned autos.

The petition in federal court contends the motor pool is legal and operated on a voluntary basis without charge to the riders.

The petition Friday, filed in Circuit Court by City Attorney Walter J. Knabe, was directed against the churches and the MIA.

The plea said the pools were "private enterprise" and as such came under city regulations. Therefore, the city said they were illegal because they were operating "without first obetaining city commission approval, without paying license, without securing a franchise and because they use drivers who are not the holders of valid operating licenses."

It also charged the pools constituted a "public nusiance" under the same charges and because the cars were operated by persons "without adequate finances or insurance to protect passengers and other users of city streets. The operators are not morally or by experience qualified to use city streets for such purposes," the petition said.

City Also Asks Damage

Damages, to be determined by the court, were also asked in the petition. It said exisiting "businesses which hold franchises" such as the bus line and taxi companies, had lost about "$15,000 because of the pool operation."

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter set a hearing on the petition for Nov. 13.

In turning down MIA attorneys' request for an immediate restraining order, the district court said their petition did not show that the failure to grant the order "will subject the complaintants to an immediate irreparable injury or loss." Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., did, however, set a hearing for a temporary injunction against the city for Nov. 14.

The Negroes' petition said such action as taken by the city was a "conspiracy by the city to interfere with the civil and constitutional rights of Negroes." They also contended the car pools were legal, were operated on a voluntary basis and no charge is made for transportation.

Court Asked To Block Ban On Car Pools

Bus-boycotting Montgomery Negroes beat city authorities to the punch yesterday and asked for a Federal court injunction to block any interference with their car pool operations.

Ala.

The city commission several days ago served notice of intentions to seek an order in state court to stop the Negroes from continued use of the motor pool which has provided transportation during the 11-month-old boycott of segregated city buses.

But before any action could be taken in court, Negro Attys. Fred Gray and Charles Langford petitioned U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. to prevent city officials or any others from interfering with the car pool service.

TOOK NO ACTION

Johnson took no immediate action on the request.

The Negro attorneys cited a city commission resolution unanimously adopted Tuesday instructing city attorneys to take "any legal action they deem necessary" to stop the car pool from takink Negroes to and from work.

Even before that, however, the commission disclosed last Friday that it was contemplating a court suit against the motor pool operations. The comment then came in reply to a threat from an independent labor spokesman, Jack D. Brock, to take court action if the city refused.

MONTGOMERY, Oct. 31 (AP)—The driver of a station wagon used to transport bus-boycotting Montgomery Negroes was arrested today on a charge of pulling into the path of a Highway Patrol car on an emergency run.

Burl Mack Averhart, a Negro, was charged with failure to yield the right of way to an emergency vehicle and released on $100 bond. A hearing was set for Saturday in City Court.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said Averhart has 15 previous traffic arrests on his driver's record.

Pending U. S. Supreme Court Decision Is The Problem

Thurs. 11-1-56

IS THE City Commission's new attack on the bus boycott another blunder like the arrest of the 90-odd Negro ministers, which most whites now consider a folly?

Montgomery, Ala.

It is certainly true that if the Negro car pools are furnishing jitney service to boycotters in violation of law and in unfair competition with licensed transportation facilities, an injustice is at work.

But the timing of this legal action is questionable. Had the action been taken a year ago with promptness, it would have been accepted as orderly, reasonable procedure. But this is almost a year later and the action comes to pass through discovery of a section in the 1901 Constitution of Alabama. The action will mean another drubbing and further misinterpretation of Montgomery in other sections.

There is nothing in the experience of Montgomery or Tallahassee to suggest that this action, whatever the court rules, will cause colored citizens to resume bus patronage.

But the chief reality of the situation does not seem even to have been mentioned. In a few weeks it is expected that the U.S. Supreme Court is going to rule on Montgomery bus segregation and every citizen is qualified to be his own lawyer in predicting that the court will rule bus segregation unlawful.

It is our understanding that if the court so rules, Negro leaders will petition the bus company to restore bus service on an unsegregated basis on routes used by Negroes. It is also our understanding that the bus company will announce its willingness to do so.

Then what? We certainly cannot imagine the three city commissioners ending their political careers by agreeing to desegregated buses. Montgomery is set against that. But it leaves them to grapple with the order of a federal court. How all that will turn out we do not profess to know, except that there will be grievous results if an attempt is made to force race mixing.

But the point remains that the court decision is expected soon and that will be the critical development. Nobody is paying any attention to the boycott any more. Why not let the sleepy situation alone in the brief time remaining before the court decision gives us an entirely new situation to grapple with? A "do something if it's wrong" rashness hasn't gotten us anywhere before.

The Boycotters Need Help

Call Fri. 12-14-56

For the first time in the year that they have been walking in protest against bus segregation, the boycotters of Montgomery, Ala., are asking their fellow citizens and sympathizers in other parts of the country for financial assistance.

Kansas City, Mo. P. 18

For 12 long months, the Montgomery boycotters have walked to and from work rather than sit in the back of busses. They have been arrested and put in jail, they have been tried in court and fined. Many have lost their jobs. They have been otherwise persecuted. The car pool which they developed as a substitute for regular bus service has been declared illegal.

Up to now, the Montgomery citizens have borne the bulk of the expense of the campaign. But they have now reached the end of their rope. They need help. The funds received will be used to help "marked" men who because they were leaders in the boycott will be unable to get work to support their families. Some of the funds will be used to appeal the cases of boycott leaders, many of them ministers, who have been found guilty of conspiracy charges.

Any money sent to the Montgomery boycotters will be money well spent. The citizens of Montgomery have given an effective demonstration of the power of passive resistance. Not a blow has been struck in the year-long protest at Montgomery. The non-violent approach has proved powerful.

The courage and the determination of the Montgomery people have been lauded by Negro citizens all over the country during this past year. Now those who have been loud in their praise by word of mouth have an opportunity to show in a tangible way how much they admire the boycotters. It would be a fine tribute to the men who chose to walk if tens of thousands of persons would send them a Christmas present of a few dollars each.

Funds should be sent to the Montgomery Improvement Association, 530-C South Union St., Montgomery, Ala.

Add the Montgomery boycotters to your Christmas list! You will feel good doing it.

ICC's Ban On Segregation Brings Railroad Directive

Tues. 7-10-56

P. 7

Louisville and Nashville Railroad will remove signs designating white and Negro waiting rooms at all of its Alabama terminals today.

Montgomery

W. F. Glover, trainmaster for the L&N in Montgomery, said he had not received definite instructions to remove the segregation signs but expected the orders early today.

Ala.

The L&N has displayed the signs on its separate waiting rooms since the Union Station was erected.

SEPARATE ROOMS

Employes at the Greyhound Bus Station and Trailways Bus Terminal here have received no instructions to remove the signs. Both have separate white and Negro waiting rooms.

The L&N order is in compliance with an ICC order banning segregation in interstate travel.

The reports the L&N is removing the signs were confirmed by officials of the company at Mobile and Birmingham.

An L&N representative at Mobile said the instructions came from L&N headquarters at Louisville, Ky., Flomaton, Pensacola, Fla., and Chattahoochee, Fla., are other terminals of the L&N in addition to Mobile, Montgomery, Birmingham and Decatur, main points.

WITHIN STATE

Ending of segregation in passenger travel applies only to passengers crossing state lines. Segregated facilities will be provided for passengers whose destination is within the state of origin.

In Birmingham, a delegation of Southeastern Grehound bus drivers was assured by Public Safety Commissioner Robert Lindbergh, head of the police department, that they would not be arrested if they failed to enforce segregated seating on the buses because of the ICC order and company instructions.

NO PROTEST HEARD

No protest had been heard from Montgomery drivers last night.

Lindbergh took a firm stand on the issue. He declared, "As long as our ordinances are on the books concerning this matter, we are going to enforce them."

He said there would be "plenty of policemen" on hand at the train terminal today to enforce the ordinance. Lindbergh said the "ICC is not a judicial body and therefore cannot abrogate Birmingham city ordinances."

Montgomery Commissioner Clyde Sellers last night declined to comment as to whether the city plans to enforce its segregation laws at the L&N station. station.

Sellers said he wants a "chance to study the matter further" before making a statement.

APSC declares segregation law will be enforced

News Sat. 1-14-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 14—(AP)—Alabama's segregation laws will be enforced on carriers not immediately concerned with a recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling. P. 2

Jack Owen, president of the Public Service Commission, said Friday that Alabama's segregation laws "will be enforced" and "must be complied with."

Birmingham

HE SAID these laws must be complied with where there is no conflict with the recent ICC order banning separate public waiting rooms and other facilities.

Ala.

Railroads concerned in the ICC order which operate in Alabama are the Frisco, Louisville & Nashville, Atlantic Coast Line, Seaboard, Southern, Illinois Central and Gulf, Mobile & Ohio.

Some carriers already have adopted new practices with respect to separation of the races in trains, buses and waiting rooms.

OWEN QUOTED from a letter which he mailed to carriers in Alabama. It said:

"You have already been appraised of the Alabama law with respect to such matters. And you are hereby advised that the ICC decisions are not directed to any line in Alabama.

"They are only directed to specific rail carriers in this state. Therefore, our state statutes are still intact and will remain in effect until properly struck down by an appropriate authority.

"IT IS NOT necessary to relate the several provisions of law, but if there is any feature about which you are not informed, you are hereby directed to fully inform yourself.

"I order that there be no misunderstanding, the state law concerning this matter will be enforced as to buses with respect to both interstate and intrastate travel and as to railroads the law will be enforced as to interstate and intrastate travel on those lines not parties to the recent complaint case before the ICC."

EARLY news accounts yesterday of the Alabama Public Service Commission's order reminding carriers of the state's segregation laws conveyed the erroneous impression that PSC had challenged the Interstate Commerce Commission's jurisdiction over travel between the states. This is not true. Sat. 1-14-56

The ICC segregation order affected only those railroads (plus a single bus company not operating in Alabama) which were parties to the action. P. 1-A

Letters which went out to Alabama bus companies and railroads yesterday:

¶Reminded all bus companies of state law relating to segregation whether for intrastate (within the state) or interstate (between this and other states) travel. Montgomery

¶Reminded those railroads which were named as parties in the ICC case that Alabama's segregation laws relating to intrastate travel still apply, but without challenging ICC's authority over interstate travel. Ala.

¶Reminded those railroads not named as parties for the ICC suit that they must abide by state laws for both interstate and intrastate travel.

In short it was not another secession order. PSC simply reasserted Alabama's sovereignty in areas not yet invaded by federal pretensions of authority.

Bus Boycott Probe Hits At Faculty

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 7-21-56

By AL DUNMORE

TALLAHASEE, Fla.—Reprisals, in form of action against members of the Florida A. and M. University staff and faculty, were indicated here as the Mayor of Tallahassee requested the State Board of Control to investigate participation in the bus boycott by state employes.

Great concern has swept this community following the dissolution of negotiations between the Intercivic Council and the City Commissioners.

It also is believed that segregation legislation will take priority over all other matters before the Legislature adjourns July 23.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Negotiations in the Tallahassee bus boycott were completely broken off here as members of the City Commission announced that they had nothing further to discuss with the boycott leaders.

Announcing that under no circumstances would they agree to integrated seating on public transportation in any form or manner, the city commissioners stated they would give police protection to any Negro who desired to ride the buses, that the bus lines would begin operation again with routes so designed to service the white areas.

PRIOR TO THE discontinuance of the bus service following the boycott, the two principal lines serviced by the City Transit Service were those lines routed through Frenchtown, heavily populated Negro area, and the Florida A&M campus.

The community of 40,000 has 15,000 permanent Negro residents. The Inter-Civic Council, headed by the Rev. C. K. Steel, a Baptist minister, and the Rev. K. S. Dupont, an AME minister, had held out in its negotions with the city commissioners for full integrated seating on all bus lines.

The commissioners had agreed that on bus lines servicing Negro communities, there would be three seats in the front reserved for white passengers which would be relinquished to Negro riders if the bus became completely filled and no white passengers occupied the seats. The Inter-Civic Council rejected this compromise, calling for a "first come, first served" policy on all lines.

IN A FULL page advertisement appearing in both the weekly and daily local newspapers, the Inter-Civic Council had previously pointed out that Negro riders were paying some [illegible],000 annually out of the [illegible] income of $170,000 reported by the bus company. In return, they felt they deserved equitable seating and treatment as citizens.

A spokesman for the Inter-City Council, following the announcement of the city commissioners, stated that under no condition would they relinquish their position in spite of the fact that the nogotiations had been ended.

At a mass meeting Wednesday night the group re-endorsed its stand for full integrated seating and contributed some $272 to the council's fund. A member of the council unofficially told the Courier that the group was pledged to a non-violent approach.

IN THE MEANTIME a rumor is being circulated that attempts are being made to oust the three Negro members of the Tallahassee Police Department, although the chief of police denies this. One of the officers, however, faces suspension on a charge of insubordination.

BIRMINGHAM (ANP)—Next in line in the campaign against segregated seating on local public transportation is the city of Birmingham, which last week received a request to institute a "first-come, first-served" policy on all its buses, and also to begin hiring Negro drivers.

The request was submitted by the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

DRIVERS OF CAR POOLS ARRESTED

Boycotters Charged with Operating Illegally

Thurs. 4-23-56

TALLAHASSE, Fla., Aug. 22 (AP) —Four drivers were arrested today in the start of a police crackdown on car pool drivers transporting bus boycotters.

The action brought a complaint of "unfair" from a boycott leader, who said the action would serve only to encourage more boycotters to walk instead of riding car pool automobiles.

The drivers were docketed on charges of driving cars without "for hire" tags and released on bond pending hearings in police

Negro Inter-Civic Council

Rev. C.* K. Stelle, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, which is sponsoring the boycott, said the action was taken in an effort to force boycotters back on the busses.

The city commission issued instructions for the arrests on the basis of a ruling by State Attorney General Richard W. Ervin that automobile operated for car pool purposes during the boycott came within the classification of "for hire" vehicles.

A "for hire" tag for the average car would cost about $15 more than a regular license plate. The city commissoin also can limit the number of "for hire" vehicles which can operate in the city.

Preacher Arrested

Among those arrested was Rev. K. S. Dupont, vice-president of the Inter-Civic Council. Dupont also was charged with operating a car with defective brakes and without a tail light.

City Manager Arvah Hopkins said police had been instructed to start picking up the car pool drivers because their cars are not inspected for mechanical safety and because if involved in an accident their insurance would not be applicable.

Hopkins said the crackdown was aimed only at drivers in the organized car pool. He said the motorist who makes a practice of giving his neighbor a lift to the office would not be stopped.

Pickups at Bus Stops

Police Chief Frakn Stoutamire said an investigation had shown the car pool drivers were picking up passengers by pulling up at bus stops just in advance of the scheduled arrival of a bus.

The bus boycott was called on May 28 in protest against segregated seating, which the city commission contends is required by state law.

The Cities Transit Company had reported that the number of Negro riders was increasing, but Steele said Negro riders were not in large numbers.

Board Rules Against Bus In Tallassee

TALLASSEE, Ala., Aug. 23 — A school bus controversy involving the Tallaweka section of this city has recently arisen as a result of early July action taken by the Elmore County Board of Education.

The move made by the board, and only at a recent date made known to the city, would abolish Fred Kelley's contract to transport students from the Tallaweka section to the Tallassee publics, affecting a sizable number of enrolees.

BOARD LETTER

Kelley was posted of the action in a letter from County Superintendent J. Heflin Nolen, that read, "Board members have decided that the short route on the contract of $75 per month should be abolished."

It also stated that these students were within the two-mile limit and legal funds could not be collected from the state to accomodate this area.

Parents in the excluded area have complained to the extent that a local source contacted Nolen on the matter and his immediate reply was, "no funds are collected from the state for transporting children within the two-mile limit The exceptional service has been in effect only in Tallassee."

PARENTS ORGANIZE

The rebuttal offered by Noler reportedly is creating an atmosphere that indicates immediate action in an "organized manner to compete" with the situation.

The distance from the Tallaweka area to the public schools of Tallassee is within the two-mile ruling, but means that students would walk the highway, since there are no sidewalks along the route. This will be the basis of argument for the concerned citizenry, leaders report.

Way cleared for Rev. King appeal

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The way was cleared last week for appeal of the case of the Rev. Martin L. King, president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, to the State Supreme Court.

Completion of the 560-page transcript of court records in the trial of the minister, convicted last March of illegal boycotting, was announced last week.

It cost between $1,400 and $1,500.

By arranging for the King case to serve as a test case for the more than 90 other colored persons indicted in the boycott, attorneys for the boycotters saved hundreds of dollars in court and other legal costs which would have resulted had all of the defendants been tried separately.

THE GREAT bulk of court records, so large that an ordinary suitcase is required to deliver them, includes a separate file of the testimony given by the Rev. Mr. King.

Copies of the Rev. Mr. King's testimony were requested by John Patterson, state attorney general; W. F. Thetford, circuit solicitor, and NAACP lawyers who represented the Rev. Mr. King at the trial.

In addition to the thick stacks of transcript sheets containing the court testimony, the large number of exhibits introduced as evidence adds to the collection of court material that will be used in the appeal.

INCLUDED among the exhibits are business records of the Montgomery Improvement Association, photostatic copies of bank deposit slips used by the association and other miscellaneous business papers.

The noted Baptist minister was convicted under an ancient law that made boycotting illegal. He and the others were accused of illegally sponsoring, promoting or participating in an illegal boycott against the City Transit Lines here.

TALLAHASSEE, — Members of the executive committee of the Inter-Civic Council are due to meet later this week with top officers of the NAACP to discuss the future of the bus boycott here.

Among the subjects for discussion will be question of possible suits against the Tallhassee Police Department, an ICC official told the AFRO Saturday.

The suits if filed, will be in connection with what ICC officials term the "illegal detenton and questoning" of car owners and passengers by police.

THERIES LINDSAY, attorney for the council, said particular attention will be given to the arrest and questioning of Mrs. Mamie Williams of 302 Van Buren St.

Mrs. Williams, who is pregnant, was taken from an automobile Friday morning and held and questioned for two hours.

She told the AFRO: "I was forced to sign a statement in order to get out. I don't know what was on it."

The mother of four children, she is the wife of George Williams, a city employe.

Mrs. Williams further said that as a result of her experience with the police she had to see a physician.

DAN SPEED, chairman of the Council's transportation committee said a total of 28 persons were questioned by police during Friday and Saturday, including six car owners.

The owners, who were driving their own automobiles when stopped, are the Rev. Lawrence Daymond, pastor, Macedonia Baptist Church; John Cook, 2220 Keith St., a contractor; Alonzo Colquitt, 696 Liberty St., Charles Richard, Route 4, Box 642, Lake Bradford Rd. Paul McGee, and Ulysses Jones.

The arrest on Saturday was the fourth for the Rev. Mr. Daymon. On June 1 he was arrested three times by the same police officer.

THE CHARGES were "driving on the wrong side of the white dividing line, failing to put out his hand in time for a turn," and failing to have the "proper license to transport passengers."

He was fined $5 on the first and $20 on the last charge. No charge was made in connection with Saturday's arrest.

"I was required to sign a paper stating I was a member of the car pool," the Rev. Daymon said.

A number of the other passengers and drivers were forced to sign similar statements, they reported.

IN ADDITION, they were required to answer questions as to whether they attend the regular boycott mass meeting held in two local churches, the length of time they have resided in Tallahassee, whether or not they contribute money to inter-civic council, how much money they earn and a number of other personal questions.

Mr. Colquitt said the police officer urged him not to support the boycott.

"He told me that if I got together a group of people and came to City Hall, he was sure this trouble could be straightened out," Mr. Colquitt added.

Further, he said the police officer told him "just leave inter-civic council out of it. We're not going to do business with them."

THE REV. MR. DAYMON also complained about the treatment accorded him at police headquarters.

On one occasion during the questioning he protested about being called "Boy."

Turning to an officer near the one doing the questioning, the Rev. Mr. Daymon asked: "which one of us looks more like a boy?"

Mr. Richards, a State Beverage Department employee, was arrested immediately after picking up J. E. Gibbs, a law school instructor at Florida A. and M. University.

Other Transports Are Designed For White Passengers

Atlanta, Ga.
8-3-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — Buses were rolling Thursday in Tallahassee for the first time since July 1, when a boycott of the coaches by Negroes forced the company out of business.

The buses, owned by Cities Transit Inc., began operating at 6 a. m. on routes which, except for two heading for predominately Negro sections near Florida A and M College, were designed for use by white riders.

The runs to the college area were driven by Negro drivers Edgar Richardson and Davis Moore, who were hired by the company on request of local Negroes. The two, formerly maintenance employes, are the first of their race to be hired by the Tallahassee Transit System as drivers.

The company went out of business on July 1 after a boycott of the buses by Negroes had taken away 60 per cent of this revenue. The boycott began May 29 with the arrest of two Florida A and M College co-eds, who refused to move to the rear of a segregated coach when ordered to do so by the driver.

The school is an all-Negro institution.

Negroes were reported patronizing the buses and several were seen sitting near the front of the coaches on the first day of operations.

Charles Carter, manager of the Transit company, said the line will operate along new routes aimed at getting the trade of Tallahassee's white residents.

Negro Drivers Operating Buses Serving Predominantly Negro Sections Of City

Tallahassee, Fla., Aug. 6.—(DSN)—Negro groups here were all but unanimous in applauding the hiring of two Negro bus drivers as the Tallahassee Transit Company Thursday began operating its buses for the first time since July 1, when the company suspended operations as a result of a Negro bus boycott which forced the company out of business.

The bus boycott began on May 29 following the arrest of two Negro coeds from Clorida A. & M. College here who refused to move to the rear of the segregated coach when ordered to do so by the bus driver.

As the boycott spread a Negro group was organized to spearhead the movement and among the demands made by the group was a call for the hiring of Negro bus drivers to operate the buses serving predominantly Negro neighborhoods.

The two Negro drivers, Edgar Richardson and Davis Moore will operate the buses serving the college area. The two men were formerly maintenance employes of the bus company are the first Negroes to be hired as bus drivers in the state, and in the deep south.

The company went out of business on July 1 after the boycott of the buses by Negroes of the city had taken away 60 per cent of the revenue.

With the hiring of the Negro drivers Negro passengers have resumed patronizing the buses and several were seen sitting near the front of the buses on the first day of operation.

Bus Boycott Group Loses Round in Car Pool Fight

Post Times Herald
Washington, D.C.
11-3-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 2 (AP)—Negro attorneys failed today in their attempt to get an immediate Federal Court order to stop the city of Montgomery from interfering with their bus boycott car pool.

Lawyers for the city meanwhile went into State Court with their promised petition for an injunction there to stop the car-pool operations which have provided transportation for the Negroes during their 11-month boycott of segregated city buses.

United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. refused to issue a temporary restraining order to prohibit the city from obtaining an injunction in State Court.

Johnson set a hearing for Nov. 14, however, on a companion request for a temporary injunction. A restraining order can be issued without hearing in an emergency but an injunction requires a hearing.

The judge held that the Negroes had failed to show that failure to grant the immediate restraining order would "subject the plaintiffs to immediate and irreparable injury, loss and damage."

A hearing in State Court on the city's request for an injunction to stop the car pool was set by Circuit Judge Eugene Carter for Nov. 13.

The city contended that the car pool is "a private enterprise . . . operating a transportation system" without approval of the City Commission.

City Attorney Walker Knabe said in the injunction petition that the car pool is operated over regular as well as irregular routes in Montgomery.

Montana white lauds southern Negro's "pacifist approach

Los Angeles Calif.

People in the vicinity of Glasgow, Montana "had no opinion one way or the other about the Negro" until the Montgomery, Ala. bus boycott, according to a letterwriter to The World, bulletin of "The Equalitarians", a political group.

The letter was written by one Marvel Cotton, of Glasgow.

The bulletin is edited by W. T. Nef, at 3206 W. Pico, Los Angeles 19.

Cotton said, "Nearly everyone has an opinion now about how to solve . . . the 'Negro problem', and because a man's opinions are only as good as his information, I fear there is widespread prejudice and misconception."

Continuing, the letterwriter said:

"Most . . . 'feel sorry' for the black man, but are unwilling to accept him into their society. I seem to be the only one of my acquaintances who feels that the color of skin is no different a guage to test the character and acceptability of the individual that the color of one's eyes or hair . . . I would much rather my daughter married a Negro of good character who cared for her, than a white man of the opposite characteristics. . . .

"The Montgomery . . . bus boycott has been successful. . . .

"This pacifist approach by the southern Negro is by far their best weapon to gain support. Who can fail to feel brotherly toward kind and peaceful people who desire nothing beyond recognition as human being? The fact that the church leaders have been the backbone of this pacifist movement and have been persecuted and jailed for their efforts shows the church in a new finer light. . . .

"There is no doubt that integration is the top news in the U. S. at the moment and we need more information from countries who have solved this problem. For it is a problem when custom and thinking make it so. If we could look far enough into the future, I believe we would see the One World Wendell Wilkie community.

"Just as our own isolated communities become so intermixed that each one is related to others in the area, so I feel we will someday all become one race and one language, and since we will all be brothers, we will have no wars, only small differences we can iron out.

"Seeing the future in this light, our customs and prejudices seem antique."

RICHMOND, Va. — More money is needed for the Montgomery bus boycotters. Since the conviction of the Rev. M. L. King, who is one of the main leaders in the boycot movement, opponents of civil rights for Negroes in Alabama and other sections of the South have set out to convict and penalize every leader in Alabama, and particularly in Montgomery, to kill the movement for civil rights and equaltiy for southern Negroes.

Churches, clubs, civic organizations, businesses, labor groups, women's organizations, PTAs, teacher groups, fraternal organizations, Greek letter organizations, youth groups and individuals that have not yet contributed to this fund are urged to do so. Churches, organizations and individuals who have made a contribution are urged to make another donation during this financial drive. The struggle for human rights is costly at all times. and the organized fight against Negro rights by the opposition makes it more costly.

Negroes Again Walking In Alabama; Halt Car Pool

Courier + Guide P. 23 Norfolk, Va.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.— Many Negroes continued to walk to work and elsewhere, after leaders of the Montgomery Improvement Association suspended operation of their bus boycott car pool, late last week, when city officials made public plans to seek an injunction to prohibit further pool operations.

The action came after plans were announced by the city commission to take the legal steps, following the appearance of an article in the Alabama Labor News, a labor union publication, requesting that such steps be taken.

The boycott, which has attracted nationwide attention, has been in progress for 10 months.

Boycott Driver Gets $50 Fine For Violation

Courier Sat. 11-24-56 Montgomery, Ala.

A Negro driver of one of the station wagons used for conveying bus boycotters was fined $50 and costs in the Court of Common Pleas yesterday for a traffic violation.

P. 7-a

Alberta Judkins James, 47, pleaded guilty to making an improper left turn in the face of oncoming traffic. She was represented by attorney Fred Gray, legal spokesman for the Montgomery Improvement Assn., which is sponsoring the boycott.

Judge Alex A. Marks also recommended that the Department of Public Safety suspend the woman's licenses for 30 days. Traffic records showed that this was her 10th violation this year.

In other cases yesterday Howard T. Allen, waived a preliminary hearing and was bound over to the grand jury on a charge of escaping from Kilby Prison. His bond was set at $500.

A case against Bill Wilson for attempting to escape from Kilby was not pressed when it was determined that he had been punished at Kilby for the attempt by serving 14 days confinement.

Others sentenced or fined were Bernice Collier, three months in prison for vagrancy; Charles E. Markley, $100 and costs for violating the firearms act; and Boise Derrico, $100 and costs for violation of prohibition laws.

City Plans Legal Action

Sat. 10-27-56 Montgomery, Ala.

Against Negro Car Pools

By AL McCONOGHA

The city of Montgomery is preparing legal action against Negro bus boycotters' car pools, the City Commission revealed yesterday.

The commission announced its plans after a group representing a trade union publication, The Alabama Labor News, asked for immediate action to halt the car-pool operation carried on by Negroes in a 10-month-old protest to racial segregation on city buses.

Jack D. Brock, editor of the labor publication, said he and others were ready to swear out citizens' warrents immediately if necessary to stop car-pool operations.

LEGAL MEANS

Brock's demand was made after Atty. John Kohn, representing the labor group, outlined "double barrel" legal means for halting the boycotters' station wagons and car-pool activity.

In a statement issued three hours after the special conference between city commission and the labor group, the city officials said:

"The city's latest activity in this connection (maintaining segregation) has been the assembling of evidence for action against the operations of so-called car pools.

INJUNCTION PLAN

"The commission is glad for individuals to take such action as they see fit in their own best interest; however, regardless of whether such action is taken or not, the city will follow its plans of bringing action for an injuction to stop all activities which the city considers illegal at this time."

In the morning session, Kohn declared the car pool a "sabotage of franchise transportation in this city" and an effort to do "by subterfuge what he commission had denied them the right to do."

'SOUTH HATERS'

Kohn referred to the commission's action several months ago in refusing to grant boycotters a franchise for operation of their own bus lines.

The Montgomery attorney added that the car-pool operation was an "emasculation" of city and state laws supported in part "by people who hate the South and don't understand it."

Kohn particularly cited a section of the state code which says "any firm, association, or corporation using the streets of any city" for the construction or operation of any public utility cannot do so without "first obtaining permission of the city commission," as evidence of legal authority for immediate action by the city commission. He asked for arrests and trials in recorder's court.

"What Tallahassee has done, Montgomery has the legal authority to do," Kohn said. He refered to Tallahassee city official's action against operations similar to those conducted here by bus boycotters.

Kohn presented the commission with a detailed legal memorandum outlining city authority in the situation and a proposed ordinance which he said would give the city legal opportunity to halt the station wagon and the car pool operations.

The commission's statement said the visit of the labor news group was "appreciated" and added that the city's legal department had already offered them the benefit of studies made on the question and action the city hoped to take.

The statement said the city had advised the group "that the city planned to take certain action designed to stop these operations."

Adding that "we intend to maintain the way of life which has existed here in Montgomery since its origin, so far as we are legally able," the commission pointed to action already taken to resist racial integration here.

The statement concluded:

"The city commission has the dual reponsibility of maintaining the laws and of preventing violence. The numerous legal actions which we have taken indicate the intention of the city to fully enforce all segregation laws. The fact that there has been little violence indicates the success of the city along these second lines.

"The commission will continue to keep these two objectives as its goal."

City Requests Car Pool Halt

advertiser Sat. 11-3-56

By JO ANN FLIRT

Negro bus boycotters and Montgomery city officials squared off yesterday for a legal battle over car pools, but the fireworks will be delayed about two weeks.

City authorities went into Circuit Court here with their promised request for an injunction to stop the car pool operations. Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, declining to rule immediately, set a hearing for Nov. 13.

About the same time, Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., in U.S. District Court, denied a previously filed motion for an emergency restraining order to prevent the city from interfering with the Negroes' transportation system.

The judge ordered a hearing for Nov. 14, however, on a companion request for a temporary injunction against the City Commission. A temporary restraining order, Johnson explained, could be issued in federal court without hearing. An injunction cannot.

Explaining his decision, Johnson said the Negroes failed to show that refusal to grant the immediate restraining order would "subject the plaintiffs to immediate and irrepairable injury, loss and damage."

City Atty. Walter Knabe, in a petition delivered about 10:30 p.m. Thursday night to the home of Register in Chancery George H. Jones, asked Judge Carter to outlaw the Negro motor pool as a "public nuisance" and a "private enterprise" being operated without a license and without approval of the city.

Knabe said he sent the petition to city officials late Thursday afternoon and did not personally file the document with Register Jones that night.

The petition was docketed on books at the county courthouse yesterday (Friday) but was dated Nov. 1 (Thursday).

Jones said that since the petition reached him before midnight it could be considered as filed Nov. 1.

The petition said the motor pool, which includes church-owned station wagons as well as private cars, is operated over regular and irregular routes; that the Negores have purchased and hired vehicles, and that drivers and dispatchers are paid for their services.

Negro Attys. Fred Gray and Charles Langford, in their motion in federal court, said the car pool is a voluntary share-the-ride service provided without charge to the riders.

Any effort to break up the pool, they protested, would violate "the civil and constitutional rights" of the Negroes and is calculated to compel them to ride the segregated buses they are boycotting.

Defendants in the city's suit are the Montgomery Improvement Assn., an organization formed to support the bus boycott when it started last Dec. 5. 14 Negro churches and 27 individuals.

In the first official indication of the economic impact of the long boycott, the city said in its petition yesterday that it had lost $15,000 in revenue as a direct result of the mass refusal of Negroes to ride the buses.

The petition by the City of Montgomery is directed against:

CITY ATTY. WALTER KNABE
Asks Injunction

To Rule On Montgomery Bus Boycott

Call of Kansas City, Mo.

Fri. 11-9-56

WASHINGTON.— (INS) — The Supreme Court is expected to rule soon on whether it will take up the Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation case.

If the court does not agree to hear arguments i nthe bus segregation case, it would be taken to mean that it approves the two-to-one lower court decision that separating bus patrons on racial grounds is unlawful.

City and state attorneys argue that there is no illegal segregation because both races ride the same buses, although seating is restricted.

They contend that the school segregation decision put white and Negro children in the same buildings but did not insist that a teacher could not separate them in the classrooms.

Attorneys Today Begin Battle For Delaying Bus Integration

Montgomery, Ala.

Tues. 6-19-56

Attorneys seeking to save bus segregation in Montgomery will try to head off immediate integration today in recommendations to a three-judge panel concerning execution of a desegregation decision.

The panel voted 2-1 on June 5 that city and state segregation laws requiring separate seating for white and Negro passengers violates the U.S. Constitution.

Attorneys for the City of Montgomery, Montgomery City Lines Inc., and the Alabama Public Service Commission said they are prepared to submit written suggestions on how the formal order should be put into effect.

Counsel for the four Negroes contesting the segregation law had previously filed their suggestions in District Court.

The judges gave attorneys two weeks to prepare the briefs after handing down the integration decision. U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. said the time to be required in forming the desegregation order is not known.

Judge Johnson pointed out either side can appeal the court's action on the question of a stay of execution pending appeal.

If the panel refuses to set the integration order aside temporarily and orders city buses desegregated immediately, the city or state can ask the Supreme Court to reverse that ruling before the case goes to the higher court on its merits, he explained.

On the other hand, if the judges issue a stay order putting off the actual integration until the Supreme Court rules on it, the Negroes can challenge the delay.

U.S. COURT VOIDS BUS SEGREGATION IN MONTGOMERY

Newark Star-Ledger 6-6-56

Delays Injunction Pending Appeal to High Tribunal —Boycott to Go On

By The Associated Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 5 —A three-judge panel in Federal Court ruled today that racial segregation on city buses in Montgomery violated the Federal Constitution. The vote was 2 to 1.

But the court took no action to issue an injunction against enforcement of city and state segregation laws. That will come later.

The decision came six months to the day after the start of Montgomery's Negro bus boycott, a mass refusal to ride segregated buses. That still is continuing.

City and state officials are expected to appeal to the Supreme Court in what may become the first clear-cut decision by that tribunal on city bus segregation.

The lower court in expectation of that move gave opposing lawyers two weeks to submit written suggestions on how the formal anti-segregation order should be entered, and whether a stay should be granted pending an appeal.

Judge Richard T. Rives of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., of the Middle District of Alabama, signed the majority opinion. It held bus segregation violated the due process and equal protection clause, the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Commission to Appeal

Judge Seybourn Lynne of the Northern District of Alabama dissented. He insisted that separate but equal seating facilities for white and Negro passengers were permissible.

Pending a formal order to carry out the panel's findings, no injunction was issued. When it comes, Judge Johnson said it would affect only buses in Montgomery even though state laws were held unconstitutional.

To extend it to other Alabama cities would require a separate court order based on today's ruling.

Judge Johnson said it was comparable to the Supreme Court's two-year-old ruling against school segregation. That ruling still has not affected Alabama directly because this state was not named in the litigation that brought the integration ruling.

The Alabama Public Service Commission, one of the defendants in the suit, said "we are deeply shocked" and that the decision would be appealed.

The commission will seek to have the ruling set aside pending the appeal, the statement said, because "any other action would invite racial conflicts in this state * * *."

What effect the ruling would have on the bus boycott was undetermined. The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Negro Baptist minister and one of the boycott leaders, said he could not say without discussing the decision later with attorneys.

However, he said Negroes would end their mass protest "whenever it becomes possible to go back on city buses on an integrated basis."

Mr. King, one of ninety Negroes under indictment for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law and the first defendant brought to trial, called the ruling a "great victory for democracy and justice."

"I think all people of goodwill will accept the court's ruling as a great victory * * * not only for Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes but for people everywhere," the minister added.

Montgomery has a total population of 125,000.

Mr. King was fined $500 and costs at his boycott trial and has appealed to higher courts. Trials of the other defendants have been postponed pending the outcome.

Mayor W. A. Gayle and City Commissioners Clyde Sellers and Frank Parks declined to say what their next step would be until the formal order of the court was issued.

The City Commission, like the Public Service Commission, was named defendant in the suit filed by four Negro women who have refused to ride the buses since the boycott began.

The boycott that led to the suit in Federal Court started last Dec. 5, the day a Negro seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was fined $14 in city court for refusing to move to the segregated section of a bus.

Since then the city buses, which carried 30,000 to 40,000 Negro passengers a day, now transports only 300 or 400, company officials said.

The Montgomery Bus Decision

Daily World Thurs. 6-7-56

Once again the Federal Courts have denied the validity and the justice of the "separate but equal" doctrine of the nineteenth century. What is "separate" in terms of the basic human rights of an individual, can never be "equal". Persons are not "things" and the separation of persons by law, tradition, intimidation or any coercive force whatever is prima facie evidence of an implied inequality. A few days ago, a three-judge panel in a United States Federal Court sitting in Montgomery, once again said "NO" to a plea that citizens in this free nation be segregated or otherwise inconvenienced because of the color of their skin.

Atlanta, Ga. P. 4.

In the case in question, the panel in a 2-1 decision ruled that segregation on the city buses in Montgomery violates the Federal Constitution. Anticipating an appeal by city and state officials, the panel gave the opposing attorneys two weeks in which to submit written suggestions on how the anti-segregation order should be entered, and whether a stay of its effect should be granted pending an appeal.

The Montgomery decision was logical and just. It is consistent with the historic decision of May 17, 1954, in which the United States Supreme Court unanimously ruled that the "separate but equal" doctrine in education must give way to a more humane and therefore more just interpretation of man's proper relation to his fellowman. Segregation, said the Supreme Court, is per se unjust. It has no place in public education. By extension, we suggest that it has no place at all in our society which can be justified by the Constitution under which we live, or by the Great Commandment by which we are finally judged.

The recent decision outlawing segregation on the Montgomery busses was to be expected by all who believe the Courts of the land place principle and integrity above emotion and provincialism. Even though there was a dissenting opinion by one of the three judges who reviewed the case, there were few people, even among the pro-segregationists, who honestly expected a decision different from that the Court rendered. The separation of American citizens on the basis of race or color is legally passe. To persist in trying to retain legal segregation in any field is unrealistic and costly — in terms of money, and in terms of interracial goodwill and understanding. The best interests of all the people would be served if the spirit of the Supreme Court's 1954 decision would be accepted as a guide in all pertinent situations. Thusly could the endless and expensive litigation be discontinued, and all concerned would again have time and energy and incentive to turn attention to other problems which we can ill-afford to neglect any longer.

WITNESS CHARGE CRUELTY IN BUS BOYCOTT TRIAL

The Issues Involved In Ala Boycott Trial

Courier 4/28
Houston 4/28

By CHARLES H. LOEB
NNPA Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala — The issue at Montgomery, when you have cut through the legal sparring in Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter's courtroom is whether it is an ilegal conspiracy for Negroes in Alabama to unite behind cohesive leadership to protect inequality of treatment.

Sat 3-31-56

For the moment, it concerns treatment on the privately-owned leased through the city, bus lines but before the trial concludes it will inject itself into almost every phase of relationships between white and Negroes in the State of Alabama.

The strong impression here is that it will not be decided in this courtroom.

The State of Alabama contends that the mass meetings held in Montgomery's Negro Churches, the employment of drivers in a car pool to carry those who refuse to ride the buses, the voicing of demands for more courteous treatment, equitable seating on a first-come-first serve basis, and the employment of Negro bus drivers, is an act of conspiracy.

A cool-headed advocate of "passive resistance", with a razor-sharp mind, a gifted tongue, and a burning dedication, the Rev Martin Luther King, says it isn't.

He has been singled out as the first to be tried. He is admittedly the moving force behind this surprising and unexpected show of cohesion among Montgomery's Negroes.

As this is written, two days of legal jousting has been completed between well-trained white lawyers acting for the state and well-trained Negro lawyers acting for Rev King, 23 other Negro Ministers, and a miscellany of others who make up the laymen engaged in operating motor pool cars, distributing literature, operating pick-up stations, and otherwise contributing to the success of whatever the Montgomery Improvement Association is doing to keep Negroes off the buses almost 100 percent for three long months.

In spite of all the objections raised by a brilliant corps of Negro lawyers, the story of how and why the MIA was born, and how it operates, and how much it costs to operate, and what brains give it direction, will get into the records.

Negro lawyers have been overruled already 116 times in their efforts to keep these things out of the record.

But already, with only four witnesses questioned, the state has introduced records and exhibits to show that at least $30,000 has been disbursed by the MIA, that car pool drivers were paid, by check, some $4 per day for operating and maintaining the cars used to take Negroes to and from work; that certain filling station operators were paid, by check for gasoline and services to maintain the fleet of nearly 300 cars in the "pool"; the names of the directors of the Association, and that Rev King serves as its president.

Except for J H Bagley, bus line manager, whose testimony was considered not damaging enough to warrant cross examination by the defense, and an Alabama National Bank official, the state's Negro witnesses, most of whom gave testimony before the grand jury which handed down the original indictments, were uncooperative and evasive.

Rev A W Wilson, pastor of the Hope Street Baptist Church, admitted he was a member of the Association's board, whose church was used for the first mass meeting, was vague about who called the meeting, what was discussed, who authorized the resolution presented, in debatable form, to bus company officials, and who did most of the speaking.

The second Negro witness for the state, Mrs Erna Dungee, identified as financial secretary of the Association, was equally evasive, and it was necessary to refresh her memory by producing an impressive collection of bank records, cancelled checks, and bank books.

The record was fairly complete, indicating that some $30,713.80 had been disbursed up to February 27, when the association transferred its funds from the Montgomery Bank to the Citizen's Trust Company, a Negro bank in Atlanta, Ga.

On Tuesday, the pattern continued, this time with the Rev U J Fields, pastor of Bell Street Baptist Church, Association secretary on the stand. He was equally, if not more evasive, and had to constantly refer to his "incomplete' minutes to refresh his memory.

But, in spite of evasions, the picture of how the association operates and the identity of its leaders will get into the records; perhaps in two days, two weeks, perhaps longer, but it will get in.

Everybody in Montgomery knows it already, word for word. They know their leaders and are following them. They know that Rev King is their guiding genius. They unconsciously try to protect him by evasions and lapses of memory at convenient times, even though he has publicly stated that he does not desire such 'protection.'

Martin Luther King Jr, whose stature grows bigger and bigger under abuse, after the bombing of his home, during each hour of his trial, has told them to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

He seems eager to get on the stand to set the pattern.

"We believe we are right. The truth can't hurt us" he tells his co-defendants.

"We were tired of getting second class treatment in exchange for first class fares,"

"We wanted a dime's worth of ride for a dime"

"We kept begging for it."

They kept refusing it"

"So, we decided to get together and quit riding on those buses until we got what we have been begging for"

"We have nothing to hide. We believe we are right, and that God is on our side"

"Our lawyers think we are right too, and that while the State of Alabama might not agree, the federal constitution of this great Republic of which Alabama is only a non-conforming part, will protect our rights.

"The right to assemble peacefully.

"The right to air our grievances publicly.

"The right to worship in our churches the God of our choice and to use them as the forums of our distressed and disturbed people "And the right to stay off the buses and away from jibes, insults, and the ever-present knowledge that we are regarded as second class riders who at any time, under the law, must surrender our seats to any white passenger who demands it after all seats are filled.

"We think we have the right to walk the public streets of Montgomery where at least the air seems purer—and freer."

"We're beginning to like walking."

On the streets the white people have to walk too,

Or ride in the cars of their neighbors and friends,

Or on the buses.

There are plenty of good seats, now.

Plenty of them.

The presence here of reporters from all over the nation-and the world, indicate the importance of this issue.

Is this the beginning of new self-assertion on the part of the Negro in the South, moving forward under dedicated, intelligent, non-violent, Christian leadership?

The world awaits. It recognizes that the first skirmish in this new approach is taking place in Judge Carter's courtroom; a courtroom where the same seating pattern obtains, enforced by law, as that on the buses which originated the protest and this trial.

Separation scrupulously enforced.

It is being tried by a white judge, learned, polished, a Harvard graduate, and far more polished than a bus driver, but one who gives the impression that he regards the Negroes in his court room as wayward children.

"You all behave in here or I'll have you put in jail"

This was Montgomery on Tuesday.

Rev M King Charged As Principal Leader

Inquirer 3/29

By CHARLES H LOEB,
NNPA Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala —A white Montgomery newsman dropped a bombshell on the state's easy-going conspiracy case against Rev Martin Luther King, alleged leader of the 3-month-old bus boycott.

He was Joe Azbell, city editor of the Montgomery Advertiser, a state's witness who had covered so many of the meetings of the Montgomery Improvement Association that the state had depended strongly on his testimony, as "a qualified expert" to finger Rev King as the chief conspirator" in what it alleges is an effort to ruin the business of the Montgomery City Lines.

Under skilled examination the newsman related how he had attended the various "pep meetings" of the organization, often finding himself the only white man present.

The prosecution won from him an admission that he had seen Rev King at many meetings and had heard him address the audiences on several accasion.

Then the vital question.

Q. What did he tell the people?

A. He told them "Let your conscience be your guide on whetaer or not you will ride the buses".

Azbell was asked if he had attended a meeting held at Holt Street Baptist Church on December 5.

A. Yes

Q. Who was the chairman?

A. That was hard to tell.

Q. What do you mean Who was on the Rostrum?

A. It appeared to be spontaneous. Almost all the colored ministers in town seemed to be there

Q. What seemed to be the purpose of the meeting?

A. Mind you, I'm not saying this, just quoting the speakers. They said that colored people desired all of the rights guaranteed in a democracy. They said that they would not retreat one inch from obtaining these rights.

Q. Did they talk about the bus protest or Boycott?

A. Someone introuduced Rosa Parks as an outstanding citizen who had been arrested on the buses. but it seemed that everybody at the meeting had some kind of grievance to air against the bus company.

Q. Did Rev King speak?

A. Yes, I wrote a story and quoted him in my newspaper. He said that no Negro in Montgomery should be intimidated, and that no intimidation should be made against any other person, and added, let each persons's conscience be his guide on whether or not to ride the buses.

By this time the courtroom began to stir with interest. The chagrin of the solicitor William Thetford was obvious. When the trial opened Azbell, though a state witness, had been permitted to cover the trial instead of being isolated outside the courtroom with other witnesses.

Another Montgomery newsman, whose stories had been thought bitterly slanted against the defendants, was denied this courtesy.

With a gesture of resignation and unconcealed agitation the examination was abruptly ended.

Defense council Arthur Shores then, after a consultation with the defendant, had Azbell recall how Rev King had quieted an angry group of people who had gathered around his home shortly after it was hit by a bomb.

"I was scared" said Azbell, "really scared. But Rev King came out on his porch and told the people to quiet down and to use no violence against anybody. He probably saved me from great danger.

In earlier efforts the prosecution met no better success in establishing Rev King's connection to the alleged conspircy. Eight bus drivers were called and related instances when the buses they drove were either shot at or stoned while traveling through colored neighborhoods, but none knew who was responsible for the incidents, as none had seen who fired the shots.

Only light note in the Tuesday proceedings was provided by Willie Carter, Ernest Smith and Mrs Beatrice Jackson through whom the state attempted to establish that Negroes who persisted in riding the buses after December 5 were subjected to threats and intimidation by the alleged conspirators.

Carter testified that he was told to stay off the buses or he would get his neck broken, but didn't know who made the threat, and wouldn't recognize the threatener if he saw him again.

Smith, clad in overalls, says he was yanked from the bus by an unidentified colored man, but had knocked his assailant down and got back on the bus.

"And I'm still riding them". He said.

The defense objected to this testimony, but was overruled.

Mrs Jackson, a huge, unkempt woman, said a man had beaten her up because she rode the buses. She defiantly added, under further examination that she was still riding.

A Montgomery detective K W Jones told of his efforts at stopping cars carrying passengers, and of his work of ferreting out the places where the car pool purchased gasoline and services. He recalled two actual arrests, one for drunkenness and the other for vagrancy. The vagrancy case, he recalled, had been thrown out of court when it was learned that the defendant was regularly employed.

Equally disappointing to the state was the testimony elicited from Rufus Lewis, operator of the Citizens Club which is the official headquarters of the Montgomery Improvement Association. Lewis, head of the transportation committee, admitted the recruitment of drivers and the payment of $24 a week to them for the use of their cars on a full time basis, but all efforts to have him tie Rev King in as "chief conspirator" met with "I can't remember. "I don't know".

In spite of the ruling by Judge Carter that "since this is an alleged conspiracy, indirect evidence may be introduced", the past two days have not been rewarding ones for the state, and its panel of witnesses is rapidly dwindling.

REV MARTIN LUTHER KING is cheerful as he shake hands with members and visitors in his church foyer after delivering his "When Peace Become Obnoxious" sermon last Sunday.

Negroes' Bus Boycott To Continue

Courier-Journal

5,000 Ballot At Montgomery

Fri. 4-27-56

Montgomery, Ala., April 26 (U.P.) — Montgomery's Negroes voted unanimously tonight to continue their boycott of buses in the face of the City's threat to bring court action against the bus operators for removing the color bar.

Memphis, Tenn.

An estimated crowd of 5,000 that packed Bay Street Baptist Church roared its approval of a resolution calling for continuance of the boycott, now in its 21st week, until desegregation is officially approved.

The resolution noted that white and Negro passengers rode together "on front seats without incidents, mishaps or disturbances" in such cities as Richmond, Va., Little Rock, and Dallas.

Union Promises Support

On the other hand, it said, "the public officials of the City of Montgomery and the State of Alabama have indicated that they intend to, and will use all means available, including the arrest of the bus drivers and passengers," to enforce segregation laws.

National City Lines, Chicago, operators of the transit system here, had already decided to no longer enforce segregated seating, and members of the drivers' union promised to support the company policy.

The City Commission appeared determined to keep the passengers from mixing.

Commissioners met with National City Lines representatives today but "reached no conclusions," Mayor W. A. Gayle reported afterward.

"Our conferences will be resumed on either Friday or Saturday," Gayle said. "The City Commission adheres to the position it has originally expressed that it will enforce all applicable Alabama statutes and City ordinances."

Montgomery Edict Draws Threat of Reprisal

Wed. 4-25-56

By REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24 (AP)—An order to stop segregation on city buses brought angry threats of reprisal today from city and state officials who vowed to keep the races apart as long as possible.

Despite the decision from Montgomery City Lines Inc., to abandon its policy of separate seating of white and Negro passengers, there were no reports of actual mixed seating on the first day.

An Alabama Journal reporter who spot-checked the buses said all the Negro riders he saw were seated in the rear, the part reserved for members of that race under the traditional segregation pattern.

Neither was there any indication that the bus company's action in refusing to continue enforcing city and state segregation laws would bring an immediate end to the boycott by Negroes who have refused to patronize the segregated buses since Dec. 5.

No Immediate Change

A leader of the bus boycott, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., issued a statement saying "there will be no change in our position immediately" and that the protest would go on for the time being.

King said some action may be taken, however, at a mass meeting called for Thursday night. He said the Montgomery Improvement Assn., of which he is president, probably would make a recommendation or at least "discuss alternatives" to ending the boycott.

The statement was issued following a meeting of the executive board of the Improvement Assn. which was formed to support the boycott.

King said the Negroes were still awaiting word from bus company Manager J. H. Bagley on their original demand for employment of Negro drivers on predominantly Negro routes, and added:

"If Mr. Bagley says that he will examine applications from Negroes with the same equanimity as he would an application from a white person, that might satisfy our people."

Whether that meant the Negroes might continue the boycott indefinitely without some concession on the hiring of Negro drivers, the minister said he couldn't speculate.

No Applications

Bagley wasn't available for comment. In the past he has said the company had received no applications from Negroes for jobs as drivers.

Meanwhile, what effect the move to end segregation here might have on the $500 fine levied against King on his boycotting conviction wasn't immediately determined.

The Negro baptist minister has appealed, saying he would go to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford, who prosecuted King, said abolition of the segregation laws wouldn't affect the conviction because, he explained, "segregation as such wasn't an issue" in his trial.

Just Cause' Pleaded

Defense attorneys contended the Negroes had a "just cause" and "legal excuse" for refusing to ride the buses, and produced testimony of repeated acts of mistreatment by bus drivers.

Whether they will use the segregation argument in their appeal wasn't learned because the defense lawyers weren't available for comment.

A comparatively few Negroes rode the buses today despite the announced end of segregation. R. C. Mills, assistant manager of Montgomery City Lines, said the number was about the same that continued to use the buses throughout the boycott.

Times-Picayune

The bus company previously had estimated that at about 6 to 15 per cent of the normal Negro passenger load.

Whether other Negroes were waiting word from the boycott leaders before patronizing the bus line again could not be determined.

Wed. 4-25-56

'Still in Effect'

City and state officials meanwhile insisted that Alabama's segregation laws are still in effect despite the U.S. Supreme Court decision yesterday which said all bus segregation is unconstitutional.

The ruling applied directly only to South Carolina, and Alabama. Officials contended segregation laws here will remain intact until a court order is directed specifically at them.

That could come May 11, the date set for hearing on an antisegregation suit already on file attacking constitutionality of Montgomery city and Alabama state laws. The suit was filed as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

Until the city and state laws are knocked down, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and other city officials and President Jack Owen of the Alabama Public Service Commission declared that segregation will be rigidly maintained.

Communism Statement

The city commission, all three of those members belong to the White Citizens Council, issued a statement saying it "does not consider that the Supreme Court decision construes Alabama laws or city ordinances by which we are governed."

The council is an organization dedicated to the preservation of racial segregation.

"We, therefore, expect the bus company and all other persons to abide by all existing laws and ordinances," the statement added.

Sellers said he would order the arrest of any passenger or bus driver who permits or indulges in desegregation.

"Will Be Responsible"

"I'll be responsible for any arrests and I'll give the direct orders for those arrests," Sellers said. "As far as I'm concerned, this damn thing (the Supreme Court ruling) applies only to South Carolina. Until they tell us in this suit filed here that it applies to us, I'm going to enforce all city laws to maintain segregation."

Owen sent a telegram to President Roy Fitzgerald of National City Lines in Chicago, the parent company of Montgomery City Lines, demanding that the integration order be withdrawn.

Owen also directed all other carriers operating in Alabama to "strictly adhere to all present existing segregation laws in our state or suffer the consequences."

Has No Choice

"This company has no choice but to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court," Vice President B. W. Franklin told The Associated Press. "For that reason we are not going to attempt to enforce segregation.

"We always comply with laws in effect. Now the Supreme Court says the segregation laws no longer are constitutional—no longer in effect.

"We're not going to enforce segregation."

The company also operates bus lines in Mobile, Ala., Jackson, Miss., Tampa, Fla., Tulsa, Okla., Beaumont, Wichita Falls and El Paso, Tex.

Officials at Tampa and Jackson said segregation would be continued on buses operating there despite the company statement in Chicago.

News Photographer Threatened by Driver

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24 (AP)—An Associated Press photographer was threatened by a bus driver Tuesday as he attempted to take a picture of a bus operating without racial segregation.

As photographer Horace Cort of Atlanta pointed his camera toward the bus at a downtown stop, the unidentified driver jumped out with fist drawn back and snarled, "If you take my picture, g—— d——you, I'll kill you.

The driver didn't object to taking pictures after he was out of the bus.

Georgia Shows No Effects of Ruling

ATLANTA, April 24 (AP) — The sweeping United States supreme court edict against racial segregation on public buses operating within as well as between states apparently had no effect at all in Georgia Tuesday.

State, city and transportation officials were quick to note that Monday's ruling was on a South Carolina appeal, to which Georgia was not a party. Hence, they reasoned, it will impose no compulsion in Georgia until an action is brought in ths state.

Among those taking this view was Gov. Marvin Griffin who pledged himself to resist the ruling at all odds. He called it "another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people."

No reported efforts were made to break down segregation in buses in Atlanta, Macon, Augusta, Savannah or any other Georgia city. Operators of highway buses, such as the Greyhound System, generally were noncommital on what course they will follow.

The Greyhound manager in Atlanta, R .F. Robinson, along with others, pointed out that he had the state segregation laws to consider. He suggested that these laws and the contradicting federal decree left him in a quandary.

NAACP Plans Move on Little Rock Busses

LITTLE ROCK, April 24 (AP)—An imemdiate end of racial segregation on Little Rock buses will be sought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, a spokesman said Tuesday.

Frank W. Smtih, state executive secretary of the NAACP, said the first step would be a request. He declined to say what would be the next step if the request is turned down.

David Durbin, vice-president of Citizens Coach Company, said transit company attorneys would not advise a company policy until the decision had been studied.

Dallas Police Orders No Enforcement

Firm Defies Order Of Commissioners At Montgomery

P. 1

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24 (AP). — Montgomery's embattled bus company ended segregation seating this morning, despite a City Commission order to continue separate facilities for white persons and Negroes.

An elderly Negro woman, unaware she was taking part in an unprecedented occasion, became the first of her race to ride on an unsegregated bus in Montgomery.

But the unidentified woman moved to the formerly segregated section in the back after boarding the bus at Court Square, where the first buses of the day make the initial stop for passengers. She was the only person waiting at the stop.

Montgomery City Lines, target of a crippling Negro boycott that became part of a Nation-wide anti-segregation crusade, posted a notice last night saying it would comply with yesterday's United States Supreme Court ruling holding bus segregation unconstitutional.

The first buses to roll under the edict did not begin operating until after 5 a.m. Most of the drivers on the early shift first learned of the company's desegregation order when they reported for work at dawn.

The order to stop assigning seats according to race put the bus company squarely in the middle between the Supreme Court ruling and an order earlier yesterday from Mayor W. A. Gayle that the company continue to maintain strict racial segregation in its vehicles.

The company's directive bore the name of Manager J. H. Bagley.

Legal Action Hinted

Before the desegregation order was posted Mayor Gayle hinted that legal action might be taken if bus officials disregarded State and city laws requiring segregation.

City police said they had no orders to make any arrests of drivers or bus company officials.

The bus company's desegregation decision was timed to become effective with the start of operations today.

Montgomery, in the southeastern quarter of Alabama, has a population of about 120,000. About 50,000 are Negroes.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., a leader in the five-month-old bus boycott, indicated there was little chance the protest movement would be called off before tonight at the earliest.

Star

Mass Meeting to Be Held

Mr. King, a Negro Baptist minister, said Negroes generally would continue to refuse to ride the buses until a mass meeting is held to decide if their demands have been satisfactorily met.

P. 5-A

He said the bus company's action would seem to satisfy demands for unsegragated seating and courtesy to Negro patrons from bus drivers. But he pointed out that the boycotters also have asked that Negro drivers be employed on predominently Negro routes.

When the Supreme Court ruling was announced yesterday, Mayor Gayle emphasized there would be "no change" in the city commission's policy. "We will do everything in our power to maintain segragation on city buses," he said.

"We're going to enforce the State and city ordinances just as we have been doing, and we expect the bus company to continue to abide by these laws."

Joined Citizens' Council

Mayor Gayle and City Commissioners Clyde Sellers and Frank Parks joined the pro-white Montgomery White Citizens' Council last December after early efforts to end the boycott failed.

The boycott has been in effect since December 5, when Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 in Police Court because she refused to move to the back of a bus.

A Montgomery County grand jury indicted 90 Negro leaders about three months ago for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law. Mr. King, the first and only Negro tried thus far, was convicted and has appealed a $500 fine.

Mr. King is president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, a newly formed Negro organization which has operated a car pool for the thousands of Negroes who joined in the protest movement.

Meeting Slated Today

The young minister said the association's Strategy Committee planned to meet today to discuss the desegregation decree. Recommendations will be made to the group's executive board, he explained, and the question of ending the boycott would be submitted to a vote at a mass meeting.

Montgomery City Lines is a subsidiary of National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago, which operates bus franchises in more than 30 cities throughout the Nation.

The mass refusal of Negroes to ride the Montgomery buses has forced the company to raise its rates from 10 to 15 cents and drastically curtail operations. It has been estimated that 95 per cent of the Negro customers, who once made up about 75 per cent of the total patronage, have stopped riding buses.

Negroes Now Fight Will Go On; Talks Bring No Results

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 27 (AP) — Bus company and city officials met again today but were unable to break a stalemate in their talks on bus segregation.

Mayor W. A. Gayle issued a statement afterward saying Montgomery City Lines "will be required" to obey city and state segregation laws. The company has announced it will not longer enforce segregation.

Negroes continued their fifth-month-old boycott of the buses, despite the integration order issued late Monday night. They agreed at a mass meeting last night to refrain from riding until public officials agree to accept integration.

The commission earlier had threatened to seek revocation of the bus franchise unless the company rescinded its integration policy.

B. W. Franklin, vice president of National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago, which owns the Montgomery company, declined to comment after today's meeting.

City and bus company attorneys conferred with Negro attorneys and lawyers in the Attorney General's office today discussing legal details of the suit. Chief Assistant Attorney General MacDonald Gallion said afterward that no agreement was reached. Another meeting probably will be held next week, Gallion said.

City and Transit Line Reach Deadlock on Court Ruling—Boycott Leaders at Rally

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 26—Montgomery city officials and representatives of the transit company that operates the local bus lines deadlocked today over the issue of segregation in transportation.

Sun. 4-27-56

They met in closed session for two and one-half hours and then announced that "our conferences will be resumed on either Friday or Saturday."

Their impasse arose from a confusion of reactions to a Supreme Court ruling in Monday in a case involving segregated transportation in Columbia, S. C. At first the decision was widely interpreted as having struck down segregation in all public transportation.

As a result, officers of the Montgomery bus company's parent organization said on Tuesday that drivers would no longer be required to enforce segregation statutes in the buses. The National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago is the parent group of Montgomery City Lines, Inc.

The Montgomery City Commission countered on Wednesday that it would prosecute passengers or drivers who failed to abide by the state and city segregation statutes. The Commission's three members belong to the White Citizens Council, this group has the avowed aim of preserving segregation in the south.

Boycott Leaders Meet

Meanwhile, leaders of the Negro population's boycott against the bus lines held a mass meeting tonight. The "future course" of the boycott was to be discussed within the terms that the Negro leaders have laid down for an "acceptable solution."

The Negro population, which had accounted for an estimated 75 per cent of the bus lines passenger traffic, has been boycotting the buses since Dec. 5. On that day Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro, was fined $14 in police court for having refused to move to the rear of a bus.

The boycott's leaders have requested the bus company to employ Negro drivers on predominantly Negro routes.

They also have asked that the "Jim Crow" custom of reserving certain rear seats for Negroes be abandoned and that the bus company permit Negro passengers to take any seats as they become available from rear to forward.

Court's Stand in Doubt

Late yesterday there were reports from Washington that some Federal Government lawyers had expressed doubt that the Supreme Court ruling actually had ruled on the Constitutionality of transportation segregation laws in South Carolina. Some lawyers reportedly held that the decision dealt mainly with a technical procedure of appeal.

Montgomery's city officials have emphasized that they did not regard the Supreme Court decision as applying specifically to Alabama statutes. They also noted that "we are now advised that there is a question as to whether the Supreme Court passed even on the statues of South Carolina.

Meanwhile, Negroes were not pressing the seating issue, although the bus company's decision to ignore segregation statutes was apparently still in effect. The small numbers of Negroes who have continued to ride the buses during the boycott period were still taking rear seats.

It was indicated here that for the time being the Negro leadership largely was keeping its eyes on the principal goal of getting jobs for Negro bus drivers. It was indicated they might let the seating arrangements be worked out along neighborhood patterns.

Montgomery, Ala., Officials Tangle With Bus Company on Mixed Riding

Post + Times Herald P. 42

Fri. 4-27-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 26 (AP)—City officials received legal assurance today that local segregation laws still are valid but they failed to convince bus operators who have ordered the color line removed on their vehicles.

Thousands of Negro workers here, meanwhile, will hold a mass meeting at 8 p. m. tonight to determine if they should call off a 20-weeks boycott of the buses. The Negroes are demanding indiscriminate seating privileges, courtesy from white drivers and assignment of Negro drivers to predominantly Negro routes.

The National City Lines of Chicago, operators of the transit system here, had decided no longer to enforce segregated seating and members of the drivers' union promised to support the company policy.

The city commission, which threatens court action unless the bus company rescends its new policy, appeared determined to keep the passengers from mixing.

Gayle said that the commission earlier took the position that the Supreme Court decision last Monday, leaving undisturbed a lower court ruling against bus segregation, did not pass on Alabama and city laws.

"We are now advised that there is a question as to whether the Supreme Court passed even on the statutes of South Carolina," Gayle said.

[Washington legal experts have said that Monday's Supreme Court order, hailed as ending segregation on intrastate transport, was nowhere near so sweeping. They believe the order was merely procedural and the net effect was only to send the appeal back to the lower courts for further proceedings.]

No solution in sight on boycott

News

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 28 —(AP)—Montgomery's five-month-old bus boycott rocked along Saturday with no solution in sight.

Post, Ala.

Officials of the Montgomery City Lines Inc., have ordered an end to segregation on their buses, but the City Commission insists that city and state laws requiring separation of the races will be enforced.

Sat. 4-28-56

Following a conference between city and bus line officials Friday, Mayor W. A. Gayle issued a statement saying the bus company will be required to abide by city and state laws.

"No agreement has been reached," the statement said.

The bus company had no comment on Gayle's statement.

City Officials, Bus Firm Fail To Settle Rift

The wall separating bus company and city officials remained uncracked yesterday after a second meeting between the belligerents yielded little hope of compromise.

Mayor W. A. Gayle issued a statement following the brief meeting saying the city "will require the (bus) company to follow to the letter" existing segregation laws

Benjamin W. Franklin, vice president of National City Lines Inc., parent company of the local bus line, apparently stood firm on his instructions to bus drivers not to enforce segregation laws.

A reliable source told The Advertiser that no meeting had been scheduled for a future date and "chances of a meeting in the near future are slim." The source did not wish to be quoted.

KEEP UP BOYCOTT

Negroes meanwhile continued their five-month-old boycott of city buses. More than 3,000 Negores massed at Day Street Baptist Church Thursday night voted unanimously to continue the boycott until the city withdraws its threats to arrest passengers and drivers who did not enforce segregation.

Franklin had no comment to reporters' questions following the meeting in the offices of Walter Knabe, city attorney. It was the second meeting in two days between the city and the company. No solutions were reached at either meeting.

No new comment was available on the city's threat to revoke the company's franchise in Montgomery if it failed to comply with segregation laws.

Montgomery Holds Out; Negroes Resume "Walk"

Sat. 4-28-56 Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — City officials held out Friday for "To The Letter" enforcement of all local and state segregation laws in the Montgomery bus dispute.

Members of the City Commission and officials of the National City Lines, operators of Montgomery buses, met for a second time yesterday, but made no progress in pushing their opposing views.

The National City Lines, a Chicago-domiciled firm, announced intentions of complying with the U. S. Supreme Court decision this week and ending enforced segregation on its buses. City officials countered that those responsible for mixing white and Negro bus-riders would be jailed.

After Friday's meeting, Mayor W. A. Gayle said:

"No agreement has been reached. The City Commission has advised the bus company that all laws and ordinances will be enforced, and that the Commission will require the company to follow to the letter all laws and ordinances."

B. W. Franklin, vice president of National City Lines, declined comment.

A representative of the city who attended Friday's meeting said no further discussions were planned, and chances of a compromise were "very slim indeed."

Montgomery's Negro population, meanwhile, renewing a vow not to ride "jim crow" buses again, continued a boycott which began Dec. 5. A suit by Negroes directly attacking Alabama's segregation laws --embodying the same principles on which the U. S. Supreme Court ruled this week--is set for hearing in Montgomery May 11.

Threat To Drivers

By STEVE LESHER

More than 3,000 cheering Negroes unanimously approved a resolution to continue the five-month-old boycott of city buses until the city withdraws its threats to arrest passengers and drivers who violate existing segregation laws.

Rev. M. L. King, president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., read the resolution proposed by the executive committee of the MIA. The resolution praised the Supreme Court and National City Lines Inc. and its local subsidiary for their stands for desegregation.

The resolution began by reviewing the Negroes' reasons for beginning the boycott and continued by reporting the Supreme Court's decision made last Monday and the orders issued by the bus company.

SEVERAL CITIES

After stating reliable sources reported white and Negro passengers ride integrated buses in "several Southern cities, including Richmond, Va.; Little Rock, Ark.; Dallas, Tex., and others," King continued:

"Whereas the public officials of . . . Montgomery and . . . Alabama have indicated . . . that they intend to . . . use all means available, including the arrest of bus drivers and passengers who refuse to abide by and obey the segregation laws . . . it is . . . agreed that the conditions heretofore existing remains the same because of the position taken by our public officials.

"Be it therefore resolved that we, the Negro citizens of Montgomery, Ala. . . . will continue to carry on our mass protest . . ."

The resolution was greeted with a thunderous ovation from the Negroes who massed in Day Street Baptist Church.

King urged that Negroes "not abuse" their "new rights and privileges." He added "a great adjustment needs to be made" among the Negroes.

PRAYERS FOR BAGLEY

He urged the throng to pray for the recovery of J. H. Bagley, superintendent of Montgomery City Lines Inc., who suffered a heart attack early Wednesday.

He also urged prayer for the City Commission "to lift them from the darkness of injustice . . ."

Meanwhile, no solutions to the conflicts in their stands were forthcoming from a lengthy meeting yesterday afternoon between officials of National City Lines Inc. of Chicago, Montgomery City Lines Inc. and Montgomery city commissioners.

REVOKE CHARTER

In a statement issued earlier by Mayor W. A. Gayle and City Commissioner Frank W. Parks and Clyde C. Sellers it was indicated the city would seek to revoke the bus company's franchise if the company failed to uphold segregation laws.

Vice President Benjamin W. Franklin of National City Lines, parent company of the local firm, has taken a stand that the company "is not a police body. We will not enforce segregation and we will not enforce integration." Franklin said the company would "certainly help" a bus driver "if he was arrested for obeying our instructions."

After the two and one-half hour meeting in the offices of City Atty. Walter Knabe, Mayor Gayle issued the following brief statement:

At the meeting besides the city commissioners, Knabe and Franklin were City Clerk Silas Cater, City Atty. Miles S. Hall, National City Lines Atty. Robert Thrun and Montgomery City Lines Atty. Jack Crenshaw.

Franklin said later that no meeting with Negro leaders had been planned.

Bus Ruling And Action Increase Need For Restraint All Around

News p.14 Birm. Ala. Wed. 4-25-56

With the Montgomery local bus company having announced it would apply in its operations at once a U. S. Supreme Court ruling Monday in a South Carolina case generally construed as against segregation in intrastate public transportation, another serious phase of the racial situation in the South has developed. Problems, as was to be expected, are coming one after another in this field.

The buses began operations early yesterday morning under the new company policy of non-segregation.

Police Commissioner Sellers of Montgomery said, however, that until there is a Supreme Court ruling that the decision against bus segregation applies in Montgomery, he is going to enforce all local laws to maintain segregation.

A suit is pending in the United States District Court in Montgomery challenging Montgomery and Alabama segregation laws. A hearing in this suit before a three-judge panel has been set for May 11.

A Negro boycott of the Montgomery buses has been in effect since early December. Few Negroes were riding the buses yesterday but passengers were generally observing segregation. Commissioner Sellers said any passenger who violates city or state segregation laws will be prosecuted.

Here, obviously, is a serious situation with explosive possibilities. That should be so obvious that all concerned should see that restraint and good judgment are urgently needed on all sides.

The bus company, which, of course, has been facing great stresses, acted promptly to establish a non-segregation policy in line with the high court's decision in another case. In some other similar situations having to do with segregation laws and practices on the state and local level, there has been no immediate application of a ruling in one area applying specifically in another area.

We see no prospect of a Supreme Court ruling against desegregation in local public transportation. But we do see possibilities of more serious trouble if efforts at immediate desegregation on buses and street cars are pressed generally in the South.

National City Lines, Inc., operates bus lines in Montgomery and Mobile and other Southern cities. A vice president of that company told The AP in Chicago yesterday that "this company has no choice but to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court."

But it was not, in our view, legally necessary to move at once. Time is needed in meeting the problems and making adjustments in the many-sided racial situation.

The Washington Post and Times-Herald said yesterday an examination of the Supreme Court's order of Monday indicates it was not nearly so sweeping as the general interpretation of it. The story said "all the court did . . . was to send it back to the lower courts for further proceedings."

We hope that wise voluntary action on the part of officials and white and Negro citizens will contribute effectively toward meeting this new phase of our troubles wisely and without more disruptions and disturbances.

Surely it must be apparent to citizens of good sense and good will that restraint will be in the best interests of all.

Precipitate action could increase and intensify difficulties which already are many and serious.

Every citizen directly concerned in the South has an opportunity to do his utmost toward constructive meeting of these difficulties.

State calls conference in Montgomery boycott

News p.9 Fri. 4-27-56 Birm. Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 27—(AP)—Lawyers for the bus company, the city of Montgomery and bus-boycotting Negroes conferred with state's attorneys today in an unannounced meeting growing out of Montgomery's bus segregation dispute.

Negroes meanwhile were committed to continue their long boycott until public officials are willing to accept integration. Montgomery City Lines has abandoned segregation on its buses but city and state officials have insisted on enforcing segregation laws.

THE LEGAL conference was held today in the attorney general's office. Representing the state were Chief Asst. Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion and Asst. Robert Straub.

Speaking for the Negroes were Fred Gray and Charles Langford, Negro lawyers. City attorneys taking part in the conference were Walter Knabe and Drayton Hamilton. Atty. Jack Crenshaw represented the bus line.

The meeting may have dealt with a pending suit in U. S. Court here challenging constitutionality of city and state segregation statutes. The lawyers taking part are those handling the suit which is scheduled for hearing May 11.

SOME NEGROES have continued to patronize the bus line despite the mass protest, but there has been no reported effort to sit with white passengers. The Negroes have stayed in the rear of the buses where they always sat.

The boycotting Negroes thundered approval last night to a resolution pledging them to carry on the protest indefinitely. Said one minister, "we will never go back to Jim Crow buses."

The resolution was adopted by the widely cheering, hymn-singing Negroes without a dissenting vote at the climax of a mass meeting at the Day Street Baptist Church.

THE RESOLUTION, sharply critical of Montgomery's three city commissioners, was drafted by leaders of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., a group organized to support the bus protest.

City Official Doubts More Meetings Will Be Held

Memphis, Tenn.

BOYCOTT IS STILL ON

By The United Press

MONTGOMERY, April 27. — City and transit lines officials failed again Friday to reach an agreement on the firm's new non-segregated seating policy and indicated further conferences would not be scheduled.

After meeting with National City Bus Lines officials for the second time in little more than 24 hours, the City Commission issued a statement saying: "No agreement has been reached."

'Last Meeting'

A member of the city negotiators, who declined use of his name, said: "I think this is the last meeting the city and the National City Lines will hold."

"The City Commission has advised the bus company that all laws and ordinances will be enforced and that the commission will require the company to follow to the letter all laws and ordinances," the statement said.

Meanwhile, the bus boycott neared the end of its 21st week with a "showdown" court test of city segregation laws looming in the near future.

Thousands of Negroes, spurred by a unanimous vote to continue the boycott, walked or rode to work in private cars as they have done for the past five months.

Meanwhile, representatives of the bus company, the City Commission, the Alabama attorney general's office, the state Public Service Commission, and Negro attorney Fred Gray held a fruitless conference in an effort to thrash out details of the upcoming Federal Court trial.

Case Set For May 11

Four Negro women have contested the city's laws requiring Negroes to seat from the rear of buses and white from the front. The case is docketed for May 11.

A spokesman for the attorney general's office called the meeting "routine" and said it was aimed at trying to "reach an agreement on the facts" to be taken up in Federal District Court.

It was learned no agreement was reached at the conference but further meetings were scheduled.

National City Lines, operator of the transit system here, ordered the color barrier removed after the United States Supreme Court refused to consider a South Carolina case involving intrastate transportation segregation.

Supreme Court Ends Bus Segregation

Weekly 4/1

Washington, D. C. (Special).—The United States Supreme Court moved a step closer Monday to making democracy an actual reality within the USA by wiping out racial segregation on public transportation within the borders of a state.

New Orleans La.

The unanimous, short but powerful, decision came during what was expected to be a review of an appeal of a lower court decision that segregation in seat arrangements on South Carolina buses was illegal. In upholding the lower court order, the court cited its own past decisions on segregation cases, dismissing the appeal as "without any authority of law . . . needlessly consumed our time."

Ark. 4-28-56

The case had its origin in Columbia, S. C., when Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming filed suit for $25,000 damages for alleged violation of her civil rights because a bus driver for the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company (operators of the bus line) forced against her a South Carolina law requiring segregation in intrastate buses.

Philip Wittenberg, legal counsel for Mrs. Flemming, said that the case must now be returned to the court of origin for trial on the question of whether she is entitled to damages.

A positive reaction on the issue came shortly after the decision. In Chicago, B. W. Franklin, vice president of the National City Lines, Inc., which controls the bus line in Montgomery, Mobile, Tampa, Fla., and Jackson, Miss., announced Tuesday that the firm "will remove segregation requirements on all its vehicles." Stating further he declared: "The Supreme Court has now said the bus segregation laws are unconstitutional; therefore we are no longer empowered to enforce them."

There was no immediate effect from the order which flowed into this bus-boycott ridden city of Montgomery. The Organization headed by the Rev. Martin L. King was scheduled to meet Thursday night to discuss the latest moves. However, he indicated that the boycott might continue if Negro drivers are not used in predominantly Negro sections.

Elsewhere the decision was viewed with a "not too surprised" attitudes. In New Orleans, the so-called fair-minded democratic viewpoint here was that the order has no effect since the case involved occurred in South Carolina (presumably outside the USA). That was the apparent position of City Atty. Henry B. Curtis and George Dinwiddie, president of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., operators of the city bus lines.

Dinwiddie declared that present instructions for operation of NOPSI buses are based on the laws of Louisiana and remain in effect. Curtis premised that the order itself is not binding on Louisiana or the city, because it was rendered in an action in which neither the state nor the city were parties.

Weekly 4/7

In his usual frame of mind, Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook accused the court of "recklessly exceeding its power" in this as well as its previous desegregation decisions. Georgia Gov. Martin Griffin said legal means would be used to fight this decision too.

Few southern official lacked the gumption to voice the belief of City Atty. O. D. Longstreth, Jr., Little Rock, Ark., who stated that he assumed the city would comply with the court ruling as soon as it can be studied and laid before the council.

Further frustrated opposition was expressed by Sen. Walter F. George, (D-Ga.); Sen. Olin D. Johnson, (D-S.C.), and Sen. Harry F. Byrd, (D-Va.).

Meanwhile, Mayor W. A. Gale of Montgomery, and a member of the white citizens council, declared: "We are going to do everything possible to maintain segregation on buses here."

AFTER MONDAY BOMBING

Sellers Reports Threats Made In Telephone Calls

Wed. 2-1-56

Commissioner Clyde Sellers said yesterday he received a series of telephone calls from "anonymous Negroes" threatening him and his family with violence following the bombing of the Rev. M. L. King's home Monday night.

Sellers said he and his wife "recognized the voices as belonging to Negroes." One caller said, according to Sellers, "The same thing is going to happen to you that happened to King."

Monday night a blast which police said was caused by dynamite rocked the parsonage home of the Rev. King, an outspoken leader in the Negro boycott of city lines. There were no injuries.

Commissioner Sellers said he had "several" similar anonymous calls after he returned to his home Monday night following a personal investigation of the bombing at King's home.

He added that police are making periodic checks around his home and are also watching the homes of the other two members of the City Commission, Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioner Frank Parks.

Meanwhile, the pro-white Central Alabama Citizens Council offered a $500 reward yesterday for a solution to the bombing. Mayor Gayle had posted a similar $500 reward. Yesterday the commissioners officially confirmed the reward in a resolution which said "strange and foreign acts" such as the bombing will not be tolerated.

Negroes have been refusing to ride city buses here since Dec. 5 in protest to the segregated seating required by state and city laws. Boycott leaders have requested that seats be allotted on a "first come, first served" basis.

The bombing was the first violence reported since the early days of the protest movement. Several shots were fired at buses then but they caused no injuries.

The Rev. King, who returned home about 15 minutes after the explosion Monday night, issued an appeal from his bomb-damaged home to Negro spectators. He urged them not to resort to violence and promised: "If anything happens to me, there will be others to take my place."

State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County, president of the Central Alabama Citizens Council, announced the $500 reward offered by his group for a solution to the bombing. He said the council is pledged to fight racial integration by legal means and "we deplore this type of demonstration."

Wed. 2-1-56

The three members of the City Commission are members of the council. They revealed last week that they had joined the anti-integration organization after repeated negotiations with Negro leaders had failed to reach a solution to the bus boycott.

Meanwhile, the City Commission refused to grant a hearing for an application to operate a jitney transportation service filed by a group of Negroes.

First Violence In Montgomery Transit Fight

Kansas City

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — The bombing of the home of a Negro leader in a transit segregation dispute in Montgomery was being investigated by police Tuesday, Jan. 31.

Mo.

An explosive thrown from an automobile caused slight damage to the home of the Rev. Martin L. King, Sr., Monday night.

The missile fell short of its target and exploded in the front yard, but the blast smashed windows in the house and damaged a supporting post.

The Rev. Mr. King was away and members of his family who were in the rear of the house were not injured.

The bombing was the first act of violence in a dispute in which the Rev. King urged a boycott by Negroes of busses in Montgomery after a Negro woman was fined $10 for violating the city's ordinance requiring separate seating.

The bombing of the Rev. Mr. King's home followed by five days the arrest of the minister on a "speeding" charge on Thursday, Jan. 26.

Call

The Rev. Mr. King said that he was arrested after police trailed him for 10 blocks, carted off to city jail, and fingerprinted him. He was held in jail about 15 minutes.

P.A.

The militant Baptist minister said that he was charged with exceeding the 25-mile speed limit, which he denied.

Rev. King said that police trailed him as he left a pick up stop, and when he discharged one of the occupants from his car, ordered him to pull over to the side and said, "You are under arrest."

He said that he was carried to the jail where police at first refused to allow anyone to sign his bond. He said that those who asked to let them make the bond were told they would have to get a bond from City Hall, which was closed.

Word of his arrest began to travel around town and crowds swarmed the scene where police held the militant pastor. Eye-witnesses said they believe police intended to try to keep the Rev. King in jail overnight.

As excited citizens poured to the scene police, according to eye-witnesses, told Rev. King he could be released upon a recognition bond, but released him without even giving him a bond to sign, the minister said.

The Rev. Mr. King said that police had begun widespread arrests "for the past three days" (Jan. 24, 25, 26) in an effort, he thought, to try to break up the citizens' free transportation system. "More than 100 traffic violation tickets have been issued and some of the car pool workers have been frightened off," the Rev. King said.

Call P.3

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 25 (U.P.) —City Commissioner Frank Park said he received six telephone calls today from businessmen "offering to lay off" Negro employes connected with the boycott of Montgomery city buses.

Park declined to name the businessmen who contacted him.

The commissioner said he received "35 or 40" calls yesterday, many of them from businessmen offering to discharge Negroes taking part in the demonstration.

"I received a call from a businessman today who said he has a Negro whom he has employed for 29 years but would lay off if necessary to help end this boycott," Park said. "I told him I would not suggest discharging the Negro unless he is directly connected with the boycott or is a "tool" of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

Park also said the City Commission has not received "a single phone call or letter" criticizing the commission's stand in the boycott.

"In fact," Park said, "we have had numerous letters commending us for your position."

Call P.1 Fri. 2-3-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(ANP)—The mayor of Montgomery has announced that the City Commission will make no further attempts to end the 10-week boycott of city busses by Negroes, Mayor W. A. Gayle backed up his stand by joining the Montgomery Citizens Council.

Kansas City, Mo.

Gayle charged that Negro leaders of the boycott "are after the destruction of our social fabric," and added that "we have pussy-footed long enough."

"The vast majority of whites in Montgomery don't care whether a Negro ever rides a bus again," Gayle declared.

Two members of the City Commission announced they also have joined the Citizens Council, which is devoted to preserving segregation by legal means.

The two are Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and Commissioner Frank Parks.

Whites Play Chauffeur

Gayle went further and warned white Montgomerians against giving rides to Negro employees who refuse to ride the buses. He issued the following statement:

"The Negroes are laughing at the white people behind their backs—the white people who haul the maids and cooks to and from work. They think it's very funny and amusing that whites who are opposed to the Negro boycott will act as chauffeurs to Negroes . . .

"The City Council urges the white people of Montgomery to cease the practice of paying blackmail transportation money in any form or fashion."

Call

The Police Commissioner Sellers, announced that the city's police have been ordered to "break up" Negro groups which he claims have been "loitering" at certain times of the day in white residential areas.

Sellers was referring to persons who wait at designated spots for cars which have been supplying transportation.

Not Giving Up

Yet, despite the mayor's statement that "the Negroes have made their own beds and the white people should let them lie in it," there was no indication that Negro leaders were prepared to end the boycott which began over segregated seating on the buses.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association and pastor of downtown Dexter Avenue Baptist church, when questioned on a wire service story which quoted the Montgomery City Commission as saying that an agreement had been reached for settling the refuse-to-ride protest which began Dec. 5 said the story was misleading.

King sai[illegible] that no representative of the asso[illegible]tion which he heads had talked with City Hall on Jan. 21. He added that he learned that a Rev. W. K. Kines, a Baptist minister; the Rev. B. F. Mosely, a Presbyterian minister and Bishop D. C. Rice, Holiness minister, reportedly had held conference with the City Commission.

However, the Rev. King said that the three ministers did not speak for the MIA and had not been authorized to confer with the city officials as representatives of the protesting group. He said that he later talked with Rev. Kines and Rev. Mosely who explained how they were brought into the City Hall conference.

Neighborhoods Meet

A mammoth set-the-record-straight mass meeting was held at Beulah Baptist church Monday night, Jan. 23. Five neighborhood report-to-the-people meetings were held Thursday night, Jan. 26.

One of the ministers in the "conference" with the City Commission charged that he was "hoodwinked" into the meeting, according to Rev. King. The MIA president said that he was told by one of the ministers who attended the City Commission's "conference with three Negro ministers" that he was asked to come see about an insurance policy.

Arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks on Dec. 1 and finding her Dec. 5 set off the refuse-to-ride campaign. The conviction was appealed to Circuit Court but no date has been set for its hearing.

Bus officials have complained that the reduced bus loads growing out of the protest have resulted in a droppage of revenue. City officials, trying to aid the company, granted it a temporary 50 per cent bus fare raise

Negro patrons before the protest gave the company 75 per cent of its bus-riders. Company and city officials have indicated that the protest has resulted in about a 90 per cent fall off in Negro riders.

Negroes Laughing?

Time

For more than 50 days the Negroes of Montgomery, Ala. have boycotted the city buses, protesting segregated transportation (TIME, Jan. 16). Last week Montgomery's Mayor W. A. Gayle reacted in a way that showed how much the boycott—95% effective—was hurting. He first announced that he and his fellow members of the City Commission had joined the extremist White Citizens' Council. Then he announced a policy of no surrender on the boycott: "We have pussyfooted around on this boycott long enough and it has come time to be frank and honest. There seems to be a belief on the part of the Negroes that they have the white people hemmed up in a corner and they are not going to give an inch until they can force the white people of the community to submit to their demands—in fact, swallow them all." (The Negroes demand seating in buses on a first come, first seated basis, with whites seating from the front backward, Negroes from the back forward.)

Mayor Gayle was specially vexed about the white families who give car rides to their Negro help, or pay their taxi fare. He said that the cooks and maids who boycott the buses "are fighting to destroy our social fabric just as much as the Negro radicals who are leading them. The Negroes are laughing at white people behind their backs . . . They think it's very funny and amusing that whites who are opposed to the Negro boycott will act as chauffeur to Negroes who are boycotting the buses. When a white person gives a Negro a single penny for transportation or helps a Negro with his transportation, even if it's a block ride, he is helping the Negro radicals who lead the boycott. The Negroes have made their own bed, and the whites should let them sleep in it."

Mixed Groups Meet To Discuss Ways To Settle Ala Turmoil

Informer Sat. 2-25-56 p. 20

Houston Tex.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Last Saturday more than 202 whites and Negroes met to discuss ways of settling the tension and strife in that city. The meeting was not only in defiance of the Citizens Council. but in defiance of the Alabama law which forbids mixed meetings.

The meeting was sponsored by the Alabama Council of Human Relations. Among the sponsors were Representatives George Hawkins, floor leader in the State House of Representatives; James Battle, executive secretary of the State Congress of Industrial Organizations; Carl Griffin, state president of the AF of L; Rev Albert S. Foley, professor of Psychology at the Jewett Spring College of Mobile; Rabbi Charles Mantinban of the congregation B'nai Israel of Hattesburg, and many others.

TOOK COURAGE

It took a lot of courage for these whites to attend the meeting. Just the night before, the Citizens Council had a meeting attended by Senator Eastland, Attorney General Cook of Georgia, and other big shots, in which they had raised sand on the race issue.

Dr L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute, spoke of individual leadership in a crisis, and said; "We will all agree we are pacing a crisis."

The meeting was at Alabama State College. At lunch whites and Negroes sat together in the cafeteria.

WALK TO COURT

Ninety of them walked to the courthouse for arraignment on antiboycott indictments returned by a grand jury Tuesday. They all pleaded innocent and their trials were set to start March 19.

Defense attorneys at the same time filed demurrers contesting the indictments which charged violation of Alabama's law against "illegal" boycotting. Maximum penalty under the law is six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

BACK BI-RACE BOARD

Meanwhile, at the Alabama Capitol, Gov. James E. Folsom won support from a group of newspaper editors and publishers and radio and television broadcasters for a proposed biracial commission to settle differences between the white and Negro races.

Meanwhile, in New York, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (Dem) at an emergency meeting of Negro church leaders called for a one-hour mass work stoppage of every Negro in the nation March 28 in support of the Montgomery boycott.

have appealed to both races to scorn the use of force and seek instead a law-abiding, peaceful settlement of their differences.

Negro ministers, 24 of their own number charged with violating the state's anti-boycott law, answered the mass of Grand Jury indictments with prayers for "those who hate us" and with urgent pleas for a continuing campaign of "passive resistance" without violence.

Appeal to Ike

IN WASHINGTON, bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church appealed to President Eisenhower to act against what they called the "tragic persecution" of leaders of the boycott.

The AME Council of Bishops passed a resolution calling on Eisenhower to "place the full power of the executive branch of our government against this tragic persecution of innocent Americans."

Two of judges indicate bus laws in force

B'ham, Ala.

Sat. 5-12-56

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 12—After a day-long hearing in connection with a petition by which several Negroes are seeking to outlaw state and local bus segregation laws, three federal judges took the case under advisement Friday afternoon.

Although the judges composing the panel did not indicate just when they would be ready with their decision, at least two of them left no doubt as to how they feel regarding one point.

BOTH JUDGE RICHARD T. RIVES of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals and U. S. District Judge Seybourn Leynne of Birmingham declared several times, especially during arguments, they do not think the U. S. Supreme Court has ruled finally on bus segregation laws.

Judge Lynne pointedly interrupted one of the Negro attorneys who had just claimed that the April 23 action by the high court in connection with a case from South Carolina was in effect a ruling that bus segregation is unconstitutional.

JUDGE LYNNE insisted that the court had not ruled at all. Furthermore, he pointedly reminded another attorney that the high court in its ruling banning racial segregation in the schools specified that it was invalidating only that part of the 1896 ruling in the Plessy case as it related to education.

Later on, Judge Rives expressed a similar opinion and once again Judge Lynne replied that "That's my opinion, too." The third judge, newly appointed Judge Frank Johnson, did not comment.

The hearing Friday by the three judge special tribunal was the second case this week n which constitutionality of state and local bus segregation laws was at issue.

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones, of Montgomery, in a decision handed down in a case brought by the Montgomery City Commission, upheld legality of the laws. In addition he granted the commission's request for an injunction compelling the Montgomery City Bus Lines to observe segregation laws in seating passengers.

News

One of the main points raised by Judge Jones in his decision was that the U. S. Supreme Court has not ruled at all on the question of legality of bus segregation laws.

P. 2

The case before the three judge tribunal Friday was one in which four Mongtomery Negro women are asking the court to issue a declaratory judgment holding the law invalid.

Sat. 5-12-56

THE JUDGES heard testimony from the Negro plaintiffs, from bus and city officials and from others during the forenoon.

After lunch the court listened to arguments and then took the case under advisement.

The case heard Friday named the Montgomery City Commission, police authorities and the Alabama Public Service Commission as joint defendants.

Because state officials and a state agency was involved, Atty. Gen. John Patterson and three assistants appeared as special counsel for Public Service commissioners.

Mr. Patterson presented a motion that the court eliminate Public Service commissioners as joint defendants.

EARLIER Mr. Patterson had placed Commission President Jack Owen on the stand. He testified that under Alabama law the APSC has no authority to regulate the Montgomery Bus Lines.

The commission lacks authority, he said, because the Montgomery lines operate entirely within the city limits. The commission, he added, has power to regulate but one similar transportation company, the Birmingham Transit Company. That authority, he said, is included in a special act.

In his argument Friday afternoon Atty. Gen. Patterson contended the Public Service commissioners were added as defendants in the amended complaint in order to assure a three-judge panel to hear the case.

Sponsors of the suit, he added, knew that it is customary for appointment of a three-judge panel, headed by an appellate court judge, in cases where state officials or a state agency is a defendant.

The attorney general declared also that the plaintiffs wanted a three-judge court to try the case because appeals can be taken directly from such a tribunal to the U. S. Supreme Court without having to go first to the Court of Appeals.

The judges, however, reserved an opinion concerning Patterson's motion. At the start of the hearing they announced they would not rule on any motion until they are ready to announce their final decision.

Asst. Atty. Gens. William N. McQueen, Gordon Madison and William T. Black assisted Atty. Gen. Patterson.

THE PLAINTIFFS, Susie Mae McDonald, 77, Aurelia Browder, Mary Louise Smith and Claudette Colvin, the latter trio still in their 'teens, testified.

Each testified, more or less in shrill or indignant tones. They alleged a mistreatment received at the hands of bus drivers. They said they objected in particular to having to move their seats to accommodate white patrons.

One witness, the Colvin girl, spoke in a slurring tone and sought to give extensive replies to questions.

Judge Rives finally instructed her to give direct answers to Atty. Knabe's questions and to "stop trying to make speeches."

All three judges appeared interested in just how the bus companies assigned separate seating space to white people and Negroes.

Reynolds C. Mills, an employe of the bus company, said that on buslines serving Negro areas the space alloted to Negroes generally was "more than three-fourths the entire seating capacity." He declared also that bus drivers had authority to adjust the marker dividing the seating space to meet particular occasions.

MR. MILLS told the court that invariably more white people than Negroes are required to change their seats in adjusting the seating capacity to meet special demands.

Plaintiff attroneys sought to develop that Montgomery Negroes are ready to end the six-month-old boycott and go back to riding buses if segregation is outlawed.

Attorneys for the defendants sought in turn to prove that the boycott was all a part of a prearranged plan to have segregation laws attacked in court.

Montgomery Mayor W. A. Gayle testified briefly.

Reliable Negroes, he said, had told him they would like to use the buses again but were afraid of being abused by so-called "goon squads."

Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray, on cross-examination, asked Mayor Gayle: "Do you think it conducive to improved race relations your joining a White Citizens Council?"

"I'll belong to anything that believes in law and order," the mayor replied. "If they started anything out of line I wouldn't be a member, but I have confidence in that organization."

Most of the courtroom spectators were Negroes. They occupied seats anywhere in the courtroom. Apparently there was no semblance of segregation in the courtroom seating arrangements.

THREE-JUDGE PANEL HEARS BUS SEGREGATION ARGUMENTS . . . Richard T. Rives, Frank M. Johnson, and Seybourn H. Lynne

The Bus Segregation Ruling

News P. 10

Wed. 6-6-56

B'ham, Ala.

Two of three federal judges on a special panel held yesterday in Montgomery that segregation on local buses is unconstitutional.

The third judge dissented, holding that the "separate but equal" doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson of 1896 still applies.

It is to be noted, however, that the decision does not immediately become effective. The majority opinion declared: "This holding does not . . . become effective until the entry of formal judgment. The parties are requested to submit to the Court in writing within two weeks from the date of this opinion their views as to the form of judgment to be entered and as to whether such judgment should be stayed pending appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States."

This makes it clear that the legal issue is not yet finally decided; that application of the ruling is not yet ordered.

The majority opinion handed down by Judge Richard T. Rives of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and Judge Frank M. Johnson of the United States District Court in Montgomery concurred in the Fourth U. S. Circuit's opinion in a South Carolina case that the separate but equal doctrine can no longer be safely followed as a correct statement of law.

The Supreme Court in April returned that case to the lower court. This action was widely interpreted to mean the Circuit Court was upheld. But others have maintained that the Supreme Court has not passed on the basic issue.

In a Montgomery case, Alabama Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones held that the Supreme Court had not passed on the constitutional issue and that state and city segregation laws remained in effect. The majority opinion of yesterday expressed the view the 1896 ruling "has been impliedly, though not explicitly, overruled."

It held that segregation laws applying to a common carrier "violate the due process and equal protection of the law clauses of the 14th amendment to the constitution of the United States."

In his dissenting opinion, Judge Seybourn H. Lynne of Birmingham took the position that the "separate but equal" 1896 ruling still applies in local public transportation.

He wrote that it seemed to him that in its decision against segregation in public schools the Supreme Court recognized that there still remains an area within our constitutional scheme of state and federal government wherein the "separate but equal doctrine" may be applied "even though its applications are always constitutionally suspect and for 60 years it may have been more honored in the breach than in the observance."

He pointed out that Congress had not proscribed segregation in intrastate transportation, and continued: "While any student of history knows that under our system of government vindication of the constitutional rights of the individual is not, and ought not to be, entrusted to the Congress, reticence to intrude upon the internal affairs of the several states should caution us against doing so where the path of duty is not plainly marked and when we must hold a clear precedent of the Supreme Court outmoded."

In our lay view the Supreme Court's action in the South Carolina case did not clearly pass on the intrastate issue. Undoubtedly the issue will eventually reach the Supreme Court.

The majority judges in the Montgomery case acted wisely in delaying issuance of an order putting their ruling into effect and in asking views of the parties in the case "as to the form of judgment to be entered, and as to whether such judgment should be stayed pending appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States."

suit decided yesterday were given two weeks to make written suggestions whether an injunction should be granted pending an appeal and how the formal anti-segregation order should be entered.

THE ALABAMA Public Service Commission, a defendant in the suit by four Negro women, announced it would seek to have the ruling set aside pending an appeal it would make directly to the U. S. Supreme Court. It said "any other action would invite racial conflicts in this state."

The Montgomery City Commission, another defendant in the suit, issued a brief statement taking note of the decision. The group said it had not decided what to do.

The appeal might result in the first clear-cut Supreme Court decision on intrastate bus segregation.

ONLY A HANDFUL of Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes rode city buses yesterday after the decision was given on the six-month anniversary of the boycott's beginning Dec. 5, 1955.

King, who was convicted under an Alabama anti-boycott law for helping lead the protest, said yesterday "it is certainly our hope that the court will not suspend its decree pending an appeal.

"It must be emphasized that the decision does not immediately affect the protest," the Baptist minister added.

King said Negroes will end the boycott "whenever it becomes possible to go back on city buses on an integrated basis."

EVEN THOUGH state bus segregation laws were held unconstitutional, separate action will be needed against them in other Alabama cities. One of the judges who signed the majority opinion, Frank M. Johnson Jr. of the Middle District of Alabama, said that in this respect the decision was comparable to the May 17, 1954, Supreme Court

POINTING OUT the two-week period for submission of views, the commission said "we interpret this to mean that the matter is in status quo until a formal judgement. We feel that it would be improper to determine our course of action until a formal judgement is rendered by the court."

Two of Birmingham's three city commissioners said they plan no changes in segregation laws.

Gov. James E. Folsom was not available for comment.

JOHNSON of Montgomery, and Judge Richard T. Rives of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting in New Orleans, signed the majority opinion. They held bus segregation a violation of the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

Judge Seybourn Lynne of the Northern District of Alabama, Birmingham, dissented with the opinion that the "separate and equal" doctrine of racial segregation applies on buses.

Yesterday's decision "calls for both realism and sober wisdom, the Alabama Council on Human Relations said last night. A statement from the bi-racial group that seeks to build mutual consideration between whites and Negroes was issued by its executive director, the Rev. Robert E. Hughes.

"We must face the fact that regardless of personal feelings our laws have been changed—by judges born and reared in Alabama," the council said.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 6—(AP)—Negro leaders of the Montgomery bus boycott waited today for a federal court decision against city bus segregation to result in an injunction against city and Alabama bus segregation laws. Birm. Ala.

"The protest will continue until this is cleared up," the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., one of the boycott leaders, said yesterday.

Three federal judges decided yesterday by a 2-1 vote that the laws are unconstitutional. Lawyers who on May 11 argued the decision against segregated public schools.

Local implementation of the school decision depends upon individual court orders, Johnson said, and so would application of the bus segregation decision.

"I ALSO NOTE that Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones took cognizance of the Sellers observation and ordered the bus company to comply with the segregation laws because of this predicted bloodshed."

The Rev. Mr. King told the assemblage that filled the church that on Friday four of their members were going into Federal Court to seek an end to segregation on the buses.

"Our lawyers believe that the Supreme Court in its recent ruling on a bus segregation case said that segregation in public transportation is illegal.

"HOWEVER, CERTAIN lawyers have reinterpreted the decision to say that it merely applied to Columbia, S.C.

"As we go into court we go with the virtue of optimism. We are optimistic enough to hope for the best, but realistic to expect the worse.

"In our latest case, we have the comfort of knowing that it will be heard by Federal judges. Our local judges, it seems, succumb to whims and caprices of local custom in deciding cases like ours.

"IN THE FEDERAL Courts, a judge is appointed and doesn't have to worry about being reelected.

"God grant them the moral courage and integrity to interpret the Constitution in its true meaning.

"If a speedy decision is granted and there is no reason to expect it, don't go back to the buses until you hear from us.

"We will study the decision, if it is made.

"I am convinced that segregation is on its death bed. As sure as the sun rises in the cosmic order segregation is finished.

"Not only because nine judges have indicated so, but because it is the will of God Almighty.

THE REV. MR. King pointed out if segregation is eliminated that the people should not gloat over a triumph.

"Freedom carries with it an obligation. Freedom is not from something, but to something.

"Once it is achieved, we should take our freedom seriously and our new responsibility seriously.

"REMEMBER THAT our movement is one in the cause of nonviolence. We use the ammunition of love and the breastplate of righteousness.

"We want it known that the colored people of Montgomery are not advocating bloodshed."

THE REV. RALPH D. ABERNATHY, chairman of the program committee, announced that the twice weekly mass meetings would be shortened during the summer season.

Brooklyn Gives Hero Welcome To Dr King

Informer Sat. 4-7-56 Houston, Texas P. 20

NEW YORK — Dr Martin Luther King just convicted of illegal boycotting in Montgomery, was given a welcome by 2500 white and black church members in Brooklyn last Sunday.

The audience laughed and wept they prayed and they yelled. They poured out their money in wastebaskets, sartons, cooking utensils, cake boxes, and every sort of container. It is believed that the collection ran into the thousands.

They did all of this during and in response to Rev King's sermon on passive resistance and love in response to hate.

The invocation was given by a Roman Catholic priest. A rabbi also participated in the ceremonies.

Dr King emphasized the Christian basis of the Negro's program in Montgomery, and it was appropriate on this Palm Sunday for him to quote Christ as having said: "I come not to bring peace but a sword." He explained that the sword in this instance was non-violence evoked against the evil traditions of abuse and segregation. There was not a single infection of bitterness in the Reverend's whole sermon. There was wit, such as: "The South has a heart, but it just has a little heart trouble now."

He told how Negroes were abused on Montgomery buses being forced to stand while empty seats remained for whites who might come; how pregnant Negro women were told to go back to the rear and stand with the rest of the black apes."

Probably the most pathetic scene was when a little white girl, about 10 or 11 years old, shyly dumped her piggy bank into the collection basket.

The Reverend emphasized that however badly they may be treated in the future, they will not resort to violence, and they will not degrade themselves by hatred. He said that the Negroes will return good for evil, that they will love their enemies . . not the way you love your wife, but the kind you love that God prescribed for the brother man. He said Christ showed the way, and Ghandi of India showed how it could work.

Rev King told them the fight would go on whatever happened to him or any other Negro. He announced firmly that he intended to appeal the fine of $500 and the court costs of $500. When the meeting was over, he left to return to Montgomery, where his work was awaiting for him.

Two To One Decision Was Made On Constitutional Question And May Be Final; Scofflaws In Birmingham Say Will Not Give UP Jim Crow Policy; They Still Believe Local Law Upset "Uncle Sam"; Resistance Could Get Somebody In Jail

Another ruling by Federal jurists, capable of producing plenty of delays and law suits over its enforcement, has been handed down by a three-judge panel in Montgomery, Alabama.

The ruling which a three-judge panel handed down Tuesday by a 2-1 vote, is intended to bring to an end the horrid segregation law of Montgomery, which in its worst aspect compels colored women to give up their seats on city buses if and when a white man gets aboard and wants to sit down.

In Montgomery it produced the most courageous resistance the South has ever witnessed and the end is not yet. It caused the offended Negro population of Montgomery to stop riding the buses and here lately indications are that many of these thousands of colored citizens may have bade bus-riding good-by forever.

According to the latest count, there are more than 20 new station wagons purchased by colored church congregations, running in Montgomery and carrying their church m[illegible] and from their places of employment. Many buses are sitting idle in their barns; fares have been increased in a desperate effort to stave off financial losses and thus keep the bus company from going out of business in Montgomery.

The success achieved by the colored people in Montgomery has inspired offended colored citizens of other cities, especially, Tallahassee, Fla., where another such incident as touched off the Montgomery boycott occurred some two weeks ago.

It was the arrest of two colored students of Florida A&M University for occupying a bus seat that had been "reserved" for white persons, only.

In Montgomery, many months ago, it was the arrest of a highly respected colored woman who refused to stand up and give a white person her seat.

Prominent in the news as actors in the Montgomery court decision are three Federal judges. They are Judge Richard T. Rivers of the Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, whose home is in Montgomery and District Judges Frank M. Johnson, Jr., of the Middle District of Alabama and Judge Seybourn H. Lynne of the Northern District of Alabama, and who lives in Birmingham.

An unusual phase of Court action taken in Montgomery was that it was not unanimous. Birmingham Judge Lynne dissented and took his stand on the validity of the "separate but equal" theory which the U. S. Supreme Court wiped out in its May 17, 1954 decision. The other two judges, whatever their private opinion may be about old time "separate but equal," took their stand on what the latest ruling of the Supreme Court is. They held that the racial segregation policy on Montgomery buses violated the 14th Amendment of the U. S. Constitution. In other words, whereas, heretofore Federal Courts have outlawed segregation in interstate transportation, this decision in Montgomery ushers in a new day when racial segregation will be unlawful on buses, makes no difference whether the vehicles operate between places within or in and out any state.

The decision drives another nail in the coffin of the thing called the "rights of the states." States have no rights that permit them to violate the rights of the people.

What will cause a temporary delay in putting the latest ruling on bus segregation into effect is the privilege granted the attorneys on both sides to write out their views on how the formal judgment should be stated and to say whether the decision should be carried to the Supreme Court for a final decision.

Already the Supreme Court has calmly stated that it hoped the lawyers and judges would not clutter up the highest court's docket with cases on which the law is plain.

Nashville Tenn.

Scofflaw elements in the South have stated that they intend to keep colored people spending money on lawsuits over matters on which the courts have ruled. The hope is that the obstructionists will get a cease and desist order from "on high" that will put them in danger of being held in contempt of the Supreme Court.

Lots of citizens woud love to see a judge, lawyer or bus operator looking through the bars of a good stout jail because he had defied the edict of the highest court in the land.

It is believed that the decision of the court in Montgomery not only applies to that city but to the whole state of Alabama and probably to every state having segregation on vehicles of transportation. But it was prominently set forth in the press early this week that in Birmingham the city authorities had said they did not "contemplate" changing their rule on seating because they have a law requiring bus companies plaintly to state with signs where colored people and white people must sit.

In Montgomery the law was disgusting to colored passengers, in that it permitted the bus operators to compel colored passengers to climb up on the front of a bus, put their fares in the box and then get off and run around to the back and get on. Often passengers would do that and before they could speed to the back and get on, the bus operator would pull off and leave the passengers standing.

That and many other such humiliating antics of the bus operators, including the abuse of colored women, made up the accumulation of straws that finally broke the Montgomery camel's back.

Maybe if the preachers hadn't been so scared of their jobs and the money they get from manipulating the Scriptures in a way to make them misrepresent Jesus Christ, they could have preached some human justice into the city's lawgivers and bus company. But there is no evidence they ever bothered about the cruelty to colored citizens.

They ignored the Montgomery situation until the Rev. King, a young Baptist pastor and one of the successor's of the late Dr. J. T. Brown as the minister of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, became righteously indignant and majored in getting the bus boycott started six months ago.

Now the bus company and the petty lawgivers of Montgomery better understand what is meant in the Bible where it says "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life."

ONE OF GROUP PROTESTS—

Leaders of bus boycott misuse funds, is claim

B'ham, Ala.

Ins. 6-12-56 38

BY HENRY S. BRADSHER

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 12—(AP)—Leaders of the six-month-old bus boycott by Montgomery Negroes were charged by one of their number last night with putting personal interests before the protest movement and with misappropriation of boycott funds.

The Montgomery Improvement Assn., which coordinates the boycott for the city's approximately 50,000 Negroes, replied early today that the criticism was "simply another attack designed to hinder our protest movement."

The recording secretary of the association and one of its founders, the Rev. U. J. Fields, resigned his post with the accusations. The Negro minister said, "I can no longer identify myself with a movement in which the few are exploiting the many."

FIELDS SAID boycott leaders "have become egotistical and interested in perpetuating themselves." He charged that "individuals who are handling" money contributed across the nation to support the boycott "are using it for selfish purposes."

The 25-year-old Baptist minister, who three months ago was involved in disputes with his congregation that he said stemmed from his role in the boycott, did not name any individuals.

Dr. Moses W. Jones, second vice president of the MIA, issued a statement from the group today. It termed Fields' criticism "deeply regretable."

"No money received by this association has been misappropriated," the statement said. Individual officials of the MIA who handle its finances also issued flat denials of financial misconduct.

THE STATEMENT contained no direct comment on Fields' charges that boycott leaders have placed personal interest above protest interests.

The MIA was organized when the boycott began Dec. 5, 1955, after Mrs. Rosa Parks, Negro seamstress, was fined $14 for violating bus segregation laws. The association president is the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who was out of town today.

The boycott led to a federal court test of Montgomery city and Alabama state bus segregation laws. A week ago a three-judge federal court panel ruled the laws unconstitutional but held up an injunction against them until attorneys have filed briefs on the decision.

Boycott leaders said the protest will continue until the laws are finally eliminated. State officials said the federal decision will be appealed directly to the U. S. Supreme Court.

FIELDS SAID THAT his position as recording secretary had given him knowledge of funds contributed to support the boycott. He estimated that an amount "up in the thousand of dollars" had been diverted from the announced purpose of providing private transportation for boycotting Negroes.

The MIA has been paying about $3000 a week to provide car pool transportation for the boycotters. Fields said churches, labor unions, industries and "all kinds of social and political organizations" across the nation have been supporting the boycott in addition to the contributions by Montgomery Negroes.

News P. 2

Fields was a recalcitrant state witness during the March investigation of the boycott that resulted in conviction of King for violating an anti-boycott law. Shortly after Fields' appearance on the witness stand a group in his church tried to oust him from his pulpit.

He said at the time "pressure was put on some of my parishioners from outside" because of his "progressive" stand on racial questions.

Ins. 6-12-56

Last night the young minister said that some donations are not brought back to Montgomery in their entirety by couriers who go to get them and that some that reach the association are diverted by persons "using it for their own purposes."

The chairman of the MIA finance committee, the Rev. R. J. Glasco, said Fields' charges of misappropriated funds were "definitely false." His comment was echoed by C. W. Lee, assistant MIA treasurer, and Mrs. Erna Dungee, financial secretary.

Won't be intimidated by ban, says NAACP

NEW YORK, June 12—(AP)—The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People says it "will not be intimidated" by an Alabama injunction banning the NAACP from that state.

The NAACP board of directors said yesterday the organization will fight the ban "in the courts and in the arena of public opinion."

Board Chairman Dr. Channing H. Tobias said the board adopted a policy statement that "instructs the NAACP attorneys to take the necessary legal steps to obtain a hearing on the merits of the Alabama injunction at the earliest possible time with a view to dissolving the court's restraining order."

The court order restrains the NAACP from doing business in Alabama on grounds that its actions in the state have been aimed at violation of Alabama law.

Boycott Anniversary Marked By Negro Community Fasting

Advertiser P. 6-C

Ins. 12-1-56

The ringing of Montgomery Negro church bells early yesterday began "a day of fasting and prayer," marking the beginning of a second year of resistance to segregation by local Negroes.

Delegates to the Negro Institute on Non-violence and Social Change being held here this week, and Montgomery Negroes in general, participated in the commemoration of the start of the bus boycott a year ago.

Bells rang for five minutes and Negro churches opened at 6 a.m. to conduct services for worshippers on their way to work.

Most Montgomery Negro families reportedly abstained from food until late in the afternoon. A source at Alabama State College for Negroes said, however, the school's dining hall operated as usual.

The usual luncheon meeting held daily since the institute started was canceled. Institute chairman Ralph D. Abernathy, one of the boycott leaders, said he couldn't tell how many Negroes observed the day of fasting. Abernathy added that all Negroes he had contacted went without food.

At the seminar yesterday afternoon, the Rev. Glenn Smiley, white field secretary or the Fellowship of Reconciliation, lectured and discussed "Non-Violence in Social Change" and Dr. H. V. Richardson, president, Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., concluded, speaking on the "Social Aspects of the Christian Gospel."

Guest artist at the meeting last night was Mahalia Jackson, well-known Negro gospel singer from Chicago. Local Negro quartets — Spiritual Flames, Bells of Paradise and Spiritual Four — also were on the program.

The Negroes are now awaiting delivery of a U.S. Supreme Court decision of Nov. 13 banning city bus segregation to U.S. District Court here. After the decree arrives, enforcement of segregated seating of city buses will be illegal in Montgomery.

Negroes have voted to end the year-old bus boycott when bus segregation ends.

Before recent legal developments a court official said the high court order would reach Montgomery about Dec. 12. Since that time the State of Alabama and Montgomery have asked the Supreme Court to reconsider its ruling.

To what extent the petitions filed by the state and city will postpone the decision's arrival here is not known.

Ala. Bus Boycotters' Prayers Answered

Afro-American Sat. 6-16-56 P.5

Baltimore, Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "It appears that our prayers are answered and our people have not walked in vain."

That was the observation last week of Fred D. Gray, youthful attorney for the four plaintiffs, who successfully initiated a legal attack on the city and state bus segregation laws.

ON LAST Monday, a Federal court panel of three judges decided 2-1 that the laws requiring segregation were illegal.

Mr. Gray said that he "was going to ask the court to issue a permanent injunction to restrain the city and state officials and the bus company from enforcing segregation on buses."

Attorneys for the state and city are going to request a stay of a court order pending an appeal of the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

MEANWHILE, MR. GRAY revealed that the bus protest was continuing. A car pool, bolstered by 17 station wagons, is transporting the majority of the city's 50,000 boycotters.

The boycott began on Dec. 5, 1955.

"Prior to the decision," Mr. Gray said, "our station wagons were constantly being shadowed by police officers.

"The drivers received many traffic tickets each day. The practice died down somewhat after the decision."

The opinion which declared that segregation on public vehicles was unconstitutional was shared by Judges Richard T. Rives of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. of the U.S. District Court.

The dissenting opinion was filed by Judge Seybourn H. Lynne of the U.S. District Court.

The suit was brought by Mrs. Aurelia S. Browder, Mrs. Susie McDonald, Miss Claudette Colvin and Miss Mary L. Smith.

IN ITS ruling, the majority of the panel denied the motion of Attorney General John Patterson for dismissal of the suit.

In denying the request that the panel "for reason of comity," declined to exercise jurisdiction in the case until the state courts ruled on the construction and validity of the statutes and ordinances in question, the judges wrote:

"That doctrine has no application where the plaintiffs complain that they are being deprived of constitutional civil rights, for the protection of which Federal Courts have a responsibility as heavy as that which rests on the state courts."

JUDGES RIVES and Johnson observed that:

"There is . . . a difference, a constitutional difference, between voluntary adherence to custom and the perpetuation and enforcement of that custom by law. Shelly vs. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 11, 12.

"The 14th Amendment provides that 'No state shall . . .deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

"THOSE PROVISIONS do not interfere with the police power of states as long as the state laws operate alike upon all persons and property similarly situated. Barbier vs. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 31, 32.

"That amendment 'merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions, both in privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed.' Merchant vs. Penn. Railroad, 153 U.S. 380, 390.

"We cannot in good conscience perform our duty as judges by blindly following the precedent of Plessy vs. Ferguson, supra, when our study leaves us in complete agreement with the Fourth Circuit opinion in Flemming vs. South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., 224 F. 2d, 752 appeal dismissed, April, 1956:

"'THAT THE separate but equal doctrine can no longer be a correct statement of the law.'

"In fact, we think that Plessy vs. Ferguson has been impliedly, though not explicitly, overruled, and that under later decision, there is now no rational basis upon which the separate but equal doctrine can be validly applied to public carrier transportation within the City of Montgomery and its police jurisdiction.

"The application of that doctrine cannot be justified as proper execution of state police power."

THE JUDGES concluded that the segregation laws "violate the due process and equal protection of the law clauses of the 14th Amndment to the Constitution of the United States

They, however, gave both sides two weeks to submit in writing their views as to the form of judgment that should be entered and whether a formal decree should be held up pending appeal to the Supreme Court of the U.S.

Judge Lynne said that he dissented "on the authority of Plessy vs. Ferguson (the doctrine of separate but equal.)"

C. C. (Jack) Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, said he was "disappointed and shocked at the majority opinion. The basis of the scholarly dissent by Judge Lynne, . . . should have controlled the case."

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, who admitted being a member of the White Citizens Council and predicted violence if segregation ended, had no comment.

Mayor W. A. Gayle also would not comment.

Among its listed objectives is "respect for the individual in the use of public facilities."

It also seeks "to encourage individuals to become first class citizens by securing the ballot and using it wisely" and to support "any and all other acts which will improve the city and county of Montgomery so that all of its citizens will receive all the rights and privileges guaranteed by the state and federal constitution."

Negro Cleric To Tell 'Facts' On Funds Use

Chron. 6-14-56

Montgomery, Ala.

A Negro minister who charged the Montgomery Improvement Association with misappropriation of funds repeated his accusation yesterday and promised to release "the facts" in the near future.

Undaunted by a strong denial by the MIA, Rev. Fields said yesterday he hasn't decided "when to release the facts relative to this particular situation, but I have no doubt as to those facts and will release them at the proper time."

ACCUSED LEADERS

Following his resignation as MIA recording secretary, the Baptist minister last Monday accused several boycott leaders of putting personal interests before the protest movement. He said they used money contributed from throughout the nation for "selfish purposes."

Fields said the "proper time" to release "the facts" depends on several things. But he added it would be less than a month.

Whether he will present "the facts" to Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford hasn't been decided yet, he said.

Muscle Shoals buses drop segregation

News P. 1 Sun. 5-1-56

FLORENCE, Ala., May 1 —(AP)—Shoals Transit, Inc. drivers stopped enforcing racial segregation in the Muscle Shoals area without incident about two days ago," Manager Tom Bolen said today.

B'ham, Ala.

Bolen said, "Everybody is still sitting in his own place." He said city officials agreed "the only thing we could do was to sit tight and see what happens."

"My drivers have told me that there has been no pronounced change so far," the bus line manager said. "In some ways things have been going even smoother than before the Supreme Court decree.

"I do not believe we will have any trouble here at all unless it is formented from the outside."

BOLEN SAID that if anyone objects to where anyone else is sitting, "He can call the police. We're not law enforcement officers. We're bus drivers."

Shoals Transit Inc. serves the Tri-Cities of Florence, Sheffield and Tuscumbia. The area has a population of about 55,000, of whom about one-fifth are Negroes.

Bowen estimated the bus line carries about 60,000 passengers per month, of whom one-third are Negroes.

Bolen pointed out that federal law "says we can't segregate, and state law says we can't integrate We're over a barrel."

SHOALS TRANSIT is owned by American Transit Lines, Inc. St. Louis.

Segregation on buses still legal, city says

News P. 1 Wed. 4-25-56

B'ham, Ala.

Birmingham city officials said today racial segregation on intra-state buses is still legal.

The U. S. Supreme Court simply sent a South Carolina case back to the lower courts for further proceedings, City Atty. J. H. Willis said.

Commissioner R. E. Lindbergh said, "As of now we still have legal, vital laws on intra-state bus segregation."

Willis emphasized the Supreme Court did not decide the South Carolina case on its merits.

In its four-word decision—"the appeal is dismissed"—the court remanded the case to the lower courts on the grounds that the judgment of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was not a final one, Willis said.

"THE DECISION of the Circuit Court of Appeals was on the merits of the case and held that segregation on intra-state buses violated the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment.

"Yet, since it (the Supreme Court) remanded the case to the District Court for further proceedings, the decision was not a final one from a technical point of view."

Mobile To Enforce Bus Segregation

Post-Herald Wed. 4-25-56

MOBILE, April 24 (AP)—Police Commissioner Charles F. Hackmeyer said today segregation of bus passengers will be continued in Mobile despite a decision by the bus company to stop requiring segregated seating of whites and Negroes.

P. 12

The commission split over the question.

B'ham, Ala.

Commissioner Henry R. Luscher joined the police official in saying the city law will be enforced. The other member, Mayor Joseph N. Langan said, however, he felt the ordinance was invalidated by the Supreme Court's ruling yesterday.

"I don't see there is anything the Mobile City government can do about it," Lagan said. He proposed that bus segregation be continued on a voluntary basis.

Hackmeyer said when it became clear that Mobile City Lines Inc., had stopped enforcing racial segregation on the buses, he would "call in the city attorney and determine the proper steps and procedures to see that the segregation laws of the City of Mobile are continued to be enforced."

The police commissioner said Mobile was not a party to the South Carolina case in which the Court made its ruling. He said the city law consequently was still in effect and would be enforced "just as any other ordinance."

State Bus Line Lifts Racial Barrier

FLORENCE, Ala., May 1 (AP)—Shoals Transit Inc. drivers stopped enforcing racial segregation in the Muscle Shoals area without incident "about two days ago," Manager Tom Bolen said today.

Bolen said "everybody is still sitting in his own place." He said city officials agreed the only thing to do was to sit tight and see what happens.

"My drivers have told me that there has been no pronounced change so far," the bus line manager said. "In some ways things have been going even smoother than before the Supreme Court decree.

"I do not believe we will have any trouble here at all unless it's fomented from the outside."

Bolen said that if any one objects to where any one else is sitting "he can call the police. We're not law enforcement officers. We're bus drivers."

Shoals Transit Inc. serves the tri-cties of Florence, Sheffield and Tuscumbia. The area has a population of about 55,000, of whom about one-fifth are Negroes.

Bolen estimated the bus line carries about 60,000 passengers per month, of whom one-third are Negro.

Bolen said that federal law "says we can't segregate, and state laws say we can't integrate. We're over a barrel."

Shoals Transit is owned by American Transit Lines, Inc., St. Louis.

"Negro passengers have been unusually courteous," Bolen said, "going to great lengths not to offend anyone. Everybody realizes that we are in a bad situation and the less said about it perhaps the better."

The manager said the company never had signs designating areas for white and Negro passengers but drivers notified passengers where they must sit.

Negro Minister Denies OK Of Bus Compromise

Post-Herald Tues. 1-24-56

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 23 (AP)—A Negro minister who attended a City Commission meeting Saturday denied today that he had agreed to a plan for ending Montgomery's seven-week-old bus boycott.

The Rev. B. F. Mosely said he was one of three Negro ministers who attended the meeting at the invitation of the City Commission. The "bus situation" was brought up, Mosely said, but he did not agree to any compromise plan for terminating it.

Birmingham

After the meeting, the City Commission issued a statement indicating a compromise proposal was agreed on "by all present."

Ala.

Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioner Clyde Sellers later declined to disclose the names of the "prominent Negro ministers" who attended.

The Rev. M. L. King, Negro pastor and one of the leaders in the boycott, said he had not been invited to the meeting and did not believe the group "was speaking for our people here in Montgomery."

"I'm sure none of our group was present," he said, adding that he believes the boycott will continue.

Meanwhile, the bus company today resumed normal service on three routes through predominantly Negro sections. Service had been stopped or curtailed because of the boycott.

Three Cities Are Involved In Action At Florence

Wed. 5-2-56

FLORENCE, Ala., May 1.—(AP)—City bus drivers in this Tennessee Valley area were ordered to haltt enforcing racial segregation "about two days ago," manager Tom Bolen said Tuesday.

Memphis Press-Scim.

Shoals Transit, Inc., serves the tri-cities of Florence, Sheffield and Tuscumbia, an area of about 55,000 persons. One-fifth of the population is Negro.

Mr. Bolen said, "My drivers have told me that there has been no pronounced change so far." He said city officials agreed "the only thing we could do was to sit tight and see what happens."

The manager added that if any one objects to where anyone else is sitting, "He can call the police. We're not law enforcement officers. We're bus drivers."

Shoals Transit is owned by American Transit Lines, Inc. of St. Louis and carries about 60,000 passengers a month in this area. About one-third of the passenger total is Negro.

City Transit officials at Montgomery have ceased enforcing segregation, but city authorities immediately announced that segregation laws would be enforced as long as they are on the books.

Mr. Bolen said his company never had signs designating areas for white and Negro passengers, but drivers notified passengers where they must sit.

Call-Leader Kansas City, Mo. Fri. 7-27-56

MONROEVILLE, Ala. — (ANP) — A state representative here has drafted a new bill designed to preserve racial segregation in public transportation in Alabama through a bill that gives a white woman "her choice or election to the entire seat on a bus, streetcar or train."

The bill is sponsored by Rep. Nick S. Hare, who plans to introduce it at the next session of the state legislature.

In announcing the bill Hare said: "None of the threatened possibilities disturbs southerners more than the prospect of a Negro man taking a seat beside a white woman. This sensitive spot in race relations is generally acknowledged to be the most likely to create strife and tension, or to erupt suddenly in riots or bloodshed.

"The proponent of mixed seating on buses has transportation companies caught in the middle of this turmoil and uncertainty. Bus companies are faced on one hand with organized boycotts by Negroes, and on the other hand with the prospect of complete abandonment of bus travel by white women apprehending mixed seating."

He said his proposal "will give a woman the entire seat she occupies if she wants it, and she may exclude any other person from it, thus preventing an undesirable person from sitting beside her.

"There is no mention of race or color," he remarked, adding that "The law would preserve the dignity, safety and security of women and protect them from embarrassment on public conveyances."

Hare considered the plan "remarkably simple" and contended it would "apparently assure the practical continuance of segregation on public conveyances."

State Also To Appeal Bus Segregation Ban

Post-Herald Birmingham, Ala. Tues. 6-26-56

Public Service Commission To Follow Montgomery In Top Court Move

MONTGOMERY, June 25 (AP)—State authorities announced today that they, too, will ask the Supreme Court to overrule a lower court order holding city bus segregation in Montgomery unconstitutional.

City officials already had decided they would appeal from a decision handed down June 5 by a three-judge panel in federal court. They have until Friday to file notice of the appeal.

The announcement from the Public Service Commission which administers state laws requiring separate seating of white and Negro passengers came following a conference with Atty. Gen. John Patterson.

PSC President Jack Owen and Associate Commissioners Jimmy Hitchcock and Sibyl Pool said the notice will be filed before the deadline.

Carrying out the intent of its June 5 ruling, the federal court panel issued an injunction last Tuesday against continued enforcement of city and state segregation laws on the city buses.

But the injunction was suspended for 10 days to give the city and state time to prepare an appeal, and if an appeal is filed, the suspension will remain in effect indefinitely until the Supreme Court rules whether bus segregation is legal or unconstitutional.

Negro attorneys, however, can ask th ehigher court to set the suspension aside and put the injunction into effect immediately while the appeal is pending. They said they will decide on their next course after the deadline for filing the appeal.

The policemen, Jack Shows and K. W. Jones, filed the petitions in Circuit Court Friday claiming they suffered "severe personal injuries" in the wreck on a downtown street last May 23.

Defendants named in both suits are Alberta James, driver of the station wagon from the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, and the Montgomery Improvement Association,

NEGRO WITNESSES TELL OF LONG ENDURED ABUSES

"Get Back Niggers" Common Expression Hurled At Riders

Informer & Houston Tex.
Sat. 3-31-56

BY CHARLES H LOEB
NNPA Correspondent
Montgomery, Ala

"Git back nigger."
"Git up nigger."
"Git out nigger."
"Go to the back nigger."
"Let that white man sit down, nigger. You black ape."

The shocking chant went on, and on, and on, throughout Tuesday afternoon and into the evening, as a procession of Negro defense witnesses "wrote into the record" the shameful and long-endured abuses and humiliations Montgomery's Negro passengers have suffered at the hands and from the lips of the majority of bus drivers employed by the Montgomery City Lines, now estimated to be losing some $3500 per day because on December 5, 1954 Montgomery's Negroes abruptly stopped using the buses.

The defense was showing "just cause" for what the State of Alabama alleges is an illegal conspiracy in restraint of business, but with little apparent success in proving it so through its harassed corps of city solicitors. The tired trio, after a day and one-half of wrestling with witnesses who were either uncooperative or who had little of value to tell, wearily rested its case.

This almost weary capitulation was the signal for the defense to swing into action. Its first move was for a directed verdict that would exclude all of the state's testimony and halt the trial of the Rev Martin Luther King, Jr with a verdict of acquittal.

Presented by Fred D Gray of Montgomery, selected for the assignment by his colleagues in a brilliant battery of seven Negro lawyers here defending Rev King and 89 others, it was an eloquent, scholarly, but futile plea.

Judge Eugene Carter promptly denied it.

But those of us who sat in the Montgomery Circuit Court will not soon forget it. Through Gray the Negroes of Montgomery---and of the nation--were calling upon a court of law in deepest Dixie to forget the skin color of the petitioner before the bar and embrace, with cold and uninhibited logic the basic constitutional precepts that have made the nation great, despite divisions and inequities.

Gray argued that:

1. No criminal conspiracy had been proven.

2. That there had been no showing that the defendant, Rev King has taken any part in an illegal action.

3. The state had not proven even a prima facia case.

4. The statute under which Rev King and others are being tried, though questionable in its constitutionality, provides that the alleged conspiracy must not only be illegal, but must also be committed without just cause. The state, Gray contended, had proven neither.

The statute requires proof of both.

5. Any conviction of the defendant would be illegal and void, as he is an American citizen, and as such is entitled to the freedom of speech, of assembly, of petition, and of due process of law.

Gray covered, point by point, the accusations of the state, the evidence through its witnesses, and labeled it "insufficient to convict."

He said that whatever action the Negroes of Montgomery took in refusing to ride in segregated buses was taken voluntarily, and pointed out that throughout the three long, sometimes tension-filled months, Negroes made no effort to prevent the bus company from operating their buses, wherever they pleased.

The sole testimony that company property had been shot at and stoned had been given by bus drivers who admittedly did not see who shot at or stoned the vehicles, did not know whether the originators of the attacks were whites or Negroes.

To the contrary, be argued, a white witness for the state, a competent city editor, who had thoroughly covered most of the big mass meetings held in various Montgomery Negro churches, had given testimony that the accused Rev King had indeed calmed down a group of angry Negroes who gathered around his freshly-bombed home, and disperse them with a warning against violence or physical retaliation of any kind.

Even if under Alabama's outdated conspiracy law, it could be said that the operation of the Montgomery Improvement Association was a "conspiracy," evidence brought out from state witnesses under cross-examination sustained that Negroes had petitioned bus officials and their City Fathers time after time, without avail, for relief from the abuses and unequal treatment they have received.

And that had done this BEFORE they decided to stay off the buses.

"Can it be denied that they had just cause?" Gray asked. If so, then, even under Alabama law, the state had failed to establish its case, and to further continue the ordeal for Rev King and the other accused to go forward with further defenese...

It is unconstitutional.

Because, the soft-spoken, earnest young lawyer (27) explained:

It would be a violation of his freedom of speech--freedom of assembly-right of redress- right to due process of law.

It was clear that the defense was preparing for the eventuality that, one day, the United States Supreme Court may become acquainted with the Montgomery 'manifesto."

"Git up nigger."
"Git back nigger."
"Git out nigger."
"Go to the back nigger"
"Let that white man sit down, nigger, You black ape."

Montgomery's Negroes tired of the chant, started walking.

They still are.

50,000 Negroes Said 'Stop Riding The Buses'

MONTGOMERY, Ala —The defense was having its day. The state had rested its case in the first of the Montgomery boycott trials Tuesday. Judge Eugene Carter had forced them to call the first of 37 witnesses by overruling a defense motion that it throw out the state's evidence as insufficient to convict the Rev Martin Luther King.

From midday until after 5 p m 20 defense witnesses had been called to the stand, school teacher, washerwoman, minister, school children, store clerks, widows, employed and memployed, polished speech and inarticulate, placid and angry, resentful and tolerant.

Negro Montgomery, at last, got a chance to "testify" to the wrongs it has suffered--from way, way back.

There'll be more on Wednesday. All with two things in common. They're Montgomery citizens and all have "experienced unpleasant incidents" while riding the buses of the Montgomery City Lines.

And something else, too.

All of them have stopped riding on the buses..

Smartly-attired Thelma Class, member of the Woman's Political Council, had been on numerous committees which had called on City Fathers and on bus company officials for "more courtesy from bus drivers."

Officials were polite. Bus drivers kept on calling Negro women "'n——s."

MRS SADIE BROOKS, 21 years residence, a respected member of the City Federation; also met with officials as a member of various committees-city commissioners, bus officials, in 1952. Again in 1954.

Officials listened politely. Bus drivers still kept passing up Negroes, cold weather or warm. Once saw a driver pull his pistol and order a Negro passenger off the bus. No cross-examination.

RUFUS LEWIS, President of the Citizens Club and originally a state's witness. He's now encouraging Negroes to register and vote. He met with officials too, made the usual complaints, begged for improvement.

Negro bus riders still "black apes". Negro women, "cows."

MRS GEORGIE THERESA GILMORE, citizen of Montgomery since 1920. Couldn't wait for any boycott, stopped riding in October 1955. Tired of hearing "Come out nigger and go into the back." Saw too many others insulted, standing over empty seats and not permitted to sit in them

"I told that bus diver when the company gets it all together, they can't tell Negro money from white money."

"That red head, freckled-faced bus driver on the S Jackson line is a "very nasty bus driver. The nastiest I've ever seen."

RICHARD JORDAN, 26 years in Montgomery, riding buses, taking insults. Bad experiences? "Too many to recall them all. Remembers how they made his pregnant wife get up on trips to doctor "her time was close", to give up seat to whites.

DELLA PERKINS, 14 years of residence, and eager to testify. She was called an "ugly black ape". She's still mad about it. Asked if she had talked with anybody about the case.

"Yes," Attorney Gray.

Three solicitors straighten up (this is it)

Q. "What did he tell you?
A. "He told me to tell the truth"
NO FURTHER QUESTIONS.

GLADYS MOORE, in Montgomery since 1942. "Very familiar with the "code of seating" on the Montgomery City Lines.

Whites enter through the front. First ten seats reserved for whites.

Negro enter from the back, last ten seats reserved for colored.

In white neighborhoods, only daring Negroes sit in "middle seats" bus drivers will make them move, under threat of arrest, regardless of whether or not all seats in "colored reserve" are taken.

"Git up nigger. Git back" is the stock command.

Compliance means peace. Resistance means arrest.

In predominately Negro neighborhoods, company relaxes the rigidity of its rule on "middle seats". Since these buses are jam-packed with colored passengers going downtown, these seats may be used, but at the risk of having to give them up if white passengers board the bus and all white "reserved" are filled.

The story is becoming monotonous already. State has stopped making objections. Judge seems bored, finally he takes a hand in the proceedings.

For my own information" he purrs, "why did you stop riding the buses on December 5."

Mrs Moore: Because I didn't like the way they treated Mrs Parks, it wasn't fair, Judge.

Judve: Did you attend any of those mass meetings?

Mrs Moore: Yes, several of them.

Judge: Was Rev King there?

Mrs Moore: Yes he was, almost every minister in town was there.

Judge: Who said stop riding the buses?

Mrs Moore: 50,000 NEGROES IN MONTGOMERY.

Shouts, applause, laughter were quickly quelled.

Judge Carter says those in contempt of court go to jail.

But now the judge knows.

Rev M L King Well Defended By Staff Of Negro Lawyers

Informer Houston Tex 1-19

By CHARLES H LOEB
NNPA Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala— "Motion denied".

Here, in terse legal language, was Alabama's answer to the Rev Martin Luther King and, through him, to 50,000 Montgomery Negroes on whether the Negroes of Alabama have the right, under state statutes to petition, assemble, and peacefully protest their greivances.

It was a justice that was indeed blind. Blind both to the spirit and to the letter of constitutional law. In finding the militant young Montgomery minister $500, and hearing the expected defense notice of appeal, Judge Eugene Carter, with the air of a good southern gentleman dispensing charity to his faithful retainers, approved a mutual agreement between state and defense lawyers that the 89 other defendants, arrested with Rev King remain free on their original bails until such time as the remedies in appeal sought in the King case have been exhausted.

WELL TRIED

Contrary to expectations, this trial was no farcial performance-- no arrogant show of Dixie Justice at its worst. It was not dispensed by a tobacco-chewing backwoods judge addressing his petitioners of color as "boy", or Rufus, or Mandy. It was prosecuted by able solicitors; the best the City of Montgomery City Bus Lines could obtain.

They knew well the law under which they had elected to try as conspirators Rev King and those associated with him in operating the activities of the Montgomery Improvement Association under whose leadership the Negro in Montgomery has shown the world an almost unbelievable miracle of Negro cohesion and determination.

The old statute they had dug up in their efforts to "put an end to this foolishness" had been tailored to their specifications by another generation of Alabamians who at the time were rather desperate about the increase in union memberships. IIts original bias was against white workers. Now, in Alabama's great hour of need it was lying there, rusty, unused, never repealed, to be used against this unprocedented show of Negro solidarity.

ABLY DEFENDED

Among the brilliant staff of Negro lawyers who conlucted the defense, there was never any doubt about the outcome, though each of the eight scrupulously refrained from such predictions.

Charles Langford, Arthur Shores, Fred D Gray, Robert Carter, Orzell Billingsley, Peter Hall, Dr C Eubanks Tucker and Edmund Ragan, huddled together over the counsel table, exchanging notes, ferreting, out witnesses from the tips handed them by Montgomery leaders, were not trying a simple misdeameanor in a small town Circuit Court.

They knew what they were doing and they knew that they, or a hundred different combinations of their counterparts will have to be doing the same thing all over the stubborn Southland before the fine-sounding pronouncements of the United States Supreme Court can have real meaning for the Negro in Montgomery, who must either walk or ride the city buses and hear, over and over again, " to the rear you niggers".

Judge Eugene Carter knew that they were not really trying the case before his court. They were trying it before the Supreme Court of the United States, and to their everlasting credit legal experts who watched their thoroughness, nodded their approval of their efforts.

"Objection." "Overruled." "Objection." "Overruled." Until one lost count, after it became apparant that the ratio would run something like 20 overruled to one "sustained".

RACE SUPREMACY VS LAW

But the counsel for Rev King and his associates well knew that some nine millions of Negroes in 17 states of the South were really the accused.

So, they refused to be ruffled by the special inflection state prosecutor Thettford gave to his precise "Nigra" when referring to colored people. The two other solicitors found it quite easy to pronounce the acceptable Negro.

Judge Carter, too was a "Nigra" pronouncer, too as he sat calm, detached, radiating keen enjoyment of his role, there upon the bench holding the ramparts for the anti-desegregationists - - holding the fort for the Folsoms, Eastlands, Longs anl Ellenders of the reluctant South. . . buying time for the crumbling confederacy that feels its birth pains again but is afraid to conceive.

Appeals are long, drawn-out affairs, and costly, too. So, The South, Alabama, Montgomery Judge Carter are making it as expensive as possible and as long delayed as trick lows, manifestoes, Citizens Councils, economic squeezes, and police state justice can make it.

BOUGHT TIME

The result is inevitable, Alabama bought time at Montgomery, but they have done little to ease the plight of Northern investors who have their money sunk into the Montgomery City Lines.

WILL NEGROES NOW BOARD THE BUSES?

70 Negrooes right outside the courthouse, minutes from the finale, toll this reporter "No" some added, "Never".

They waited outside to cheer, to hug, and to kiss the little leader they have come to trust and adore, and to crowd around him and his attractive and loyal wife with cries, "Hail the King", "Don't worry, we're still walking".

And the City of Montgomery, too, is paying a dear price for this show of Dixie legal strong-arm. It has been pretty expensive this putting "those Negroes in their places'.

Montgomery City lines has lost more than $300,000 in revenue they once collected from Negroes who no longer use their buses.

Before the boycott, (as one Negro Witness, Mrs Georgia Theresa Gilmore declared on the witness stand) bus officials couldn't tell the white money from the Negro money.

NOW THEY CAN.

The white money is far from enough to support the operation. Negroes' testimony revealed during the trial, are 70 percent of the company's customers.

Pardon! Ex-customers.

Bus Boycott Paying Off

Pittsburgh, Pa.

B-U-L-L-E-T-I-N-!

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Faced with a tremendous financial loss, City Commission granted a bus fare hike to the Montgomery City Lines, effective Monday. The fares were increased from 10 to 15 cents, with children's fares up from 5 to 8 cents.

Sat. 1-14-56 38b

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—An economic squeeze . . . with reverse English . . . has the Montgomery City Lines, local bus company, hanging on the ropes!

The squeeze, in the nature of a boycott by Negroes of the city, following a long series of abuses and mistreatments, has accomplished the following:

MRS. ROSA PARKS
. . . victim of bus bias

1—Forced an increase in bus fares.

2—Proven 95 per cent effective for the city's 40,000 Negroes.

3—Pointed up the fact that 75 per cent of the bus riders, under normal circumstances, are Negroes.

4—Forced 80 per cent of the buses to be laid up—with 75 per cent of the bus drivers laid off.

5—Negroes are walking to work (some as far as five miles); with Negro taxi companies ferrying passengers at 10 cents per head, plus hundreds of car pools.

6—Aroused the sympathy of many whites, some who are joining Negroes in their "Don't Ride the Bus" campaign, with white housewives picking up Negro domestics in their cars and taking them to and from work.

This fabulous rebellion . . . first of its kind in recent Southern history . . . isn't getting much attention in the nation's press.

Because it has proved conclu-

Dr. Bennett Rev. Abernathy

sively that the threat of an "economic squeeze," weapon of the White Citizens Councils of the South, is a two-way street.

Montgomery's Negroes, who have taken the action, without violence or threats of bloodshed, have hit the white South where it hurts most—in their pocketbooks!

RUFUS A. LEWIS
. . . key figure in boycott

And it is a graphic lesson to Negroes in other sections of the South that they, too, have a weapon of devastating and destructive power.

THE BOYCOTT action was touched off by the Dec. 1 arres and Dec. 5 conviction of Mrs. Rosa Parks, under the city's "move-back" segregation laws.

When Mrs. Parks refused to move back to allow a white person to sit down on a crowded bus, she was arrested by the bus driver (who has police powers to arrest) and fined $14.

This was it!

Negroes quit riding the buses. The action was unorganized, spontaneous, full-blown in a matter of hours.

Forty thousand Negroes in this city are walking it out, riding it out . . . and the only thing that looks like an organization directing the action is a committee of teachers and lawyers and preachers.

It's a thing of majestic awe and mystery . . . and it's so effective that the Chicago company which holds the franchise under which the local buses operate, is threatening to pull out.

They're losing money daily. Four-fifths of their buses are in garages, with most of their drivers out of work. And they can't make Negroes ride the buses.

The boycott, nearing the end of its sixth week, is still being sparked by twice-a-week mass meetings, attended by 2,500 or more people.

THE MOTOR pool of 300 cars costs approximately $1,000 per week to operate . . . and the cars are still running.

There are approximately fifty dispatch stations and almost twenty pick-up stations fro where the 300 cars operate.

Daily newspapers in the city are predominantly fair, publishing many letters to the editors, which reveals the position of both Negroes and sympathetic whites.

Acknowledged leaders of the protest movement (they don't call it a boycott) include the Negro ministers of Montgomery and their congregations, the Methodist Ministerial Alliance, the Rev. J. W. Hayes, presidents; the Baptist Ministers Conference, the Rev. H. H. Hubbard, president; the Rev. R. D. Abernathy, secretary; the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, the Rev. L. Roy Bennett, president; the Rev. J. C. Parker, secretary, and the Montgomery Improvement Association, Dr. M. L. King, president, and the Rev. U. J. Fields, secretary.

Leaders, in discussing the situation, state, "At no time have the participants of this movement advanced or anticipated violence. This is a movement of passive resistance, depending on moral and spiritual forces."

Montgomery Bus Line Asks To Hike Fares

Post-Herald Birmingham Ala. 1-24

Negro Boycott Boosts Expenses

Wed. 1-4-56

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 3 (AP)—With a boycott by Negroes entering its fifth week, Montgomery City Bus Lines today asked that bus fares be temporarily doubled and free transfers permanently abolished.

The petitions asked that fares be hiked from 10 to 20 cents and that school children's fares be raised from 5 to 10 cents. Transfers, nowfree, would cost 5 cents.

Montgomery Atty. Jack Crenshaw, representing the bus company, told the commission "we cannot continue to operate under these conditions."

He said bus revenue is now about 22 cents per operating mile while expenses are between 40 and 44 cents per mile. And the only reason revenue is as high as 22 cents per mile, he added, is because we have cut total mileage by 31 per cent since the boycott started."

Last Friday Mayor W. A. Gayle issued a proclamation saying the "attempted boycott of Montgomery City Lines is designed to deprive our citizens" of the benefits provided by the bus service.

He had announced earlier that negotiations with the bus company for a new franchise were at a standstill because of the boycott. The present franchise expires March 1.

Whites now aid boycott

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—As the boycott of the city's buslines entered its sixth week, Sunday, the colored patrons found some new allies.

Sat. 1-14-56

Unofficially joining the boycott, the AFRO was told, were the white riders of the Montgomery City Lines, who have been asked to pay increased fares for the duration of the demonstration.

* * *

THE REV. M. L. KING, spokesman for the Montgomery Improvement Association, told the AFRO that the announcement of the increased fares from 10 to 15 cents and children's fares from 5 to 8 cents has "widened the scope of the opposition."

"The boycott is still 99 per cent effective among our people," the Rev. Mr. King reported.

"And now the company is ask-

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — It's a question of an immovable object meeting an irresistible force in the Montgomery bus boycott that entered its seventh week Sunday.

Baltimore, Md.

"Since we have shown them they have no legal grounds to stand on, they have switched to custom," the Rev. M. L. King, spokesman for the Montgomery Improvement Association, told the AFRO.

Sat 1-21-56

The minister was referring to the busline and the city officials flatly rejecting again the demands of colored citizens last week.

THE DEMANDS include: (1) More Courtesy toward passengers by the drivers; (2) A first-come-first-served seating policy: and (3) the hiring of colored bus drivers.

The major portion of last week's meeting was taken up discussing the question of seating on a "first-come-first-served" demand.

FRED GRAY, legal counsel to the protest group, presented a resolution.

It was pointed out that the citizens did not seek to violate the law.

The group requested the colored passengers be permitted to begin seating from the rear; the whites, from the front.

Under this plan, the group stated, the problem of passengers being compelled to stand when there are unoccupied seats would be eliminated.

UNDER THE PRESENT system, ten seats on every bus are reserved for whites. Even though a bus might be overcrowded with colored passengers, they're not permitted to sit in one of the "white seats," even though they might be vacant.

When the group pointed out that other cities in Alabama have similar seating arrangements namely Mobile, Dothan, and Huntsville, Mayor W. A. Gale said such a procedure "would shatter custom."

AFTER THE two-hour-meeting, the Rev. Mr. King asserted:

"They appear determined not settle this protest in our favor even though it appears that we are right.

"It seems that the mayor is used to having colored people coming to him begging for things; well, we are demanding our rights."

Afro-American

ONE OF THE big supporters of the boycott is the Rev. Robert S. Graetz, white pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church. His congregation is all colored.

The Rev. Mr. Graetz has made his own car available to the "share-the-ride" pool of 200 cars organized to transport the boycotters unable to pay taxi fares.

"LET'S MAKE this boycott as effective as possible, the Rev. Mr. Graetz urged his members, "because it isn't a boycott if half of us ride the buses and half don't ride.

"If we're going to do it, let's make a good job of it," he said.

The minister spends three hours a day hauling passengers.

WHILE DRIVING a colored woman to a suburban area on Dec. 19, the Rev. Mr. Graetz reports that he was stopped by Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler.

The sheriff charged him with operating a taxi, even though the white minister protested that he was driving "friends."

After being detained a half hour the Rev. Mr. Graetz was released.

CARL ROWAN, reporter of the Cowles papers of Mineapolis, was in Montgomery last week and subject of an editorial in the daily Montgomery Advertiser.

The Montgomery paper stated that Rowan declined to ride a bus to record the taunts of the demonstrators.

A day later, however, the editors apologized because Rowan rode the bus and there were no taunts and any indication of threats.

THE PROTEST group is continuing to meet twice weekly and the meetings are attended by overflow throngs.

Last week in an effort to bolster the sagging receipts, the bus company increased fares from 10 to 15 cents and children's fares for 5 to 8 cents.

The action merely angered the whites, the AFRO was told.

As the boycott remains 90 per cent effective, the rabble rousers among the whites are urging that colored persons who don't ride the buses should not be employed.

Mrs. Georgia L. Foster, white, commented:

"We have been good to our colored people but now is the time to make them understand a few things.

"We should quit paying taxi fare, quit going for them or taking them home, quit paying their social security tax, quit lending them money for debts contracted for unnecessary items."

To all such criticism, the Rev. Mr. King insists: "Our demands are simple. They can be met. Until they are met we will continue to protest."

ng for the white people to support them, which indicates their panic," he added.

* * *

ON THURSDAY night, Jack Crenshaw, attorney for the busline, went on television to tell the people of Montgomery that the next move to break the demonstration 'was up to Mayor W. A. Gale.

"We will do anything that Mayor Gale suggests," the attorney stated.

On Monday, the Rev. Mr. King and other leaders of the citizens group were to meet with Mayor Gale.

"Either the bus company will have to meet our demands or fold up," the Rev. Mr. King said.

THE MINISTER pointed out that letters-to-the-editor published in the local daily from white readers indicated that there was considerable support for the boycott among white citizens.

"One white reader wrote that he had been riding the city lines for over 40 years but he wasn't going to ride a bus again until they met our demands."

The demonstrators have made three demands:

(1) More courtesy towards passengers by the drivers; (2) A first-come-first-served seating arrangement; (3) the employment of colored drivers.

"The white citizens are solidly behind us in the first two demands," the Rev. Mr. King reports.

Afro-American

"A reporter from one of the dailies made a survey of four big Southern cities and reported that they followed the suggestion that we have made.

P. 2

"IN MOBILE and Huntsville, the colored passengers fill up the buses from the rear and the whites from the front.

"Which is all that we are asking. We are fighting the question of segregation in the courts.

"On the third point, the employment issue, the whites that I have talked with are split about fifty-fifty," the minister said.

"Those who oppose, oppose it on grounds that you can't instruct a private industry as to whom they should hire.

"We say that if we have to pay the fares, that we have the right to be employed."

* * *

THE REV. MR. KING said that enthusiasm among the colored citizens remains high. "At Thursday's meeting, we had a standing-room-only crowd," he said.

The Montgomery demonstration stems from the arrest of Mrs. Rose Parks, who refused to give up her seat to a white passenger.

She was arrested on Dec. 1 and fined $14 for violating the state's segregation law on Dec. 4.

Since Dec. 3, the boycott has been waged.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 9. —(UP)—The City Commission Monday rejected a resolution offered by a Negro delegation calling for a "first come, first served" seating arrangement on city buses.

The Negroes, leaders in the five-week-old boycott of City Lines, told officials the seating arrangement they seek is in force in Nashville, Atlanta and other Southern cities.

New Bus Pact Likely Today

Tues. 1-17-56

Montgomery, Ala.

The bus franchise held by Montgomery City Lines is expected to be renewed today by the City Commission.

Bus and city officials conferred yesterday afternoon, apparently to put the franchise in final form preparatory to the commission's meeting at 11 a.m. today.

The present granchise, granted in 1935, expires in March.

CHANGES MADE

Whether there will be any major changes in the charter because of the extended boycott of busses by Negroes could not be determined.

Since the boycott began over six weeks ago, the City Commission has authorized several changes in the company's operation, including a reduction of routes and an increase in fares.

No other companies have expressed interest in the Montgomery franchise, besides the Montgomery concern. National City Lines of Chicago is parent company of the Montgomery firm. It operates bus lines in numerous other U.S. and Canadian cities.

This is in regard to your editorial in portation for their daily economy.

However, my "in stride" manner has suffered a much shorter pace; and for that reason I am now much less amendable. Jan. 7-8-56

Let's take the letter signed by the Rev. U. J. Fields, whoever he is. With deletions, I am quoting the last paragraph of his letter, which to me is a more direct threat than ever voiced by Marx or Lenin. P. 2-b

"We shall never cease our struggle for equality—this is from a reliable source (the Negro citizens of Montgomery). We have no intention of compromising . . . unwarranted delay . . . will result in a demand for the annihilation of segregation which will result in complete integration."

First, about the Negro citizens of Montgomery." I can prove that some of the same Negroes have been told by this same ministerial body that it is now against the law to board a city bus. Second; that they would demand an end to segregation. Let them get all the decrees they wish, and then try to find a way to enforce them. Third, they seem to fail to understand, that if we so chose, we could throw up a counter boycott that would starve most of them to death in 30 days. That is not our wish nor intention.

Montgomery

Personally, I know lots of Negroes in Montgomery for whom I have the highest regard, and I think they feel kindly toward me. But I can't go for these this morning's Advertiser (Jan. 5), concerning Birmingham, our youngest and largest city. The editorial was headed "The Blunt Truth About Birmingham In The Civil War." Have you forgotten your history so soon, or was it the effects of too many holidays coming so close together? You must remember that where Birmingham stands today was only virgin forest, coal and iron ore, untouched by civilization, during the period of the Civil War.

Now, please let us have some more history on this subject.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have read some of the letters concerning the Negro boycott and I must say I have enjoyed reading where some are in sympathy with the Negro and some are entirely against the Negro.

I read in old Grandma a few days ago a letter concerning Julie Seale Harris, asking help from the mayor and different ones about getting into trouble and whipped by colored leaders.

Now I am sure Mrs. Harris can ride, and anyone else who cares to, and no violence or threats from the colored leaders will come to them.

I am a cook and nurse. No one has attempted to whip me or give me any trouble when I ride. Of course I don't have to ride a bus, as I have always had my own way to come and go. But you who don't have it, let's not tell the wrong thing on our colored ministers and leaders.

This present boycott of the City Bus Lines, and as I have heard, of some Montgomery merchants, by the Negro element in our city, has been taken in stride by me. I have never been a patron of the bus lines, because I did not need them; but I have always thought it a privilege to have their services available for those who did depend on that transportation for their daily economy.

Bah, Mr. Benson

Editor, The Advertiser: Advertiser

According to the Jan. 2 issue of The Advertiser Mr. Benson mentions the "gap" between what the farmer gets for his produce, and what the consumer pays for it. Jan. 7-8-56

He goes on to say this difference is brought about by the rising cost of handling between the farmer and consumer. This brings to my mind the man who prepared his land, planted, worked and gathered his okra and took it to market. Upon arriving at the store with his okra, he asked the manager what he was paying for okra. Seven cents a pound, was the reply. P. 2-b

So while the farmer was at the store, he looked around to see if there was something he needed. He came to a hamper of okra with a price card on it—28c per pound. 21c per pound handling charges between the farmer and consumer?

Montgomery

It took the farmer three months to get it to market for 7c a pound. It took the store man not more than three days to get it to the consumer.

Bah! Mr. Benson will have to wrap that one in something besides sugar coated honey to get the farmer to swallow it.

If the farmer was as well organized as the merchants, the merchants could be found out on the farms bidding against each other to get the precious farm raised products

I don't blame the farmers for quitting their farms. When they must take a gambler's chance on weather, insects, and prices. What went with the days when 12 pounds of meal was a peck? At that rate I should buy a dollars worth for 80c.

Bus Fare Hike Granted As Negroes Boycott Line

Post + Times Herald

Thurs. 1-5-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 4 (AP)—Beginning next Monday, adult bus fares will be hiked from 10 to 15 cents and school children's fares from 5 to 8 cents. Washington

Transfers, except for school children, will be 5 cents each.

The city commission granted Montgomery City Lines the increases today in the wake of a month-old Negro boycott of buses. The increases will "be subject to reconsideration" after the boycott is ended, Mayor W. A. Gayle said. P. 9

City Lines officials made the request for fare increases at yesterday's regular commission session. P. 9

Negroes began boycotting the buses Dec. 5 after Mrs. Rosa Parks was arrested and fined $15 for violating state and city laws which requires segregation of the races on public conveyances. She had refused to move to the rear of a bus.

Jack Crenshaw, attorney representing the bus company, told the City Commission revenue is now about 22 cents per operating mile while operating expenses are between 40 and 44 cents per mile.

He said the only reason revenue is as high as 22 cents is because the company has cut total mileage by 31 per cent since the boycott started.

Negro leaders have asked that members of their race be allowed to take seats on the buses on a "first come, first served" basis. The plan called for Negroes to continue taking seats from the rear toward the front, but none would be required to stand if seats in front were vacant.

In rejecting the proposal, the bus company said it would violate the state and city statutes requiring "separate but equal" facilities for white persons and Negroes.

Montgomery Bus Line To Raise Fare; Negroes Still Won't Ride

Daily World Atlanta Ga.
Fri. 1-6-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(SNS)— City officials here have granted the Montgomery Bus Lines permission to raise bus fares in an attempt to cope with the refuse-to-ride campaign which is entering its 34th day.

Mayor W. A. Gayle announced that the City Commission granted a temporary one-third increase in fares on Jan. 4. This means that regular fare will be advanced from 10 to 15 cents and school tickets from 5to 8 cents. Transfers which have been free will cost 5 cents.

The hike in fares came after a back-to-bus-riding proclamation appeal by Mayor Galye had failed to induce the protesting segment to weaken the more than month long stay-off-the-buses protest.

Bus company officials said that revenue had been so seriously affected by the protest that the MBL would be unable to operate unless relief came. The company's franchise expires in March.

Meantime the 10th in a twice-a-week series of information mass meeting is scheduled for Monday night, Jan. 9 at Bethel Baptist Church pastored by the Rev. H. H. Hubbard. A similar know-the-facst mass meeting was scheduled for last night at the St. John A. M. E. Church pastored by the Rev. R. W. Hilson.

The Dec. 1 arrest and Dec. 5 conviction of Mrs. Rosa Parks under the Montgomery move-back segregation laws erupted the protest. The conviction was appealed to Circuit Court but no date has been set for the hearing.

Since the protest started the Montgomery Improvement Association headed by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., pastor of downtown Dexter Avenue Baptist Church has assumed the spokesmanship for the aggrieved segment.

The MIA leadership has asked adoption of a 3-point program urging (1) more courteous treatment, (2) seating on a firstcome, first-served basis and the (3) employment of Negro bus drivers on bus running in to areas populated heavily by members of the Negro group.

Both the city officials and the company officials have rejected all three proposals. On courtesy, they claim that racial complaints are normal, and that all over the nation with local transit service such complaints come.

They answer that under Montgomery and Alabama law seating cannot be permitted on a first-come, first-served basis without breaking the law. Hiring Negro bus drivers, city and company officials say, would collide with custom.

Meantime the Central Alabama (White) Citizens Council headed by Macon County Senator Sam M. Englehard, Jr., of Shorter, Ala., has conducted an advertising campaign urging that the buses be patronized more, and suggesting that the bus franchise might not be renewed unless there was more bus patronage.

Protest leaders have made no statement whether they favor making a legal challenge of the validity of local and state imposed bus segregation laws. Meantime the leadership is in the hands of ministers who speak in terms of "protest, love, and faith in God." They tell their followers "we can carry on this struggle for 12 months if we stick together."

One of the MIA leaders said that it was obvious that the opposition was trying to wear them down and was waiting to see how long the protesting segment could carry on the non-ride, non-violence, non-cooperation struggle.

White Pastor Aids Negroes In Montgomery Bus Boycott

Commercial Appeal
Thurs. 1-12-56 p. 17
Memphis, Tenn.

By TOM JOHNSON
Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 11.—Here in the Cradle of the Confederacy, a young white minister stands in the pulpit of his church on Sundays and urges his congregation to support a Negro boycott of city buses.

His remarks do not fall on hostile ears. On the contrary, the 210 church members respond enthusiastically.

The Rev. Robert S. Graetz, 27, pastor of all-Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, came to Montgomery for "missionary" work last June from a predominantly Negro church in Los Angeles.

He told his congregation on Dec. 4—the day before the boycott began—that he was making his own car available to a "share the ride" pool organized to transport Negroes unable to afford taxi fares.

Plea Is Sounded

"Let's try to make this boycott as effective as possible," he urged the members, "because it won't be any boycott if half of us ride the buses and half don't ride. If we're going to do it, let's make a good job of it."

In the days following, the Rev. Mr. Graetz put in as much as 16 hours a day carrying on his church duties and helping organize the boycott which was begun in protest of the segregated seating arrangement on city buses.

He hauled passengers three hours a day and served as a member of a transportation committee that organized a pool of 250 to 350 private cars.

Dispatch and kickup stations have been set up for transporting Negroes to and from work.

Goes Right To Work

It didn't take the boyish-looking minister long to get thoroughly wrapped up in Negro affairs after he arrived in Montgomery. By the time the boycott developed he was already acquainted with most of the principals, including seamstress Rosa Parks, whose defiance of the bus segregation law touched off the protest movement.

Of her, the Rev. Mr. Graetz says: "She must have figured that if the Lord wanted to make her the goat, she was willing."

The Rev. Mr. Graetz and the pastors of most Montgomery Negro churches urge their congregations to make special offerings to buy gasoline for the car pool. He estimates it costs about $200 a day to keep the cars moving.

Besides the money raised locally, the Rev. Mr. Graetz said funds have come from churches outside Montgomery—New York, Philadelphia, Mobile, Tuscaloosa, Tuskegee—and from "anonymous white friends." At last report, he said $7,000 had been raised and there was a "rather sizable balance."

Stopped By Sheriff

While driving five Negro women to a suburban area on Dec. 19, the Rev. Mr. Graetz said he was stopped by Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler who demanded: "What are you doing—running a taxi?"

He replied that the Negroes were "friends," not passengers. He said Butler accused him of picking up passengers in a taxi zone and ordered The Rev. Mr. Graetz to follow him to the county jail.

There he was detained for a half hour and released.

Born in Charleston, W. Va., The Rev. Mr. Graetz said he became interested in racial problems at the Lutheran Capital University in Columbus, Ohio.

The young minister thinks of himself as a "radical" although not as much as he once was. ("I was really radical in college"), yet his strongest expression on integration is that the process should occur gradually but should be speeded up over the present pace.

Owns Mass Shares

He says he has been accused of being a communist but adds: "I'm a capitalist with 30 shares of stock in Libby-Owens-Ford," the Charleston glass company for which his father works.

It is clear that the South is not what the Rev. Mr. Graetz envisioned: "I thought Negroes were shot if they walked down the street."

He says of his work: "I have been told that I am a kind of symbol to my people. Many of them had long ago concluded that it was scarcely possible for a white person to be a Christian. But now they know that, with some of us, Christianity is more than a pious profession of the lips.

"I know that I shall be criticized for my stand. I may even suffer violence. But I cannot minister to souls alone. My people also have bodies."

The Rev. Mr. Graetz lives with his wife and two children in a ranch-house style parsonage next door to the church, which is situated in a Negro district.

Why Is It A Sin To Ride The Bus?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Can you help some of us cooks? The folks tell us that they pass a law against the colored folks riding any bus.

I don't have enough money to ride the taxicab. Last week it took $3.80 for taxicabs. The bus company has been mighty nice to me and so has our bus driver. He helps the old white folks and the old colored folks and is nice to all alike. I wanted to ride the bus and the bus driver said I could, but some folks told me I would get myself in trouble.

Mr. Advertiser, can you please help us, so we can ride the bus. The preacher at our church told us not to ride—maybe a year or more, and that it would be a sin, but I don't see how it is a sin for colored folks to ride a bus.

The bus is more convenient for us. I get to my job late every morning since the boycott. The white lady I been working for is mighty nice to me and I want to stay on, but this boycott is hurting a lot of us colored folks. Please help us if you can and tell the mayor we want to ride the bus like we been doing all the time.

Montgomery. JULIE SEALE HARRIS.

Overbearing Bus Drivers

Editor, The Advertiser:

As the magnificient and successful bus boycott continues I would like to make it a matter of record that there are white bus riders in Montgomery who are honoring the request of our colored friends by refraining from patronizing the City Lines in an effort to express our sympathy.

The plaintive plea of Mayor Gayle, calling for public support of bus service has a futile and hollow ring, coming from a man who has callously ignored the appeals of delegations who have called upon him repeatedly in the past for redress. Someone should scrawl across his office wall, "It is later than you think."

The demands of the Negro populace are extremely moderate and within the law. I challenge any legal light in the state to show how these modest requests are outside of the law, though city hall politicians, City Lines counsel, and curbstone lawyers continue to prattle about the sacrosanct inviolateness of state statutes.

Man and boy, I have ridden street cars and buses in Montgomery for over 40 years. Seamy and sordid have been the scenes I have witnessed. The charges brought by the Negro protestants in their paid advertisement of Dec. 25, are confirmed by personal observation many times over. Has the bus company ever conducted a training program among its drivers stressing curtesy and consideration to its customers?

There are bus drivers who are courteous to both races, but has any effort been made to weed out the belligerent, overbearing and profane drivers who have caused most of the trouble? Would any responsible businessman permit his employes to insult his customers in such ways and expect to remain in business? Are our city fathers less aware of their responsibility than the leaders of Mobile and Houston, Texas? Are our newspapers less capable of keeping citizens abreast of the changing times than the publications of those two cities? Are those of us who sympathize too timid to make our views known? There is ample blame to share among all of us.

Answering the mayor's appeal to save the franchise by patronizing the bus lines, here is one white ex-bus rider who would like to declare that as long as the bus boycott is on, it will be a dreary, rainy day, when I have a sprained ankle, and less than 45c cab fare, before I board one of those yellow rolling cell blocks again.

Montgomery. WILL T. SHEEHAN.

Where Will They Strike Next

Editor, The Advertiser:

I have been reading some of the letters in Old Grandma concerning the bus boycott. They seem to be written mostly by Negroes or Negro sympathizers. Being neither one of these I would like to put my 2¢ in.

I am not a bus rider, but I am concerned over the bus boycott, because I know if the Negroes win this boycott, it is only the beginning. Suppose the bus company is forced to bow down to the Negro through these methods. Who will they strike next? Most likely the department stores! And what for? A seat at the white lunch counter and colored sales girls. These stores can be bowled over one at the time just as the bus company is being done now.

The Negro has tried to make this boycott appear as a strike against the bus company, but the way I see it, it's another strike against the white people to gain superiority. They have already proved it is not equal rights they want. The bus boycott is a very good example of how well the Negroes are organized, and the people that like the South the way it is had better stand up and take notice.

Why should the bus company and the 30-odd drivers that have been laid off be expected to stand this loss alone, when it is to the interest of so many. It is known that some white people are now making donations through the bus meters. Which seems like the best legal way to beat the Negroes at their own game. So what do you say we all help the bus company, who is trying to uphold the laws of our state as well as our way of life. J. P. JAMES.

Let's End The Boycott

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER:

Montgomery has always had the reputation as a city of "good will, pleasant living, and cordial relations between the rates."

I, for one, think the vast majority of its people still believe this to be true, and cannot understand why the bus boycott has dragged on and on, and hasn't been settled long ere this. There is so much basis for compromise, without violating either city or state laws on segregation, if only men will meet together with "open minds and good will in their hearts."

There is no reason not to take in good faith the statements and advertisements of the Negro Improvement Association, that they are willing to compromise, and are not asking a violation of the segregation laws. The threatening ads of the Central Alabama Citizens Council, that bus fares will be increased or buses will be discontinued if the boycott is not called off, certainly do not help the situation nor tend to solve it. Threats have never solved any problem.

The committees which Mayor Gayle appointed have twice met and failed to get together on a single issue. It's up to Mayor Gayle, or the other members of our city commission, to now take the initiative, appoint entirely new committees, with no pre-conceived opinions, to meet together in "good will," and settle this issue. Every day that it drags on not only hurts the reputation of our fair city, but its economy as well. It must be settled with dignity on both sides, and there is no reason why it cannot be done. Let's re-establish Montgomery once again, as a city of "good will, pleasant living, and cordial relations between the races." Mr. Editor, perhaps you, too, can help to bring this about.

MRS. MYRON C. LOBMAN.

1 Bus Route Out, Service Reduced On Other Runs

Tues. 1-3-56

One regular city bus route was cut out yesterday and service abbreviated on other schedules.

The Riverside Heights route was eliminated yesterday while others were served at longer-than-usual intervals, a spokesman for Montgomery City Lines said.

The City Commission had earlier given the company permission to halt buses on all routes Dec. 25, 26 and Jan. 1, but no mention was made of Jan. 2.

The spokesman said the company had given no advance notice of reduced service yesterday.

Bus Officials Win Approval On Fare Boost

Thurs. 1-5-56

A 50 per cent rate increase and a charge of five cents for transfers were granted Montgomery City Lines yesterday by the City Commission. The increases become effective Monday.

Pending settlement of the Negro boycott—a month old today—the commission authorized the bus company to raise adult fares from 10 cents to 15 cents and school fares from five to eight cents.

Transfers, which have been free to bus passengers, will cost five cents.

LOSS CLAIMED

Mayor W. A. Gayle said the increase will be "subject to reconsideration" when the boycott is ended.

Company officials had asked for approval to double fares, because of losses said to be 22 cents for each mile the company operates.

Since Dec. 5—after Rosa Parks was fined $14 for violating the city's segregation law—the Negro boycott against the company has been virtually 100 per cent effective.

Several conferences between Negro leaders and city and civic officials have produced nothing near an agreement.

Mayor Gayle said yesterday the citizens committee he appointed to iron out the differences "stands ready when called." However, he said he knew of no meetings planned.

NEGRO GROUP

A similar statement came from the Rev. M. L. King, spokeman for the Montgomery Improvement Association, a Negro organization which claims to represent "50,000 citizens."

King said his group would meet with city officials or any group "sincerely interested" in settling the controversy.

King, in reply to a question, said he knew of no circumstances under which the Negroes might relent from the three demands they have made as the price for ending the boycott. But he added he has been out of town "for a few days" and hasn't checked with the association recently.

The Negroes have asked for elimination of reserved sections on buses for white and Negro, suggesting instead a first come, first served seating arrangement. Once properly seated, no passenger would be subject to reassignment. Negroes would fill the buses from the rear and whites from the front.

Other demands include hiring Negro drivers and "More courteous" treatment at the hands of white drivers.

Telephone Survey Supports Fare Hike

A cross section poll of Montgomerians on their general feeling toward the rise in bus fares indicated a strong majority overwhelmingly in favor of the fare hike and fully behind the bus company.

The poll, conducted yesterday by The Advertiser, consisted of telephoning 50 Montgomerians, 38 whites and 12 Negroes.

In all, 34 persons voted in favor of the rise, five voted against it and 11 were non-committal. Only 16 persons of the 50 contacted were non-bus riders.

Three white persons were against the rise and two offered no opinion. Two Negroes said the rise was "steep" and voted it down while the remaining nine Negroes offered no comment. The two Negroes voting "no" were the only Negroes who said they were bus riders.

One person said, "If this (the rise) helps the bus company to keep segregation on the buses until this boycott is broken, then I'm all for it."

Said another, "I'm in favor of the rise . . . I hope it means better service . . ."

Most persons voting in favor of the rise said they believed every concern should try to operate at a profit.

One person suggested, "I'm not only in favor of raising the fares, but I think they should set up contribution boxes to help the company during this boycott."

5c A Ride To Preserve Bus Seating System

IS IT WORTH a nickel more a ride to preserve the status quo in bus seating here? Advertiser

This is the challenge presented to white bus patrons, who can back the bus company's stand in favor of the present seating system on Montgomery buses, regardless of the 50% boost in fares effective next Monday. Thurs. 7-5-56

On Monday, by order of the City Commission handed down yesterday, adult bus fares will jump from 10c to 15c.

This is to make good the loss of fares through the Negro boycott. P.4-A

At the same time a 60% boost in the fare for school children, from 5c to 8c, will go into effect.

On top of the fare increases, a transfer charge of 5c will be levied, for the first time. This does not apply to school children. Montgomery, Ala.

THE BUS COMPANY, in petitioning the city commission for increases, asked for more than it got. This is not infrequent practice—a utility will ask for an increase which looms large, and the regulatory body will compromise on something in between the existing rate and what was asked. This leaves the public feeling that it has champions looking after its interests.

In the pending case, the bus company asked for an adult fare of 20c, 10c for school children, and the same 5c transfer charge that it was allowed.

One thing bus patrons should write on their cuffs is the possibility that the increased fares are here to stay. At least there is no positive assurance that they will be reduced when the emergency is over.

THE BUS COMPANY agreed, in principle, that the increases requested should be subject to reduction when business picks up and the company's financial condition warrants it. But, since the company got less than it asked, except on the transfer charge, it is in a position to argue that any agreement to a future reduction was on the basis of its "asking price" which has already been "reduced" by the commission's order. Besides, the company obviously has a sizable boycott deficit to be made up. The bus company is hard up.

The City Commission's order contained no reference to any reduction when the boycott is over—so far as the official document is concerned, the increases were granted without strings. Queried on this point, Mayor Gayle said that when traffic picks up the question of a reduction will be "taken under consideration." To anyone with memories of "temporary" taxes and such like, it would not be surprising if the 15c adult fare, at least, should prove permanent.

It is apparent to anyone that the bus company cannot be expected to operate at a loss, which it has been doing in a big way since the boycott began Dec. 5. Operating expenses run 40c to 44c a mile, while since the boycott income has been about 22c.

ASKED to give specific grounds for the transfer charge, a bus company spokesman said it obviously costs more to haul a passenger four miles than two. He was of the opinion, also, that the charge would help curb abuse of free transfers, such as getting a transfer the patron did not intend to use, and giving it to a friend downtown, for example, to evade payment. Most cities have a transfer charge, the spokesman said.

AS FOR THE increase in fares for school children, it was pointed out that bus driver costs are higher, proportionately, in operating special school buses than elsewhere. This is due to a contract rule, typical of such contracts in general, that when a bus driver is called out, he cannot be paid for less than two hours even though he may actually work only an hour or less.

Vandalism on school buses was another problem mentioned, though this has not been as bad of late as formerly.

Officials pointed out that Maxwell Field has recently called on City Lines to take over transportation of school children from the field to Montgomery schools. This action was taken, it was said, after an expert from Washington had made a survey of existing costs of free transportation in government-owned buses.

THERE IS, of course, no mortal more eloquent than a utility spokesman justifying an increase in rates. But in the pending case, there was no question that something had to be done.

Montgomery's last bus fare increase was March 21, 1954, when a flat adult fare of 10c was allowed, abolishing tokens which until then had been obtainable at six for 50c, or 8 1-3c each. The new adult fare of 15c is thus nearly double what it was less than two years ago. It is to be hoped that this will hold us for a good while to come.

Montgomery Bus Line To Raise Fare; Negroes Still Won't Ride

Bus Officials Press Demand For Fare Hike

Officials of Montgomery City Lines told the City Commission yesterday unless adult bus fares are doubled "we just can't live."

K. E. Totten, vice president of City Lines, and Atty. Jack Crenshaw also asked for abolishment of the free transfer and five-cent school fare.

Montgomery

Since a Negro boycott of the company began Dec. 5, Crenshaw said the company has lost as much as 22 cents for each mile it operates.

Ala.

INCOME 22 CENTS

Operating expense for each mile is 40 to 44 cents, said Crenshaw. Since the boycott, income has been about 22 cents.

Crenshaw said the increased adult fares would be lowered again when the "abnormal situation" is settled.

He added, however, he thought an increase in school fares to 10 cents and a charge of five cents for transfers should become permanent.

Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioners Frank Parks and Clyde Sellers discussed the company request yesterday but apparently reached no immediate decision.

Totten indicated he thought the rate increase preferable to making further reductions in service, which he said, have more lasting effect.

Crenshaw advised the commission that "labor leaders" would not oppose an increase in fares.

After the meeting, the company attorney said he was hopeful the public would cooperate with Mayor Gayle's plea last week for greater patronage of the buses.

It is expected that several Montgomery civic clubs plan to endorse the mayor's proclamation, which described the boycott as "designed to deprive our citizens" of the benefits provided by the bus firm.

MONTGOMERY BUSES WIN RATE INCREASE

Fares Boosted One-Third As Result Of Boycott

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 4. — (UP) — The City Commission Wednesday permitted the boycotted City Bus Lines, which claims its income has been slashed, to temporarily increase fares by one-third and charge a five-cent fee for previously free transfers. Thurs. 1-5-5

The commission took the action as a result of the four-week-old boycott of city buses by from 80 to 90 per cent of the city's Negro population. P. 31

The Negroes are protesting the segregation law that prevents Negroes from sitting in the forward sections of buses.

The commission granted permission for the company to raise adult fares from 10 to 15 cents. Fares for school children may be increased from five to eight cents. All transfers, except those for school children, will cost five cents.

Memphis

The new rates will become effective next Monday. Mayor W. A. Gayle said the increase is temporary but the resolution adopted by the commission made no provision for a reduction.

The boycott began as a protest against court action in which a Negro woman was fined $10 for refusing to move to the rear of a bus. Negro leaders say they have no desire to wipe out the law, but merely want to alter it so members of both races can sit in opposite sections if they contain the only available seats.

BUS REQUEST DENIED 'BOYCOTT' SPOKESMEN

Negro leaders took their fight for a new bus seating arrangement directly to the City Commission yesterday but a two-hour conference produced no settlement of the 36-day-old boycott.

Advertiser P. 2-A

Mayor W. A. Gayle said a committee representing Negro ministers and their congregations and the Montgomery Improvement Association (Negro) merely repeated previous demands for what they term "fair and reasonable" seating arrangement on a first come, first served basis.

Said Gayle: "We are going to carry out the law as we see it, and state law and city ordinances call for segregation on buses."

Montgomery, Ala.

The city has maintained that the seating arrangement sought by the Negroes would not comply with the segregation law requiring separate but equal facilities.

As explained in a resolution presented to the commission yesterday, the Negro demand is "that the seating of passengers be on a 'first come, first served' basis. This means that the Negro passengers will begin seating from the rear of the bus toward the front and the white passengers from the front toward the rear until all seats are taken."

Tues. 1-10-56

Gayle said the committee didn't ask for a change in the present law—merely that it be interpreted differently.

Among those present was the Rev. M. L. King, a Baptist minister who has been principal figure in directing the boycott. He requested the meeting yesterday.

Civic Leaders Watching Bus Appeal From Montgomery Mayor

World

Tues. 1-3-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Civic leaders today were watching the franchised local buses today to see whether an appeal by Mayor W. A. Gayle to ride the Montgomery Bus Lines was having any affect on their 29-day old rideless protest.

Buses were due to resume running after a one-day total suspension of service Jan. 1. The company previously had halted all bus service Dec. 25-26. City officials had approved the temporary curtailment of operation to try to help the bus company which has been missing Negro patronage.

A ministers-led refuse-to-ride protest was set off here by the Dec. 1 arrest and Dec. 5 conviction of Mrs. Rosa Parks, church devotee and well-thought-of civic worker who was charged with violating the city and state bus segregation laws. The conviction was appealed to circuit court.

Spearheaded by the Montgomery Improvement Association of which Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. is president, the civic leaders have asked city and bus officials to guarantee more (1) courteous treatment on the buses, (2) seating arrangement on a first come — first served basis and (3) the employment of Negro bus drivers. All three proposals have been rejected by company and city officials.

Birmingham

Meantime the Central Alabama (White) Citizens Council headed by Macon County Senator Sam M. Englehardt, Jr. of Shorter, Ala. has conducted an advertising campaign in the newspapers urging persons to ride the bus.

Ala.

The (white) council Dec. 29 announced the posting of a $100 reward for the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for attacks on Montgomery City Lines buses during the stay-off-the-buses protest.

But neither the company nor the city has undertaken such a course as offering a reward for bringing to bar alleged violators during patron-imposed non-cooperation campaign.

Mayor Gayle's proclamation said: "Whereas the attempted boycott of the Montgomery City Lines is designed to deprive our citizens of these advantages, I call upon each and all citizens of Montgomery to patronize the existing transportation systems so that all may be more safely transported, that traffic congestions may be reduced, and that every one may be assured of continuation of bus transportation in the city."

Ride The Bus, If Your Conscience Permits

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—In reference to the letter that appeared in The Advertiser Jan 4 from Mrs. Julie Seale Harris, "Why Is It A Sin To Ride The Bus."

Fri. 1-6-56

I would just like to put in my two cents. It is no sin to ride the bus. But it is a disgrace to her race. I am a cook and have been for 19 years and I had harder times getting to work before the boycott than I have now.

P. 4-A

There are thousands of cooks getting to work each day on time. So Mrs. Harris, why can't you get to work on time?

Mr. Editor, please tell Mrs. Harris to attend one of the many meetings that are held for further instruction. There she will be told of how to save her $3.80.

Mrs. Harris, there are many good things the preachers have told you and you didn't mention them. Why mention something to work head lines?

It's your right to ride the bus, when and where you please. Trouble will come to no one who rides the bus. If your conscience don't trouble you, your race won't.

The boycott shouldn't have any connections with you and your white folks. If they was nice to you before the boycott, they should still be nice to you unless you talk too much out of your mouth and make them fire you. Take heed and be persuaded by your own opinion and ride the bus without fear.

See you at the next meeting.

Answering Mr. Sheehan

Editor, The Advertiser:

Having read the letter of Will T. Sheehan I don't know him) I wish to comment on what he had to say.

He was evidently sore with the bus company in the first place and ridiculed their drivers because of his grievances. If he does not want to ride our buses then good enough. (We don't force any patrons to ride.) He could go North so that he can mix and mingle with his colored friends to his heart's desire.

I personally do not blame the City Commission for not appeasing the arrogant forces back of the boycott. It is ignorant to think we here in Montgomery would adhere to such. If the ones who oppose our way of life here in the South would only go elsewhere it would be better for both white and colored. Why do they try to stir up race agitation any way?

It certainly isn't gaining them anything and only causing a large majority of our people to have hardships imposed upon them. Did Mr. Sheehan ever stop to think what bus curtailment means to so many? H called our buses "yellow rolling call block." Well anyway the citizens as a whole need, like and want them. I hope he will have a change of heart. Something is wrong with him not our bus drivers.

What The Constitution Could Not Foresee

Editor, The Advertiser:

The mentality, the principles, and the social organizations of Negroes will best be served by membership in their own organizations, and associations among those of their own race. By all means encourage and aid them in raising their standard of living, but do not lay the foundation for ultimate intermarriage the disintegretion of the white race which was created superior to the black area.

When the Constitution of the United States was written, America did not have the dense Negro populations which it has today. Our forefathers could hardly have foreseen the changes and the growth of our country to such an extent that they could realize integration of the two races. Vast expansion and increased population of both races are problems facing us in both the present and the disintegretion of the white race ligently and loyally observing the highest ideals and principles which are our heritage.

It seems to me that there may be a more moderate interpretation of "all men are created equal." Christianity molds them into a better character. Tolerance and consideration for all classes are murtured in the minds and hearts of both the white race and the Negro race by Christian influences.

Where would be the wisdom, the virtue, the glory, in the unhappiness inflicted upon countless thousands of both the white and the Negro races by appeasing and satisfying the unreasonable and selfish demands of a very small minority of both races? We who do not oppress others do not desire to be oppressed. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," 2 Corinthians 3:17.

(Special to the AFRO)

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—"They won't budge and we aren't thinking of budging." P.1

In the words of the Rev. J. L. King, a leader of the Montgomery Improvement Association, that sums up the impasse in the negotiations of the bus boycott that began its fifth week, Sunday.

"Tired of being humiliated by bus drivers," the colored citizens of Montgomery decided on Dec. 4 to refuse to travel by bus until the operators of the bus lines acceded to three demands.

Baltimore, Md.

THEY ARE: (1) More courtesy towards passengers by the drivers; (2) A first-come, first-served seating arrangement; and (3) the employment of colored drivers.

"I think that our demands are simple," the Rev. Mr. King told the AFRO Saturday, "but the company doesn't show any inclination to grant them."

Meanwhile, the spokesman for the Montgomery citizens group whose boycott is 99 per cent "and maybe forty-four one-hundredths" effective, said the bus company had withdrawn about "two-thirds of its buses."

* * *

"ON CHRISTMAS and Christmas Monday," the minister revealed, "the company ceased operations.

"I hear," he continued, "that they might not seek to renew the franchise."

It is estimated that the strike has cost the company about $150,000 in loss of revenue. About three-fourths of the regular passengers are colored.

THE RIDERS are being transported by a 200-car pool and taxicabs. The improvement association has collected over $6,000 to finance the demonstration.

"It is not uncommon to see white employers of domestics drive their limousines into our neighborhoods to pick up their maids, either," the minister reported.

Afro-American

"Many of the good white people of Montgomery are in sympathy with us. Several have made financial contributions to the cause." P.2

A SPECIAL citizens committee composed of members of the association and white community leaders, in addition to the officials of the bus company, are expected to resume negotiations this week.

The strike was the outgrowth of the Dec. 1 arrest of Mrs. Rose Parks, who refused to get up out of her seat for a white passenger.

She was fined $14 on Dec. 3 for violating the state's segregation law.

Negroes Cannot Compromise

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have noticed that since the protest began there has been an avalanche of letters appearing in the Grandma column urging that a compromise be reached. Some of these letters and suggestions came from people who are quite optimistic in their thinking; a few came from people who are realistic in their reasoning; but the majority of them came from people who are pessimistic in their belief.

Be it known, now, henceforth and forever, that the Negroes of Montgomery have no desire to compromise in this "bus situation." I have moved through the streets, and have been convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt that Negroes prefer walking rather than to go back to riding the buses.

Phila. Inq. 1-5-56

Our request has been reasonable. These are the proposals: Phila. P.4-A

¶ That the seating of passengers will be on a "first-come, first-served" basis, with Negroes being seated from the rear to the front and whites being seated from the front toward the rear.

Montgomery

On our side there can be no compromise with this principle envolved. In the first place this is a compromise to begin with. We should have demanded complete integration which does away with Jim Crow, and what our constitutional rights guarantee to all American citizens. It then seems to me that those who cry "compromise," should be courageously seeking ways to supplement these proposals.

Ala.

The type of segregation, Jim Crow and discrimination being practiced here in the South is on its deathbed. There are some who are trying to keep it alive. But internal coercion and external pressure is sure to cause this personality to have an early funeral.

The Negro ministers have been charged by some as misusing religion and the Church. If there is any group of people who have come in personal contact with Jesus it certainly must be the Negro ministers. We don't teach people however, that the Bible teaches separation of the races. We teach them to believe in and live the life applicable to one who practices the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. To underestimate the Negro ministers is uncalled-for, unjustifiable and absurd at the least. We believe in "good race relations" or as Mrs. Myron C. Lobman calls it "cordial relations between the races." However, I am quite sure we do not define the term alike. We believe that "good race relations exist only when everyone is treated as an equal. This cannot be as long as there are laws preventing men of one race from enjoying the privileges and rights enjoyed by another race.

We shall never cease our struggle for equality until we gain first-class citizenship, and take it from me this is from a reliable source (the Negro citizens of Montgomery). We have no intention of compromising. Such unwarranted delay in granting our request may very well result in a demand for the annihilation of segregation which will result in complete integration.

[The Rev.] U. J. FIELDS, Minister
Bell Street Baptist Church, Secretary of the Montgomery Improvement Association.

First Come Already First Served

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am a widow, 60 years old, and have to work for a living. The bus is the only way I have of getting anywhere. I ride the Veterans Hospital bus, and I have my first time to hear one of these drivers ask a Negro to give a white person a seat. One afternoon just before the boycott I got on the bus and Negroes had every seat they could have. White people were standing. I would have had to stand all the way to town except a four-year-old girl got up and let me have her seat. Since busses did not run Dec. 25-26. I had to stay home on my only holidays.

A Mother's Thanks

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am the mother of J. M. Strickland, who along with Robert F. Richards was injured very seriously in an automobile accident on U. S. Highway 82, East, Saturday night, Nov. 12, 1955.

Robert F. Richards suffered from shock and also suffered a fractured pelvis and multiple bruises and abrasions. My son, J. M. Strickland, suffered from shock, fractured vertebra, lacerations of his forehead which has required a skin graft, and other skull and back injuries, cuts and abrasions.

Immediately following the accident, my son was bleeding profusely from his head wound. Both of these fine young men are thankful for the skill and mental alertness and quick action of Mr. Richard L. Tidwell, a member of the Montgomery Fire Department. At the scene of the accident, Mr. Tidwell administered first aid. Mr. Tidwell treated both boys for shock. He stopped the bleeding from my son's head wound by using the "pressure point."

It is my understanding that Mr. Tidwell has worked with the Highland Avenue Fire Department for 13 years and that all this period of time he has been taught first aid. For Mr. Tidwell's knowledge of first aid, I salute the City of Montgomery and its Fire Department, and I send a mother's undying heart-felt gratitude.

I cannot find words adequate to express my appreciation to you personally, Mr. Sellers, to Chief Lampley and to all the other members of the Montgomery Fire Department.

White Pastor Spurs Negroes' Bus Boycott

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 11 (AP)—Here in the cradle of the Confederacy, a young white minister stands in the pulpit of his church on Sundays and urges his congregation to support a Negro boycott of city buses.

His remarks do not fall on hostile ears. On the contrary, the 210 church members respond enthusiastically.

The Rev. Robert S. Graetz, 27, pastor of all-Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, came to Montgomery for "missionary" work last June from a predominantly Negro church in Los Angeles.

He told his congregation on Dec. 4—the day before the boycott began—that he was making his own car available to a "share-the-ride" pool organibed to transport Negroes unable to afford taxi fares.

'Make Good Job,' He Urges

"Let's try to make this boycott as effective as possible," he urged the members, "because it won5t be any boycott if half of us ride the buses and half don't ride. If we're going to do it, let's make a good job of it."

In the days following, Graetz put in as much as 16 hours a day carrying on his church duties and helping organize the boycott that was begun in protest of the segregated seating arrangement on city buses.

He hauled passengers three hours a day and served as a member of a transportation committee that organized a pool of 250 to 350 private cars.

It didn't take the boyish-looking minister long to get thoroughly wrapped up in Negro affairs after he arrived in Montgomery. By the time the boycott developed he was already acquainted with most of the principals, including seamstress Rosa Parks, whose defiance of the bus-segregation law touched off the protest movement.

Of her, Graetz says: "She must have figured that if the Lord wanted to make her the goat, she was willing."

Graetz and the pastors of most Montgomery Negro churches urge their congregations to make special offerings to buy gasoline for the car pool. He estimates it costs about $200 a day to keep the cars moving.

Stopped by Sheriff

While driving five Negro women to a suburban area on Dec. 19, Gractz said he was stopped by Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler, who demanded: "What are you doing—running a taxi?"

Graetz replied that the Negroes were "friends," not passengers. He said Butler accused him of picking up passengers in a taxi zone and ordered Graetz to follow him to the county jail.

There he was detained for a half-hour and released.

A native of Charleston, W. Va., Graetz said he became interested in race problems at the Lutheran Capital University in Columbus, Ohio.

It is clear that the South is not what Graetz envisioned: "I thought Negroes were shot if they walked down the street."

Graetz lives with his wife and two children next door to the church, which is situated in a Negro district.

White pastor leader in Capital boycott

Negroes have been boycotting city buses in Montgomery since Dec. 5. The bus company has had to raise fares to make up some of the lost revenue and no settlement is in sight. This article on one of the most controversial leaders in the boycott movement was written for The Associated Press by Tom Johnson, a reporter for The Montgomery Advertiser.

Pastor Graetz

Is Threatened And Quickly Receives Clyde Sellers' Protection; As Phone Gashes Praise, Abuse

By Tom Johnson

THE REV. ROBERT S. GRAETZ made the following sleepy notes after a telephone call at 2:15 a.m., Tuesday.

"White man who seemed to be drunk demanded that I come and give him taxi service like what has been furnished to the dark complected people. Suggested we set up a car pool for white peopl so [they] can save the 15c fare. Refused to give name.

After The Advertiser, containing the story of his ministry at a Negro Lutheran church on Cleveland Avenue appeared in general circulation a few hours later, Graetz was beseiged by the after-clap of a surprised, and in many cases angry, indignant, white citizenry.

And he, in turn, was surprised by the number who called to express their support of his work. A few dropped by to speak to him in person.

As of late yesterday, Pastor Graetz had logged 30 telephone calls as a direct result of his boycott activities becoming known.

Twelve whites and nine Negroes made friendly calls. Eight calls were of the unfriendly sort, four of them downright hostile.

At 3:35 p.m. Tuesday, a caller threatened that "something might happen" unless Graetz got "out of town by nightfall." Two hours later, three other calls came from the same person in quick succession.

Clyde Sellers Comes Through

BY THAT TIME, Graetz had informed police and a couple of detectives were on hand. When the phone rang the last time, Graetz quickly passed it to one of the officers, who grinned and said: "I heard him all right."

Some time later, Graetz received one of the "nicest calls" since his troubles began. The caller was Police Commission Clyde Sellers, who had learned of the threats shortly after the young pastor called the police.

Almost immediately, Graetz says, Sellers told him: "You know I don't agree with what you believe but I do believe that every man has the right to his own beliefs."

Then Sellers, a White Citizens Council member, assured Graetz, the former NAACP organizer, that nothing would happe nto him, that police cars would watch the pastorate all night to discourage any violence.

Graetz Joins Investigation

THE TWO had a lengthy discussion of the boycott issues, with Sellers expressing the opinion the "boycott has failed." He also informed Graetz of incidents that led him to believe the nearly unanimous abstention of Negroes from riding buses was not entirely voluntary.

Graetz, "thoroughly surprised," said he had heard of no instances where protesting Negroes were pressured, but he promised "to investigate."

Graetz was impressed that the police commissioner should make a friendly call.

Negro Son-In-Law

NOT SO FRIENDLY was the letter from a Union Springs "white man," with the white underscored three times. Its cryptic contents: "May you have for a son-in-law the blackest Negro that ever originated from the wilds of Africa."

A telephone call Tuesday evening: "Pastor, if I was you I wouldn't call myself a pastor. You're a no-good Son-of-a-bitch."

An "old white lady" who said she was a member of an "old family and knew all the city officials" offered her Oldsmobile for use in the car pool.

A man from Macon County said there are "thousands of white people who are determined to right the wrongs that have been done." He added that race relations are "splendid" in Shorter, Ala.

ALABAMA

Double-Edged Blade

Time

On Dec. 1, 1955 Mrs. Rosa Parks, a 42-year-old Negro seamstress, was ordered by a Montgomery City Lines bus driver to get up and make way for some white passengers. She refused, was arrested and fined $10 under an Alabama law making it a misdemeanor for any person to disobey a bus driver's seating instructions. But that was not the last of the Rosa Parks case: it has since been used to prove that economic reprisal, as advocated against Negroes by the white Citizens' Councils of the South (TIME, Dec. 12), is a double-edged blade.

Within 48 hours after Rosa Parks had been arrested, mimeographed leaflets were being circulated in Montgomery's Negro sections, calling for a one-day boycott of the city buses. The strike was so successful that Negro leaders decided to continue it until their demands were met. The demands: that Negroes be seated on a first-come, first-served basis without having to vacate their places for white passengers; that white bus drivers show more courtesy toward Negro passengers; that Negro drivers be employed on buses traveling mostly through Negro districts. The bus company agreed only to instruct its drivers to treat Negroes more politely.

The boycott continued, and last week, as it entered its second month, was still 95% effective. Rallies were held twice a week in Negro churches, where overflow crowds gathered to receive the latest information on car-pool schedules (the motor pool includes more than 200 cars operating from 40 regular pickup points).

The boycott's economic punch has been staggering, because the 25,000 Negroes who ordinarily ride Montgomery's buses make up some 75% of the company's patronage. Company officials refused to reveal the size of their losses, because "that's exactly what they want to know."

Last week the city commission granted the desperate company's request for a fare increase: adult prices went up from 10¢ to 15¢, school fares from 5¢ to 8¢, and transfers, which had been free, were priced at 5¢. The strike spirit showed no signs of flagging. A Negro minister, working for the car pool, stopped to pick up an old woman who had obviously walked a long way. "Sister," said he, "aren't you getting tired?" Her reply: "My soul has been tired for a long time. Now my feet are tired, and my soul is resting."

The New Bus Contract

Advertiser 1-4-56

IS THERE danger of Montgomery being deprived of bus service altogether?

This question inevitably arose Tuesday when the City Commission extended the franchise of Montgomery City Lines 10 years, but without the forfeiture clause embodied in the original franchise granted 20 years ago.

38 Ala. Montgomery

The abandoned clause provided that if the company abandoned or discontinued service, all its properties should be forfeited to the city without payment or compensation. That clause was left out of the new franchise.

Both company and city officials minimized the omission. A city spokesman pointed out that if the company should try to quit, the city could still take legal action to compel it to live up to the contract.

Journ. 1-26-56

THE city spokesman noted further that courts are traditionally slow to enforce forfeiture clauses, where such clauses are so drastic as to amount to punitive action. The old forfeiture clause thus might not have stood up in court had it been tested.

A point made by both bus and city representatives for omission of the forfeiture clause was the big increase in the company's assets. Where 20 years ago it was an untested concern with small resources, it has now greatly expanded, has a long record of service, and is showing a willingness to take a licking rather than submit to group demands it regards as unreasonable.

WHEN the original franchise was granted, the company had 23 buses, and operated from rented headquarters. Today it has 72 buses, bigger and costlier than those of 20 years ago, and owns its own shops and offices. Its physical assets are valued at around $1,250,000 today, as against about $100,000 back in 1936.

Bus routes have of course been greatly extended. The routes set forth in the new franchise are the same as were in operation Dec. 1, 1955 (before the bus boycott).

A notable feature of the new franchise is that it stipulates a 10¢ cash fare. This pointed up the fact that both the city and the company are committed "in principle" to a return to the 10¢ fare when the boycott is over and the company's revenues justify it. None can say when that will be.

The franchise provides for a 2¢ transfer charge. The present charge, recently granted along with the emergency boost in fares, is 5¢. The company is willing to make it 2¢ when conditions become normal.

It fixes the school children's fare at 7½¢, where tokens are used, or 10¢ straight fare. This means holding on to the increase from the old school fare of 5¢, granted earlier this month.

QUESTIONED about the effect of the recent increases in fares, a company spokesman said they are still losing money.

How long can they keep on losing it? A man does not have to be a financial wizard to know that there are limits.

But renewal of the franchise was not marked by any defeatist attitude.

The old franchise expires March 8. The company's willingness to sign up for another 10 years at this bleak hour in its affairs showed faith in the future. A company man remarked that everything comes to an end.

A city division chief who has been in on the conferences hooted the idea of Montgomery losing its bus service. He voiced belief that if it comes to the worst, the company could rearrange its schedules and services and continue to provide service for white people only from here on out. He did not say, however, that he thought they could do it at the present fare.

City Approves Bus Franchise For 10 Years

Advertiser Montgomery Ala. Wed. 1-25-56

A 10-year bus franchise providing for possible cancellation in the event of boycotts "or other cause beyond the control of the company" was approved yesterday by the City Commission.

Approval came after two previous postponements granted to allow attorneys for the city and for Montgomery City Lines to work out a satisfactory franchise.

The new agreement must "lie on the table" for 30 days to give opponents a chance to protest its passage.

The word "boycott" did not appear in the old franchise, which expires March 8, 1956.

MAJOR DIFFERENCE

A major difference in the old and new franchises is the elimination of a clause allowing the city to acquire all rolling stock if the company ceases operation.

That provision was left out entirely in the new agreement.

Permanent rates fixed by the new franchise are the same as the pre-boycott shcedule, except that the company will be allowed to make a two-cent transfer charge.

Adult passenger fares will be 10 cents and school fares 7½ cents (with the use of tokens).

Presently, under a resolution approved last month, the company charges 15 cents for adult fares, 10 cents for school fares or two for 15 cents, and five cents for transfers.

However, the resolution provided for "readjustment" when the boycott is ended.

NOT MENTIONED

The franchise granted in 1936 provided for heavy penalties on the company in the event of willful violation of the terms of the franchise. The city could assume ownership of the company's facilities and operate the buses for "liquidating damages."

The new franchise does not mention such eventualities, except to allow the city to "declare a forfeiture" for violation of the contract terms.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said later the city could still seek a court injunction to protect it in case the bus company should abandon the franchise.

Leaders Say No Solution In Montgomery Bus Situation

Birmingham Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Authentic leaders here in the 50-day old stay-off-the-buses campaign yesterday branded as completely false a story which had appeared in public print that they had held a conference with Montgomery city officials which produced a solution to the eight-week old protest.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association and pastor of downtown Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, when questioned on a wire service story which quoted the Montgomery City Commission as saying that an agreement had been reached for settling the refuse-to-ride protest which began Dec. 5 said the story was misleading.

Mr. King said that no representative of the association which he heads had talked with City Hall on January 21. He added that he learned that a Rev. W. K. Kines, a Baptist minister; the Rev. B. F. Mosely, a Presbyterian minister and Bishop D. C. Rice, Holiness minister, reportedly had held conference with the City Commission.

However, the Rev. King said that the three ministers did not speak for the MIA and had not been authorized to confer with the city officials as representatives of the protesting group. He said that he later talked with Rev. Kines and Rev. Mosely who explained how they were brought into the City Hall conference.

A mammoth set-the-record-straight mass meeting was scheduled for Beulah Baptist Church Monday night, January 23. Five neighborhood report-to-the-people meetings were scheduled for Thursday night, January 26.

One of the ministers in the "conference" with the City Commission charged that he was "hoodwinked" into the meeting, according to Rev. King. The MIA president said that he was told by one of the ministers who attended the City Commission's "conference with three Negro ministers" that he was asked to come see about an insurance policy. But was advised that before talking insurance he would have to help find a way to settle the "boycott" of the buses.

The statement attributed to the Montgomery City Commission said that the conference agreed that the "City Commission and the bus company must abide by all laws regulating public transportation."

But that the following ideas had been agreed upon, subject to ratification by Negro leaders and upon a request for restoration of bus service in those areas where it had been discontinued:

1. More courteous treatment.

2. The 10-seats plans — setting aside 10 seats in front of the bus for white passengers and 10 in the rear for Negro passengers.

3. No authority to suggest who the company should employ as bus drivers.

MIA leaders (2) are insisting on a first-come and first-served seating and (3) the employment of Negro bus drivers on buses running into Negro districts.

The City Commission's plan also provided "special buses for strictly Negro use" during the peak-load hours on bus lines running into predominantly Negro residential areas.

The Rev. King indicated that a meeting of MIA leaders was held Sunday at which the City Commission plan was rejected as inadequate.

Meantime today the franchise of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc. was scheduled to come up for renewal Action on the franchise had been postponed last Tuesday.

A delegation from the Montgomery Improvement Association was scheduled to attend the City Commission meeting this morning, according to Rev. King.

Arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks on Dec. 1 and fining her Dec. 5 set off the refuse-to-ride campaign. The conviction was appealed to Circuit but no date has been set for its hearing.

But officials have complained that the reduced bus loads growing out of the protest have resulted in a droppage of revenue. City officials, trying to aid the company, granted it a temporary 50 per cent bus fare raise. Negro patrons before the protest gave the company 75 per cent of its bus-riders. Company and city officials have indicated that the protest has resulted in about a 90 per cent fall off in Negro riders.

Mixed Ala. audience plan end to conflict

Afro-American Sat. 2-25-56 P. 6 Baltimore, Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Some 200 colored and white Alabamans Saturday violated a state law and disregarded a longtime custom to discuss ways and means of solving community conflicts.

The group met at an all-day conference at Alabama State College under the auspices of the Alabama Council on Human Relations — the only organized interracial group in the state.

Included in the group of about 70 whites attending were Rep. George Hawkins, floor leader in the State House of Representatives and a member of the Council's board of directors;

JAMES BATTLE, executive secretary of the State CIO; Carl Griffin, state president of the AFL; Charles Dobbins, former publisher of the Montgomery Examiner;

And Dr. Walter D. Agnew, retired president of Huntington College in Montgomery; the Rev. Albert S. Foley, professor of psychology, Jesuit Spring Hill College, Mobile; Dr. Robert E. Tidwell, retired dean of education at University of Alabama;

Also Rabbi Charles Mantinband of the Congregation of B'nai Israel, Hattiesburg, Miss., and Dr. Andrew Turnipseed, Mobile district superintendent of Methodist Church.

"MEANS OF Resolving Race Conflicts in the Community" was the subjct of the symposium.

President L. H. Foster of Tuskegee Institute stated that "we all agree that we are facing a crisis" in pointing out the role of the individual leader in a crisis.

Rabbi Mantinband, also a former chairman of the Mississippi Council on Human Relations, told how religion can be useful in solving the issue in question.

And Mrs. Fred Cousey, Montgomery clinical psychologist, explained how research can be used to locate the source and determine its strength in race conflicts.

THE MEETING, held on the second-floor auditorium on campus, was a direct contrast to a meeting the night before which was sponsored by the White Citizens Council.

Attending that meeting were Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi, state legislators of Alabama, the Georgia Attorney General and Montgomery city officials.

Unlike the Citizens Council meeting, there were no flags or bands; there were representatives of both races; they lunched at the same table;

And most of all—not to maintain a lily white state, but to discuss ways and means for a final settlement to the current racial conflicts.

Montgomery Boycott: New Phase

Nation p. 149

The latest official attempt to beat down the three-month-old boycott of city buslines by the Negro residents of Montgomery, Alabama, is to unleash a grand-jury investigation under color of an ancient state anti-labor law. Circuit Judge Eugene B. Carter told a panel of seventeen whites and one Negro on February 13 that "the right to conduct one's business without wrongful interference of others is a valuable property right which will be protected, if necessary, by injunctive process." He cited a statute, passed in 1921 for the purpose of breaking a miners' strike in Birmingham, which reads:

New York City, N. Y.

> Two or more persons who, without a just cause or legal excuse for so doing, enter into any combination, conspiracy, agreement, arrangement or understanding for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or preventing any other persons, firms, corporation . . . from carrying on any lawful business shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Sat. 2-25-56

The status of this law is rather murky; a second part of it, outlawing picketing, was specifically voided by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Carter declared that if the bus boycott were illegal it must be brought to an end. And, in a clear reference to the Negro pastors who have served as spokesmen for the boycotters, his six-page charge said: "The doctrine of hate has no place here and particularly has no place in our churches." (Recently, at the Methodist church he attends, Judge Carter sponsored—and saw passed—a resolution barring Negroes from the premises except in the performance of janitorial duties.) But perhaps the most intriguing of his remarks was his assertion to the jurors that "no court, whether it be federal court, state court or city court, can interfere with your deliberations. You are the supreme inquisitorial body." This aroused speculation that the Justice Department may have indicated an interest in the proceedings, and that the prosecutors themselves may face prosecution for infringement on civil rights if indictments are brought. Or again, Carter may have been only expressing the rancor and disquiet shared by several Southern judges at the recent F. B. I. investigation into the methods of selecting juries in a county in Georgia.

'TIME TO BE FRANK'

Mayor Stops Boycott Talk

Tues. 1-24-56 Montgomery, Ala.

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

Mayor W. A. Gayle declared yesterday there will be no more discussions with the Negro boycott leaders until they are ready to end the boycott.

The mayor declared in a dynamic statement of his stand on the boycott that the vast majority of whites in Montgomery "do not care whether a Negro ever rides a bus again if it means that the social fabric of our community is to be destroyed so that the Negroes will start riding buses again."

Shortly after the mayor issued his statement, it was announced that the entire City Commission, Mayor Gayle, Commissioner Frank Parks and Commissioner Clyde Sellers, had joined the Montgomery Citizens Council.

Mayor Gayle said that "We have pussyfooted around on this boycott long enough and it has come time to be frank and honest." He added that the Negro leaders have proved "again and again that they will say one thing to a white person and another thing to a Negro about the boycott."

His full text statement follows:

"The City Commission has attempted with sincerity and honesty to end the bus boycott in a businesslike fashion.

"We have held meetings with the Negroes at which proposals were made that would have been accepted by any fair-minded group of people.

"But there seems to be a belief on the part of the Negroes that they have the white people hemmed up in a corner and they are not going to give an inch until they can force the white people of our community to submit to their demands — in fact, swallow all of them.

"The Negro leaders have forced the bus boycott into a campaign between whether the social fabric of our community will continue to exist or will be destroyed by a group of Negro radicals who have split asunder the fine relationships which have existed between the Negro and white people for generations.

Advertiser

"No other city in the South of our size has treated the Negro more fairly. In Montgomery they have better facilities in schools, hospitals, health centers and the like than in the vast majority of cities. Until the bus boycott occurred, the Montgomery Negro rode the bus cheaper than Negroes in the vast majority of cities in the nation. Now the boycott has been fabricated by the Negroes into a campaign for forcing the white people of our community to accept their demands or else they will not ride the buses. We attempted to resolve their reasonable complaints but they proved by their refusal to resolve the reasonable ones that they were not interested in whether the bus service was good or not. What they are after is the destruction of our social fabric.

P. 2-A

"The Negro leaders seem to believe there is considerable concern among whites on whether the Negroes ride the buses or don't ride the buses. There is no such concern among the whites as the whites are not alarmed about whether the Negroes ride the buses again.

"It is time to be frank about this matter. The white people are firm in their convictions that they do not care whether the Negroes ever ride a city bus again if it means that the social fabric of our community is to be destroyed so that the Negores will start riding the buses again.

"It is not that important to whites that the Negroes ride the buses. This is not a matter of a bus boycott. It is a amatter of a community relationship.

"The Negro leaders have proved they are not interested in ending the boycott but rather in prolonging it so that they may stir up racial strife. The Negro leaders have proved they will say one thing to a white man and another thing to a Negro. They have proved it again and again.

"The Negro is the person who is concerned with bus transportation in Montgomery. They have admitted this by their own claims that 75 per cent of the passengers are Negroes. If they want bus transportation, they can ride the buses. I don't believe the majority of whites care one way or another and certainly not enough to destroy our heritage and way of life so that Negroes will get on buses and ride them.

"The Negro leaders say the boycott will last until their proposals are given 'sympathetic treatment.' If the Negro leaders mean what I believe they mean by 'sympathetic treatment,' then there is not likelihood of the end of the boycott.

"When and if the Negro people desire to end the boycott, my door is open to them. But until they are ready to end it, there will be no more discussions."

Earlier yesterday, there was a restoration of normal bus service on three predominantly Negro routes.

Montgomery City Lines Manager J. H. Bagley said there were "a few more passengers on other routes" but no "noticeable increase on the Negro routes."

Service was reinstated on the Day street, Maxwell Heights and Veterans Court buses. What had been known as the Day street bus during the boycott will become the Holcombe street bus.

Bagley said the company had received numerous requests for resumption of service to the Negro sections. That, coupled with a compromise statement issued Saturday by the City Commission, led to the decision to restore service. The bus company was not represented at the Saturday meeting.

The Rev. M. L. King, pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and boycott leader, chared that the three Negro ministers who talked with the commission were "hood-winked" into attending a city commission meeting Saturday.

It was this statement by King that caused Gayle to declare that Negro leaders were "saying one thing to whites and another thing to the Negroes."

King also charged that the three Negro ministers who had attended the meeting at the invitation of the commission all told him they had been duped into going.

One of the Negro ministers, the Rev. B. F. Mosley, who said he attended the meeting, issued a statement claiming he had not agreed to any compromise plan for ending the boycott.

The Rev. King said that the City Commission statement was "totally erroneous" if it gave the impression an agreement had been reached.

"More than 99 per cent of the Negro citizens of Montgomery have stated their position and it remains the same," he said. "The bus protest is still on and it will last until our proposals are given sympathetic treatment."

Gayle replied to the "sympathetic treatment" statement that there was no likelihood of an end to the boycott if the Negroes mean what he thought they meant by "sympathetic treatment."

City Approves Bus Franchise For 10 Years

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Wed. 1-25-56

A 10-year bus franchise providing for possible cancellation in the event of boycotts "or other cause beyond the control of the company" was approved yesterday by the City Commission.

Approval came after two previous postponements granted to allow attorneys for the city and for Montgomery City Lines to work out a satisfactory franchise.

The new agreement must "lie on the table" for 30 days to give opponents a chance to protest its passage.

The word "boycott" did not appear in the old franchise, which expires March 8, 1956.

MAJOR DIFFERENCE

A major difference in the old and new franchises is the elimination of a clause allowing the city to acquire all rolling stock if the company ceases operation.

That provision was left out entirely in the new agreement.

Permanent rates fixed by the new franchise are the same as the pre-boycott shcedule, except that the company will be allowed to make a two-cent transfer charge.

Adult passenger fares will be 10 cents and school fares 7½ cents (with the use of tokens).

Presently, under a resolution approved last month, the company charges 15 cents for adult fares, 10 cents for school fares or two for 15 cents, and five cents for transfers.

However, the resolution provided for "readjustment" when the boycott is ended.

NOT MENTIONED

The franchise granted in 1936 provided for heavy penalties on the company in the event of willful violation of the terms of the franchise. The city could assume ownership of the company's facilities and operate the buses for "liquidating damages."

The new franchise does not mention such eventualities, except to allow the city to "declare a forfeiture" for violation of the contract terms.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said later the city could still seek a court injunction to protect it in case the bus company should abandon the franchise.

FOR NEGRO SERVANTS

End To Free 'Taxi Service' Requested By Mayor Gayle

Mayor W. A. Gayle, speaking for the City Commission, urged white Montgomerians yesterday to halt the practice of using their automobiles as "taxi services for Negro maids and cooks who work for them."

He said the maids and cooks by boycotting the Montgomery City Lines are "fighting to destroy our social fabric just as much as the Negro radicals who are leading them."

"The Negroes are laughing at white people behind their backs. They think it's very funny and amusing that whites who are opposed to the Negro boycott will act as chauffeurs to Negroes who are boycotting the buses.

"The City Commission urges the white people of Montgomery to cease the practice of paying Negro maids, cooks or other employes 'blackmail' transportation money in any shape, form or fashion. This practice of extorting transportation money from whites under the threat of not showing up for work is shameful. The Negroes are merely using this practice to pay taxi fares so they can stay off city buses. If they want to ride in taxis, let them pay for them out of their own earnings.

"When a white person gives a Negro a single penny for transportation or helps a Negro with his transportation, even if it's a block ride, he is helping the Negro radicals who lead the boycott.

"The Negroes have made their own bed and the whites should let them sleep in it."

Commissioner Clyde Sellers also announced that he is instructing the Montgomery Police Department to break up congregations of Negroes who have been loitering for long periods in white residential districts.

"We have received complaints from white homeowners that Negroes are loitering in groups on the sidewalks outside their homes and that the habit has become rather chronic. A person has a perfect right to wait for a ride, but the practice of six and eight Negroes huddling together for an hour or more, trampling lawns and making loud noises in white residential districts must cease," he said.

"Actually some Negroes have turned into hitchhikers and we do not intend to allow the hitchhikers to become nuisances in the white sections."

Commissioner Frank Parks said that he had received dozens of calls from businessmen who said they were going to "lay off Negro employes who are being used as NAACP instruments in this boycott."

All three commission members said that the innocent Negroes who are being used as pawns in the hands of radicals "should wake up."

Meanwhile, a "tremendous ovation" was heaped on Mayor Gayle yesterday for his stand in ending Negro boycott talks and telling Negroes that "whites didn't care if the Negroes never rode the bus again if it meant destruction of the city's social fabric."

In stores and on the streets, white residents praised Mayor Gayle, Commissioner Sellers and Commissioner Parks for their "leadership in cutting the legs off the Negro boycott."

The consensus among whites was that they didn't care if the Negro boycott of the city buses "continued forever" and one man declared, "I hope the Negroes walk until they get bunions and blisters."

At the City Hall, Switchboard Operator Katherine Brown said she was swamped at the switchboard with hundreds of telephone calls praising the mayor and commissioners.

"In my 19 years at the City Hall, I can remember only once or twice when there were more telephone calls," she said.

In the mayor's office, Mrs. Kate Barnett, his secretary, said the "telephone hasn't stopped ringing and there have been so many people in here this morning to thank the mayor that we haven't been able to do a thing."

Mayor Gayle displayed a thick stack of telegrams received from throughout the state congratulating him on his stand.

"The people are with the commission. They have proved it today. We are going to hold to our stand. We are not going to be a part of any program that will get Negroes to ride the buses again at the price of the destruction of our heritage and way of life," he declared.

Commissioner Sellers said that he, too, had received "scores of telephone calls" and "people have been in my office to volunteer their support."

"I am convinced beyond any doubt that every right-thinking white man and woman in Montgomery is solidly behind us in our stand," he said.

Commissioner Frank Parks said he was "amazed with the avalanche of telephone calls, telegrams and visits."

"Our people want leadership in this matter and we, the City Commission, have resolved that we will furnish that leadership."

Throughout the city, white residents were discussing the commission's stand and many commented that "our governor ought to take a stand like that instead of siding with Negroes."

Attorneys, doctors, and other professional people strongly endorsed the mayor's stand as did mechanics, bus drivers, clerks and others.

'MISUNDERSTOOD'

Negro Leader Denies Saying End Of Boycott To Be Aired

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 2-9-56

A Negro leader who was quoted Tuesday as saying the Montgomery Improvement Association (Negro) would consider ways to end the bus boycott at its meeting yesterday has denied the statement.

The Rev. M. L. King said he was "misunderstood" and that he meant to say the matter "might" be discussed.

Following the meeting of the association — the policy-making arm of the boycott—the Rev. R. D. Abernathy said no announcement "of interest to the press" would be made.

Abernathy said the meeting was routine, adding that it was not called for a specific purpose.

Meanwhile, the Men of Montgomery, a civic organization, solicited advice from "anyone" with suggestions on ways to restore normal racial relations in Montgomery.

William R. Lynn (telephone 5-3546), secretary of the group, made the announcement yesterday.

The organization released a statement identical to one approved earlier by the Montgomery Ministerial Association, describing the city as a "house divided against itself," and urging:

"(1) That very citizen exercise censorship of his own words, that malicious and unfounded rumors may cease.

"(2). That all measures savoring of force, intimidation, and reprisal be stopped and remedies sought at the council table.

"(3). That the differing groups select true representatives who will lay aside passion and, together, endeavor to reach an agreement."

The civic organization noted that the former "spirit of goodwill has given place to one of bitterness, suspicion and hatred" in Montgomery. P. 2-A

King, who has served as spokesman for the boycotters on several occasions, was quoted after talking with two reporters as having said ending of the boycott might be discussed in view of a federal suit pending against the city's segregation laws.

He was not available to reporters yesterday and his secretary said she did not know where he could be reached.

Threat of job loss cuts bus boycott ranks

Afro-American Sat. 2-11-56 Baltimore, Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Because both she and her husband had been threatened with loss of their jobs, Mrs. Jeanetta Reese, asked that her name be withdrawn as a plaintiff to the bus segregation suit filed here Wednesday. P. 8

She was one of five plaintiffs who had asked the Federal Court here to declare state and city laws requiring segregation in transportation unconstitutional.

* * *

MRS. REESE, told the AFRO not only had her employer, for whom she works as a domestic, threatened her with discharge, but that her husband had been told he would lose his job unless she withdrew as party to the suit.

She said telephone calls from Citizens Council had also threatentd immediate foreclosure on their home.

Fred D. Gray, who with Charles Langford, attorneys, prepared the suit, said Mrs. Reese's withdrawal would not affect the case in the least.

Four other plaintiffs, all of whom at various times have been victims of mistreatment on the city's buses, still remain.

AT MEETING TODAY

Group To Study Possibility Of Ending Boycott Of Buses

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Wed. 2-8-56

Discussion of the possibility of ending the two-month-old Negro boycott of buses will be on the agenda of the executive board meeting of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. today.

The Rev. M. L. King, boycott spokesman, said the matter would be presented to the association board of which he is president.

"I really couldn't say yet whether or not we will start back riding the buses," he said, "It will depend upon the meeting and the action taken on any recommendation the board may make," he said.

He explained that the executive board's action—one way or another—would be in the form of a recommendation to Negroes at large.

"If we suggest an end to the movement, it will be placed before the next mass meeting of the group," he said. The group usually meets at least once or twice a week.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said he was "always in favor of peace and harmony in our city."

King said the position of the boycotters had been "changed somewhat" byp the filing of a suit in federal court last week attacking Montgomery and Alabama travel segregation laws as being unconstitutional.

He said the litigation could last a "long time" and that he did not "know whether Negroes would want to continue the boycott until the suit is settled."

"We are now depending on the courts to give the final answer," he said.

King declined to say where today's meeting will be held.

Meanwhile, the Montgomery Ministerial Assn. passed a resolution urging that racial "bitterness, suspicion and hatred" be ended and that the "spirit of unity, peace and concord," be restored.

The resolution passed unanimously by the group states:

"A few weeks ago Montgomery was a city that was justifiably proud of its community spirit. Different racial, religious, and economic groups lived, worshipped, and worked here in an atmosphere of mutual respect and good will. P. 2-A

"Today Montgomery is a 'House divided against itself.' The spirit of good will has given place to one of bitterness, suspicion and hatred.

Montgomery Ala.

"The loss to Montgomery, morally and economically, is incalculable—a loss resulting from our own intemperate thinking, talk, and acting.

"That further harm may not be done, and that there may be restored the spirit of unity, peace, and concord to our city, we urge:

"(1) That every citizen exercise censorship of his own words, that malicious and unfounded rumors may cease.

"(2) That all measures savoring of force, intimidation, and reprisal be stopped and remedies sought at the council table.

"(3) That the differing groups select true representatives who will lay aside passion and together endeavor to reach an agreeable solution."

Matter To Be Taken Up At Montgomery Meeting

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 7. —(UP)—Negro leaders in a boycott of city buses have scheduled a meeting here Wednesday which could lead to an end of the two-month-old demonstration. Wed. 2-8-56

Rev. M. L. King, a Negro leader and president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, said the matter of ending the boycott would be presented to the association Wednesday.

However, he added, "I really couldn't say yet whether or not we will start riding the buses. It will depend upon the meeting and the action taken on any recommendation the board might make." Memphis

The Improvement Association was the principal organizer of the "protest movement," which began over seating arrangements on city buses. Tenn.

King said the association's action, one way or another, would be in the form of a recommendation to Negroes at large.

He said if an end to the boycott is recommended it would be presented to the next mass meeting of the Negroes.

The youthful minister said the position of the boycotters had been "changed" somewhat by the filing of a suit in Federal Court to declare state and city segregation laws unconstitutional.

"We are now depending on the courts to give the final answer," he said.

Color Line Restored On Alabama Buses

Herald Wed. 4-25-56 Miami, Fla.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — Montgomery City Bus Lines Inc., was oredered by the state of Alabama Tuesday to replace the color bars it dropped earlier in the day, or "suffer the consequences." P. 1

The demand came from the president of Alabama's Public Service Commission, as the capital city's buses began rolling under a new policy of no-segregated seating.

It was a paper policy, because the few Negroes riding Tuesday moved to the rear of the vehicles of their own accord. City officials vowed to arrest anyone attempting to integrate the races on buses, including drivers.

Most Negroes in the Alabama city stayed off the vehicles as they've done since their boycott began Dec. 5.

The bus company adopted its new policy after the U. S. Supreme Court held Monday that segregation on Columbia, S. C., buses is unlawful.

Tuesday, C. C. (Jack) Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, fired a telegram to the bus company ownership, with copies to all other transit firms in the state, saying:

"All public carriers are hereby directed to strictly adhere to all present existing segregation laws in our state or suffer the consequences."

Owen would not elaborate on the consequences. His telegram was addressed to Roy Fitzgerald, president of National City Lines of Chicago which owns the Montgomery firm. It declared:

"As president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, elected by the people of Alabama, sworn to uphold the segregation laws of this state which include all forms of public transportation, I hereby defy a ruling handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court ordering desegregation on public carriers. Alabama state law requiring segregation of races on buses still stands.

"I demand that you withdraw your order, approving integration on buses in Montgomery."

Citizens Continue To Walk Rather Than Ride Buses

Daily World P. 1
Sun. 2-26-56
Atlanta, Ga.

BY PAT J. McDONNELL

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — Montgomery Negroes doggedly continued to walk rather than ride segregated buses Saturday while the U. S. Justice Department studied the mass arrest of 89 boycott leaders, with an eye to possible federal intervention.

There was no sign of any compromise in the dispute that has gripped the Alabama Capital since Dec. 5, and one churchman described the city's 50,000 Negro residents as "closer together than ever before."

The White House disclosed that Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr. has been asked to determine whether the Federal government can or should intervene in the Montgomery case.

Editor Expresses Caution For Rep. Powell Movement

Daily World
Sun. 2-26-56
P. 4

In a night letter to Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, C. A. Scott, editor and general manager of the Atlanta Daily World said:

Atlanta, Ga.

"I appreciate your concern about the Montgomery, Alabama situation but think plan for work stoppage would be unfair to innocent persons. Reports are that Governor Folsom and the U. S. Department of Justice are intervening in Montgomery problem and we believe this will result in a satisfactory solution."

Attorney A. T. Walden, local leader has also expressed a similar interest, stating that such a move as advocated by the famous Congressman, would cause Negroes to lose more friendly support to their cause in Montgomery and hurt the program generally.

NEW LOW

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, (D) N. Y., who asked for federal intervention, arrest of boycott leaders—many of them church or political figures—"a new low in American barbarism."

There was some hesitation among Montgomery Negroes about endorsing Rep. Powell's call for a nationwide one-hour work-stoppage of Negroes on March 28, as a "passive resistance" demonstration of support for the boycott.

HESITANT ON APPROVAL

Daily World

The Montgomery leaders described as "encouraging" the messages of moral support from national Negro leaders, but were hesitant to lend approval to the spread of their own movement.

P. 4

"We have not given this too much study," said the Rev. A. W. Wilson of the national movement, adding that "personally I don't know whether it would be wise" to endorse a national Negro crusade.

He explained:

"The inclination here has been to say that Montgomery Negroes have been 'stirred up by outside agitators.'

"This is not so at all.

This has been a local movement and our people will continue to seek ways of working out our problem. I believe our people will remain united and carry on. But I think we need to wait a while, until things get normal again, before considering any new moves."

89 LEADERS

The Rev. Wilson said that the long bus boycott, marked by bombing of two homes of Negroes and by the arrest this week of 89 leaders on a misdemeanor charge of illegal boycott, "has united our people in a common cause under the banner of the church." He added:

"The future is too uncertain. I would hesitate to say what might happen. But I believe the Negro population today has been brought closer together than ever before.

"I think it has all had a very wholsome effect on the community. Regular church service attendance has increased. Some people who had not been as regular as they should have been, now have come back to seek guidance of the almighty in a time of trouble."

Negro leaders appeared ready to sit tight for the moment. Spokesmen said the executive committee of the Montgomery improvement association, formed to guide the boycott, probably would take no additional action until those arrested on boycott charges this week stand trial the week of March 12.

Nor did city officials have any announced plans of action to settle the dispute pending the trials.

WELL PUBLICIZED

White citizens questioned at random on the streets about the dispute shrugged their shoulders, and generally gave the impression of trying to ignore the well-publicized "day of walking and praying."

Editors of leading Alabama newspapers viewed the boycott as part of the southhwide problem evoked by attempts to end the region's traditional racial segregation. On the suggestion of Gov. James E. Folsom, the editors decided to have a bi-racial committee study possible ways of easing "tensions."

While the Montgomery boycott wore on, another aspect of the segregation question was to be unfolded Wednesday in Birmingham. A federal court will decide there whether University of Alabama officials should be held guilty of contempt of court for barring a Birmingham Negro, Autherine Lucy, from the Tuscaloosa campus.

Miss Lucy, the first Negro student in the school's 125-year history, was admitted to classes on a federal court order earlier this month, but "excluded" by the school trustees after three days of demonstrations and riots by students and townsfolk.

Head Of PSC Set To Order Segregation

President C. C. (Jack) Owen of the Alabama Public Service Commission said yesterday he was in the process of reminding all carriers in the state of Alabama's laws pertaining to racial segregation.

Montgomery Ala.

In letters mailed to the presidents of all bus and railroad companies operating in Alabama, Owen explained three phases of the law in relation to a desegregation decree handed down several weeks ago by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Owen said the ICC decision had no bearing on bus lines operating in Alabama, and under state law they would be required to continue segregation practices both on interstate and intrastate carriers.

P. 7

All railroads which were not a party to the suit which led to the ICC ruling also must continue to comply with Alabama laws Owen added, both in interstate and intrastate traffic.

Finally, Owen explained, railroads which were a party to the suit must still practice segregation on all intrastate carriers but would not be required to do so on interstate carriers.

"We are directing all public carriers to keep segregation signs in their stations in compliance with Alabama law," Owen said. "It is the law of the state and we intend to uphold it to the best of our abilities as long as it is on the books."

Owen said letters were also being sent to city law enforcement officers in the state, reminding them also of Alabama's segregation laws.

Hearing Set For Negro In 'Bus' Case

Advertiser P. 2

A Negro man accused of beating up a Negro woman for riding city buses during the boycott is scheduled to receive a hearing in Recorder's Court tomorrow.

Montgomery Ala.

Beatrice Jackson, 1502 W. Fifth St., testified yesterday that Thomas Carter, 1212 Thurman St., beat her in the face after accusing her of "acting smart" in riding the buses.

News 1-26-56

The hearing was continued until tomorrow to hear additional testimony.

Before it was continued, the woman testified Carter, in addition to beating her just after she disembarked from a bus, threw a steel chair at her as she ran into the house.

Carter denied the bus boycott had anything to do with the incident. He said he went to her house to buy whisky and she "jagged me with a knife," after a dispute arose over some furniture he was helping her move.

Another case continued until tomorrow was a disorderly conduct charge against James D. Thomas, 32, of 720 Columbia Ave.

Witnesses testified he tried to eat at the Crystal Cawe and tried to register at the Exchange Hotel. Patrolmen W. W. Anderson and C. L. King said Thomas called them obscene names when they arrested him.

Judge John B. Scott contiuned the hearing to allow Thomas to undergo a psychiatric examination.

"Is this possible? American history answers yes. Alabama gets part of her inspiration from Wisconsin. Your teacher is doubtless an intellectually honest person and educated. So get her to tell your class about the time Wisconsin defied the court in the 1850s. Wisconsin believed in abolition of slavery as sincerely as Alabama believes in segregation. The Supreme Court of Chief Justice Taney ordered Wisconsin to obey the Fugitive Slave Act. The Wisconsin court would not even accept the Supreme Court's writ. It was passionate defiance. Negroes File 'Test' Of Bus Segregation

Post-Herald Birmingham

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 1 (AP) — Four Negro women filed suit today asking that state and city laws requiring segregation on public transportation facilities be declared unconstitutional.

Ala.

The Federal Court suit also seeks an injunction to prevent enforcement of the segregation travel laws while the suit is before the court.

Press 2-2-56

It was filed by Attys. Charles L. Langford and Fred Gray in behalf of four women, two of whom claim they have been convicted of violating Montgomery city ordinances requiring segregated travel on public vehicles.

The complaint was filed against three members of the Montgomery City Commission both "individually and collectively." It also names Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and the Montgomery City Lines, the bus company which Negroes have been boycotting since Dec. 5.

White-Negro signs ordered

News P. 1

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 10—(AP)—The Public Service Commission has ordered all railroad and bus stations in Alabama to provide "white" and "negro" signs for their waiting rooms in Alabama.

News 2-10-56

Alabama law requires separate but equal accommodations but doesn't mention signs designating them. The PSC order does make that mandatory.

Birmingham

Some railroad stations removed their "white" and "Negro" signs recently after the Interstate Commerce Commission directed certain carriers to discontinue separate waiting room facilities.

Ala.

The PSC promptly ordered the accommodations kept separate on all carriers not directly affected by the ICC ruling.

Ask Alabama Governor to Halt Bus Row Violence

Pittsburgh Courier Thurs. 2-9-56 P. 1

Des Moines Iowa

NEW YORK — Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, has called upon Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama to halt violence against Negroes in Montgomery, Ala.

The homes of two Negro leaders in the current protest movement against bus segregation in Montgomery were bombed this week.

Meanwhile, NAACP attorneys filed suit in the U. S. District Court in Montgomery on behalf of Negro plaintiffs seeking a decree declaring the Alabama statute requiring racial segregation in public buses unconstitutional.

Suit Filed

The suit, filed on Feb. 1, also asked the court to enjoin Mayor W. A. Gayle, Frank Park and other city commissioners, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers(and Chief of Police Goodwin J. Ruppenthal from interfering with the plaintiffs in the exercise of their constitutional right to ride public buses without state-imposed racial segregation.

Representing the plaintiffs were NAACP attorneys Fred D. Gray of Montgomery and Robert L. Carter of New York City.

In his message to Gov. Folsom, dispatched on Feb. 2, Mr. Wilkins specifically called upon the state official to "take appropriate investigative and police action to restore law and order in Montgomery, to protect Negro citizens there from further intimidation and violence, and to see that those responsible for the bombings are brought to justice."

The persons whose homes were bombed are the Rev. M. L. King and E. D. Nixon. Mr. King's wife and baby and Mr. Nixon's wife were all at home when the bombings occurred but were not harmed.

No arrests have been made in the attempted murders.

Mr. Wilkins pointed out in his telegram to Gov. Folsom that "these bombings follow a 'get tough' policy announced by Mayor Gayle last week as a means of ending the protest movement against city bus segregation."

Mayor Gayle, Mr. Wilkins noted, "is reported to be a member of the notorious Citizens Councils."

"It would appear," the NAACP leader continued, "that the 'get tough' policy of the Montgomery city administration has created an atmosphere inciting to violence and riotous disorder which is a threat to the lives of all Negro citizens in the community."

"Further, all this indicates the existence of a conspiracy to injure Negrocitizens who are protesting peacefully against municipal bus segregation. We are confident your office appreciates the danger . . ."

The bombing of the King home took place on Jan. 30 and that of the Nixon home on Feb. 1.

Dynamiting

MONTGOMERY, ALA. — A second explosion within a week has been set off at Montgomery, where a bus-segregation row has raised tensions increasingly since last November.

Police say the blast, apparently dynamite, was touched off during the night in the yard of C. D. Nixon, a Pullman porter and former state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Not At Home

Nixon was not at home. His wife and a neighbor's child were in tse house, but no one was hurt. A fence in front of the home was damaged. An orderly crowd of about 200 Negroes gathered while police investigated.

Earlier this week, an explosion rocked the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Negro Baptist minister who has led a boycott of city buses by Negroes protesting "Jim Crow" seating regulations.

In Boycott

Nixon also has been prominent in the boycott. He appeared in court when Rosa Parks was charged with violating segregation laws pertaining to bus seating. It was that case which touched off the boycott.

Wednesday five Negroes brought suit in federal district court asking that Montgomery city laws and Alabama state laws concerning racial segregation in public transportation be declared unconstitutional.

Montgomery Threatens Bus Line With Court Action

Special to the New York Post 4-25-56

Montgomery, (Ala.) April 25—The City Commission said today that the company operating Montgomery's city bus lines would be "subject to court action" if it permitted racial integration.

Such action would be based on city and state segregation laws, Mayor W. A. Gayle said.

The announcement followed a statement by National City Lines, Inc., which operates bus lines here and in seven other Southern cities, that the company would back up any driver arrested for permitting racial integration on his bus.

City officials here had warned they would arrest both passengers and drivers if integration occurred on a bus.

Segregation Signs Ordered For Alabama Waiting Rooms

Sat. 2-11-56 P. 1

Montgomery

All Alabama railroad and bus stations have been ordered to post "white" and "Negro" signs and maintain separate waiting room facilities.

Notice was sent out to the carriers by the Alabama Public Service Commission reminding that state law still requires separate but equal accommodations.

While the law doesn't specify that racial designation signs be provided, the PSC order makes that mandatory.

After the Interstate Commerce Commission directed some railroads to discontinue separate waiting rooms, some railroad stations took down their "white" and "Negro" signs.

The Commission's directive as to separate facilities applies to all carriers in Alabama not affected by the ICC ruling.

Commission Atty. Pete Black said the new order as to posting signs applies to all stations in Alabama regardless of the ICC ruling. It was signed by President Jack Owen and Associate Commissioners Sibyl Pool and Jimmy Hitchcock.

Bus boycott costly to community

News

Birmingham, Ala.

Tues. 2-14-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 14—(AP)—How much has the 10-week-old bus boycott by Negroes here cost the bus company and the community?

Officials of the National City Bus Lines aren't making public the company's loss. The cost in terms of the community is much more important, and that isn't measurable either, civic leaders say.

But racial tension between white persons and Negroes has mounted throughout the prolonged stalemate. The Montgomery Advertiser recently put it this way:

"Never before in Montgomery has the word 'nigger' been used as frequently as in recent weeks."

The racial unrest in Alabama has pulled white persons and Negroes farther apart. Thousands of Negroes attend boycott meetings here, and officials of the pro-white Central Alabama Citizens Council say their membership has jumped from a few hundred to 12,000.

The boycott began Dec. 5 in protest to segregated seating required on buses by state and city laws. On that day Mrs. Rosa Parks, a seamstress, was fined $14 for refusing to move to the back of a bus. Since then the Negroes have stayed off the buses in droves.

ESTIMATES OF the boycott's effectiveness run as high as 95 per cent. About 65 per cent of the bus company's patrons were normally Negroes but the company claims it is now breaking even by hiking bus fares and curtailing service.

Negotiations between white and Negro leaders for a compromise broke down completely after the first few wee[illegible] the boycott. Now both are seeking legal means t[illegible] the protest movement.

Yesterday, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter charged the Montgomery Couuty Grand Jury to determine if Negroes boycotting the buses are part of a conspiracy violating the law. The Grand Jury is composed of 17 white members and one Negro.

On the other hand, five Negro women have filed suit in U. S. District Court challenging the constitutionality of the state and city statutes requir- for white persons and Negroes on public vehicles.

In a reference to increased racial unrest, Carter told the grand jurors that "Montgomery has been a city that both races have had pleasure in living in." Then he added:

"I say to both black and white, let's continue to live as neighbors. The doctrine of hate has no place here."

MAYOR W. A. GAYLE said recently that the City Commission was through "pussyfooting around" with the boycott.

Boycott leaders, many of them ministers, have demanded bus seats on a "first come, first served" basis. They said Negroes would continue to sit from the rear toward the front but would not be required to stand if back seats aren't available.

But Gayle, pointing to the federal suit challenging constitutionality of the segregated seating laws, said the Negro leaders will be satisfied with nothing short of complete integration.

Despite the growing tension, there have been few incidents of violence here and no injuries.

Two weeks ago, small dynamite bombs exploded in front of the most outspoken boycott leaders. A few buses were struck by bullets in the first week of the boycott.

The bombs were tossed at night .8 hours apart at the homes of the Rev. M. L. King, Negro Baptist minister and one of the most optspoken boycott leaders, and H. S. Nixon, Negro pullman porter and former state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Angry City Bus Driver Threatens AP Staffer

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

An angry city bus driver yesterday threatened an Associated Press photographer who attempted to take a picture of his bus under the new racial integration policy.

Photographer Horace Cort of Atlanta said the driver jumped from the bus, drew back his fist and growled, "If you take my picture, G—— d—— you, I'll kill you."

Cort said the driver had no objection to the bus being photographed when he wasn't on it. The incident occurred at a downtown stop several hours after the bus company had ordered its drivers to stop enforcing segregation laws.

Dale County Sheriff Maintains Segregation In Waiting Rooms

OZARK, Ala., April 23 — Dale County Shiriff J. Hoyett Searcy announced today that the "White Waiting Room," and "Colored Waiting Room" signs at the Ozark Passenger Section of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad had been reinstalled by his deputies and upon his orders during the past week.

Sheriff Searcy said "I put the signs up, and intend for them to stay as long as segregation is required by Alabama Law." The sheriff said thede was no racial troubles in Dale County.

GOOD RELATIONS

"From a standpoint of continued good relations between the races it is necessary to keep the races segregated," he added.

Dale county has a population of approximately 22,000, with Negroes constituting something like 25 per cent.

The segregation signs here have experienced somewhat of an "on again — off again — gone again —Lonnegran" cycle during the past few months, after having gone undisturbed over 50 years.

STARTED IN DECEMBER

In compliance with an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission early December, employes of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad painted over the signs adorning the two passenger waiting rooms.

Searcy prepared his own signs, and sent deputies to place the signs over the waiting room doors. This was completed according to orders of Sheriff Searcy, and the signs remained nailed over the doors for some time.

Later, railroad employes noted that the signs had been removed, reportedly during their absence from the passenger station.

CULPRITS UNKNOWN

Sheriff Searcy declares he has never been able to ascertain the name or names of the person or persons who might have removed them

The fourth phase of the "Coastline Segregation Signs" took place during the past week. Sheriff Searcy said he had waited for some time believing that the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad would reinstall the signs themselves, in conformity with a ruling of the Alabama Public Service Commission. When this was not done, he proceeded to have some more signs made. These signs, put up this week, maintain segregation, "By Order of Dale County Sheriff."

Mobile Will Continue Segregation On Buses

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Wed. 4-25-56

MOBILE, Ala., April 24 (AP)—Police Commissioner Charles F. Hackmeyer said today segregation of bus passengers will be continued in Mobile despite a decision by the bus company to stop requiring segregated seating of whites and Negroes.

The commission split over the question.

Commissioner Henry R. Luscher joined the police official in saying the city law will be enforced. The other member, Mayor Joseph N. Langan said, however, he felt the ordinance was invalidated by the Supreme Court's ruling Monday.

"I don't see there is anything the Mobile city government can do about it," Langan said. He proposed that bus segregation be continued on a voluntary basis.

CAL LATTORNEY

Hackmeyer said when it became clear that Mobile City Lines, Inc., had stopped enforcing racial segregation on the buses, he would "Call in the city attorney and determine the proper steps and procedures to see that the segregation laws of the city of Mobile are continued to be enforced."

The police commissioner said Mobile was not a party to the South Carolina case in which the Supreme Court made its ruling. He said the city law consequently was still in effect and would be enforced "just as any other ordinance."

This policy would be continued, he added, unless "some action is taken by the City Commission to repeal the law, or there is some legal action in the courts to throw it out." He said h did not anticipat any steps by the commission to repeal the law.

A Mobile official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People siad no immediate action is planned by that group.

IN VIEW OF RULING

An official of the parent company of Mobile City Lines announced in Chicago yesterday that segregation will not be enforced on its lines in southern cities. B. W. Franklin, National City Lines vice president, said the decision was made in view of the Supreme Court ruling.

National operates bus lines in Mobile and Montgomery, Ala., Jackson, Miss., Tampa, Fla., Tulsa, Okla., and Beaumont, Wichita Falls and El Paso, Tex.

The Mobile bus lines normally serve about 45,000 passengers daily.

MONROEVILLE, L. (AP) state representative here has drafted a new bill designed to preserve racial segregation in public transportation in Alabama through a bill that gives a white woman "her choice or election to the entire seat on a bus, streetcar or train."

The bill is sponsored by Rep. Nick S. Hare, who plans to introduce it at the next session of the state legislature.

In announcing the bill Hare said:

'None of the threatened possibilities disturbs southerners more than the prospect of a Negro man taking a seat beside a white woman. This sensitive spot in race relations is generally acknowledged to be the most likely to create strife and tension, or to errupt suddenly in riots or bloodshed.

BIRMINGHAM — (ANP) — Next in line in the campaign against segregated seating on local public transportation is the city of Birmingham, which last week received a request to institute a "first-come, first - seated" policy on all its buses, and also to begin hiring Negro drivers.

The request was submitted by the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, a Negro group organized last June 5 and pledged to the "removal from our society (of) any forms of second class citizenship."

President of the organization is Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth. Rev. C. H. George is head of the transportation committee.

The Birmingham Transit company, to whom the request was made, promised to consider it for 30 days and then meet with the Negro organization to "thrash out' the matter.

Official acknowledgement that Birmingham may face a crisis similar to that now being entertained by Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla., came from Birmingham Mayor James W. Morgan.

Choice Seating For Women Asked In Segregation Bill

Advertiser P. 2-F
Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 7-15-56

MONROEVILLE, Ala., July 14 (AP) — New legislation aimed at preservation of racial segregation on public carriers in Alabama was proposed today by State Rep. Nick S. Hare.

He said he has drafted a bill to provide that when a woman is first to occupy a seat on a bus, streetcar or train, she has the right to occupy the entire seat "at her choice or election."

Hare said he plans to introduce the bill at the next session of the State Legislature.

The legislator said in announcing the bill:

"None of the threatened integration possibilities disturbs Southerners more than the prospect of a Negro man taking a seat beside a white woman. People who haul maids harassed

News P. 14
Wed. 10-17-56
Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 17 — (AP) — White housewives who drive their Negro maids to and from work are being harassed by anonymous phone calls, The Montgomery Advertiser said today.

THE NEWSPAPER quoted persons who received calls as saying men had threatened physical violence and used profanity. Most of the post-midnight calls were limited to the question:

"Isn't it about time you went to get your nigger maid?"

Montgomery Negroes have been boycotting city buses since last December in protest to the arrest of a Negro woman for violation of a segregated seating law. A federal court decision that city bus segregation is unconstitutional is on appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

PENDING THE appeal, both enforcement of bus segregation and the boycott are continuing. An organization set up to coordinate the boycott operates a car pool that provides transportation for many Negroes.

The only phone call reported to him, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said, was to a resident living outside the city. Postmaster Charles Moore said he had heard of no threatening letters but would investigate if any were reported.

Letters received in some South Montgomery areas said in full:

"Dear friend: Listed below are a few of the white people who are still hauling their Negro maids. This must be stopped. These people would appreciate a call from you, day or night. Let's let them know how we feel about them hauling Negroes."

The lists included a number of prominent Montgomery residents, The Advertiser said.

Negro calls tactics 'the forces of evil'

CORTLAND, N. Y., Oct. 17—(AP)—A leader of an antisegregation bus boycott in Alabama says such tactics are aimed at "the forces of evil," not at individuals.

The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala., told the New York State Universalist Ministers Assn. last night that "tension" in his community was "not between white and Negro but . . . between justice and injustice."

Dr. King, a Negro, was found guilty in an Alabama court last March of leading what the prosecution termed an illegal boycott against the Montgomery City Bus Lines. He has appealed a sentence of a $500 fine and payment of $500 court costs.

The 29-year-old minister said a "crisis" in race relations had been precipitated by the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools and by "a radical change in the Negro's evaluation of his nature and destiny."

DR. KING said that violent resistance created social problems, it did not solve them. He said that nonviolent resistance sought to win friendship and understanding, not to defeat and humiliate opponents.

The minister told the church group that "in Montgomery, we can walk and never get tired because we know there will be a great camp meeting in the promised land of freedom."

Folks won't budge on cop's order

By CLIFF MACKAY
Editor of the AFRO-AMERICAN

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The amazing story behind the 100 per cent effective bus boycott, now in its tenth week, is that it is a fight led by two young men not yet in their 30's, and it gets its most enthusiastic support from followers twice their age.

The leaders, both Southerners but products of Northern schools, are the dynamic Rev. M. L. King Jr., 27; and the brilliant Fred D. Gray, 25, attorney at law.

Holding up their arms is a solid phalanx of graying grandmas, who unhesitatingly express their joy over having "lived to see this day."

"WE ARE simply sick and tired of being insulted and humiliated," they say.

"We will walk forever before we set foot on those buses. We're not doing this for ourselves. We're fighting for a better chance for our grandchildren."

Equally significant is the unbelievable cohesion of all segments of the community behind the militant, but intelligent, leadership of the youthful team of King and Gray.

It is this heroic worship of the two men which has the majority of the white community astonished; it has also stirred fear in the hearts of those officials, who for generations have refused to concede that there has been any change in race relations since 1863.

* * *

IT WAS manifest Monday night shortly after unknown assailants tossed what state bomb experts now say was a stick of dynamite on the porch of the Rev. Mr. King's residence.

The blast occurred at 9:15 p.m.

By 9:23 more than 2,000 of Dr. King's followers were gathered in front of the house, jamming the sidewalks and blocking traffic in the street.

Five squads of policemen, obviously of the "old school" arrived and began shouting:

"All right, the fun's over. You boys and girls break it up and go home. Get movin' and we mean move now!"

Not a single person budged. Bewildered, the policemen drew heavy nightsticks, but still no one moved.

* * *

SUDDENLY, ONE aging workworn woman in the back of the crowd began singing, "My Country 'Tis of Thee." Hundreds of voices picked up the strain.

The perplexed officers stood at attention, their mouths open in amazement.

Then Rev. Mr. King, stepped out on the porch and began addressing them.

"Everything is all right," he reassured them. "It is best for all of you to go home. The police are investigating, nobody has been hurt and everything is under control."

Only then did the huge throng begin to break up in small groups and move from the street, giving unconcealed menacing looks at the baffled policemen.

EVEN GROVER HALL JR., editor of the Montgomery Advertiser, who prides himself on being abreast of the times in racial matters, confessed that he was confused.

"If someone had offered to bet me $1000 that this boycott would last more than two days, I would have snatched it up," he said.

The AFRO interview was granted on the second floor of the block square building which houses both the Advertiser, a morning newsppaer, and its evening companion, the Alabama Journal.

Mr. Hall greets you with firm handshake, a gesture which is in itself a violation of Southern custom, takes your top coat and offers you a seat.

YOUR EYES stray to his desk on which rests one of the longest and shiniest 12-guage shotguns you have every seen.

He sees your glance, then rushes to explain. "No," he says, "things are not that bad. I just happened to bring it down this morning to have it cleaned."

He plays nervously with a pencil as he looks straight at you through heavy horn-rimmed glasses.

"You know this is an old Confederate community, rooted in the plantation philosophy, yet we have maintained the best race relations in the country here," he begins.

"FRANKLY, I believe the majority of white people were with the colored people when this thing first broke out, but now I don't know.

"It has developed into a contest between white and colored. The gully is growing wider and wider. This thing has set the colored people back at least five years, maybe ten.

"If they had just staged a one-day boycott as a symbol of protest and then sat down around a conference table, I believe we could have worked this thing out.

"But then when it kept spreading and the colored leaders began demanding things, white opinion changed and hardened against them."

"DO YOU know," he said pointing a chewed pencil, "that this thing has made the White Citizens Council? Before the boycott started they couldn't get anywhere.

"They had third-rate leaders and just the ragtail of white people following them. Now the very best and most respectable people have joined and there's no telling where it will end.

"But there's one thing you can tell all of your readers who are agitating this segregation business up North, the schools in the South will never be mixed, Supreme Court or no Supreme Court."

REMINDED THAT the schools are already being mixed in such Southern states as Kentucky, Maryland, Tennessee, Oklahoma and that state universities were mixed in every state except South Carolina, Mississippi, Georgia and Florida, he blinked and said:

"That's different," but offered no further explanation why this mixing could be different than any other kind.

You leave with the impression that Mr. Hall is a sincere but troubled man at war with his conscience and his religion, yet firmly bound by the web of custom and tradition.

DETERMINED, BUT not the least bit troubled is Fred David Gray, 25, whose law offices are within a stone's throw of the city hall, where sits one Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers.

Mr. Sellers, a chubby politician, tells you that "if it were not for outside agitators, this thing would have been settled long ago."

And then you ask Mr. Gray if he is an "outsider."

HE REPLIES "no," and assures you that he was born and bred in Montgomery.

A 1951 honor graduate of Alabama State College, located in Montgomery, he left to take his law degree on an out-of-state scholarship at Western Reserve University in Ohio only because the state denied citizens of his race an opportunity to attend the University of Alabama.

Mr. Gray, in contrast to the Rev. Mr. King, is a calm, unhurried individual, who lawyer-like, weighs carefully every word he utters.

* * *

OF SLIGHT build, he has the appearance of a college freshman, but behind his glasses I sense the wheels of thought turning, turning.

Sixteen months ago, he took the Alabama bar examination and to his own surprise was allowed to pass.

He opened his office on the second floor of the AME Zion building, two blocks from the city hall.

One of two colored lawyers among Montgomery's 42,000 colored population, he has a steady stream of clients but saves his best legal zeal for civil rights cases.

WHILE THE arrest of a 40-year old seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks on Dec. 5 precipitated the citywide protest, Mr. Gray says it was really the result of years piled upon years of grievances.

The situation really came to a head, he explains, on March 2 when a bus driver caused the arrest of a 15-year old school girl, Claudette Colvin.

Tried in juvenile court, she was fined, but on appeal to the state circuit court, she was given a probationary sentence. Her parents refused to allow a further appeal.

Then on Oct. 15 of last year, a bus driver called police to arrest Mrs. Mary Louise Smith, a passenger in a crowded bus, for refusing to surrender her seat to a white man.

TRIED IN recorder's (police) court, she was fined $9 for violation of the city's segregation law. It was the Smith case, according to Mr. Gray, that stirred angry women passengers to suggest a boycott.

Forming a two-man committee with Charles D. Langford, the city's only colored lawyer, Mr. Gray said they conferred in March with bus officials, in an effort to get a better interpretation of the city's bus segregation law.

The law, as they saw it, he he said, did not require colored persons to give up their seats to late-boarding white passengers. It only required colored passengers to seat from the rear and white passengers from the front.

COUNSEL FOR the bus company was willing to accept this interpretation, but the city administration headed by Mayor W. A. Gayle and Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers refused to concede even this small point.

"Even now," the youthful, but serious-faced lawyer said, "the bus company is willing to grant all of our requests, but the one permitting colored bus drivers but the city officials are opposed to any settlement that might appear had we had won."

Hearing on the appeal of the conviction of Mrs. Rosa Parks, he disclosed, will be held in the Montgomery County Circuit Court on Feb. 22.

IF NECESSARY, he disclosed, it will be appealed all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court and the Montgomery Negro Improvement Association, the organization backing the boycott, has already raised funds for this purpose.

Adding fuel to the running battle the association is having with city officials, Mrs. Gray filed a petition in the U.S. District Court of Middle Alabama Wednesday asking that city officials, particularly Police Commissioner Sellers be enjoined from "molesting and interfering" with volunteer drivers carrying bus boycotters to and from work.

The petition which named not only Sellers, but Mayor Gayle and the third commissioner, Frank L. Parks, charges that police, complying with their instructions, have been intimidating drivers in the motor pool formed to aid domestics and other workers inconvenienced by the boycott.

DRIVERS HAVE been flagged down, asked for their chauffeurs' permits and registration certificates, and even the boycott leader, the Rev. M. L. King was arrested for driving "30 miles in a 25-mile an hour zone" after officers had trailed him for more than 10 blocks.

Counsellor Gray and the Rev. Mr. King are not the only Alabamans who find no love in their hearts for the tactics of Police Commissioner Sellers.

Sharing their lack of admiration for him is his most powerful political enemy, Gov. James Folsom, who bluntly describes him in a three-word highly uncomplimentary expression.

GOVERNOR FOLSOM, a giant of a man, has proved to be an oddity in Southern politics, in that he is a liberal, who doesn't allow his Dixie roots to blur his love of equal justice.

Mr. Sellers dismissed him as a "n— lover," because of the governor's open advocacy of increased voting by colored citizens, who helped put him in office over bitter Dixiecrat opposition.

The governor's reference to the Dixiecrat revival of the doctrine of "interposition" as "hogwash" added to the marked distaste held for the state's chief executive by Commissioner Sellers and his followers.

* * *

CORDIALLY RECEIVING the Rev. Mr. King and four other ministers in the executive suites, Gov. Folsom deplored the outbreak of violence and expressed hope that it would not be necessary for him to call out the National Guard.

"This thing is getting out of hand," he said as he dropped his 6 foot, 6 inch frame in a huge swivel chair tailored to his measure.

"How long do you think it will last?" he asked.

"Until our demands are granted," responded Rev. Mr. King, speaking with no trace of an accent usually expected of a native of Atlanta.

"What we really want to ask of you," he continued, "is protection of the state. We have no confidence in the city police affording us such protection."

THE GOVERNOR, in the midst of a stiff fight to get his program through the legislature, rubbed a large hand over his expressive face in a momentary reflection, then said:

"I'll have two highway patrolmen keep an eye on your house. I'll also get in touch with the sheriff and have him send some deputies over there."

"What we would like to have," persisted Rev. King, a theology graduate of Boston University, "is to have you issue a permit to keep a gun in my car."

"I'll see that you get plenty of protection," evaded the governor, "but you'll have to give me time to work out that gun business with the sheriff."

REV. MR. KING, whose nervous pacing, reveals he has been under a tremendous strain, thanked the governor, who hurried out to greet another delegation.

He returned to his Jackson street residence to find it flooded with light, installed by a member of his Dexter St. Baptist Church congregation, Roscoe Williams, a licensed electrician.

He greeted his lovely wife, Corretta affectionately, asked about his seven-weeks old daughter, Denise Yoland and then retired to his study for a conference with his father, the Rev. M. L. King Sr., who pastors Atlanta's huge Ebenezer Baptist Church.

Dr. King had driven all night to reach Montgomery.

CALLED WHEN a television account of the bombing came on, he reached the room just in time to hear his old adversary, Police Commissioner Sellers announce that the Central Alabama White Citizens Council had just offered a $500 reward for the capture of the unknown dynamiter.

"Now, isn't that one for the books," wryly commented the young pastor.

Commissioner Sellers just a week before had openly announced his affiliation with the Citizens Council, which professes to be dedicated to staging a "legal fight for the maintenance of segregation."

Capital Negroes Claim Bus Drivers 'Abused' Them

Post-Herald
B'ham, Ala.
Thurs. 3-22-56

BY NICHOLAS C. CHRISS
United Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, March 21 — Negroes testified today that white drivers abused "all 50,000" of their race here — including the pregnant and the blind—and for that reason they stopped riding city buses.

Witness after witness testified as to mistreatment by drivers as the defense presented its case in the trial of the Rev. M. L. King, one of 90 Negroes charged with conspiring to boycott the bus line.

Six defense lawyers attempted to show by such testimony that the 15-weeks boycott actually was a spontaneous protest demonstration rather than a calculated scheme to put the transit system on the rocks financially, as the state contends. The state rested this morning.

An Alabama law of 1921 banning such a conspiracy against a business provided the basis for the prosecution in a 100-year-old courtroom where spectators, most of them defendants, broke into applause at one point of the defense testimony.

That was when witness Ella Perkins said none of the city's 50,000 Negro population was spared arrogant treatment from the city bus driver force.

A later witness, Martha Kate Walker, said that once last year she was taking her blind husband, who lost his sight in Germany in an accident after World War II, home on the bus.

As they left the bus, she said, "My husband had his left foot on the ground but his right foot still on the step" when the bus started off suddenly.

"I screamed and a white lady on the bus told the driver to wait a minute but he kept on going," the witness said. She said her husband skinned his ankle in getting clear of the bus. She waited until the driver came around again, she said, and told him about the incident but he told her he didn't know anything about it.

Mrs. Walker said she complained later to the manager of the bus company but never heard anything further from him.

An earlier witness, Pullman Porter Richard S. Jordan, testified that several years ago a bus driver brusquely ordered his pregnant wife to give up her seat to a white passenger.

"I'm a man, and I'm supposed to protect her but I just looked out the window," Jordan said bitterly.

He said the driver called him "boy," and that the common designation for their race by drivers was "boy, girl or nigger."

The defense had indicated earlier it might finish today but a number of witnesses still were to be heard near the end of the third day of the trial. Conviction under the old anti-boycott law carries six months in prison and/or $1000 fine.

Mrs. Perkins testified she stopped riding the buses Dec. 5, the day the boycott is alleged to have started but she did not give a specific reason until Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who will give the verdict in the no-jury trial, pressed her.

Then she said it was because "we were all mistreated on the buses."

"We is 'we all'?" the judge asked.

"All of us, 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery," the woman replied.

When applause broke out Judge Carter warned that if it occurred again "I'll make you all stand and go outside, or take you to jail."

The State rested after two and one-half days of testimony designed to show that the Negroes formed an organization, collected funds and set up motor pools to compete with the public transit system and wreck it economically.

Post-Herald

The first defense witness was hefty Georgia T. Gilmore, 35.

She said she knew "quite a few other" Negroes who had stopped riding the buses before the citywide boycott began.

She said she stopped because of the treatment she received from a driver.

Thurs. 3-22-56

"So I made up my mind I wouldn't ride the buses any more. Now I take a taxi, but if it's warm I walk home."

P. 2

Final State witnesses were Mayor W. A. Gayle and J. H. Bagley, manager of the bus company, who told of reports turned in on the case of Rosa Parks Negro seamstress whose arrest for refusing to move to a rear seat was the spark that touched off the boycott.

Gayle and Bagley said that on predominantly white bus routes 10 seats were reserved for Negroes at the rear and on routes carrying mostly Negroes 10 seats were reserved for whites at the front.

Boycott Trials

Eagle P.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.— The case of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. and 90 Negroes indicted here for boycotting charges, opened Monday. Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who is presiding, threw out the entire testimony of one Negro witness who said his life had been threatened in connection with riding the buses.

Thurs. 3-22-56

State's attorneys attempted to show that Negroes have been threatened for riding busses during the segregation boycott which started Dec. 5. However, only part of the testimony along that line was allowed.

The judge permitted two other Negroes to testify about threats they had received.

Tulsa Okla.

Defense attorneys, at the same time, brought from one prosecution witness a statement that Negro minisers he had heard speak at mass meetings during the boycott had made a point of appealing to their race to shun violence. That witness was Joe Azbell, city editor of the Montgomery Advertiser.

Other witnesses testified on the second day of Rev. King's trial that the Montgomery Improvement association was formed the day the boycott started, arranged the car pool and has paid for gasoline and other expenses. King is president of the Association.

Bus Boycotter Guilty, Long Fight in Prospect

Evening Star Fri. 3-23-56
Washington, D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar. 23 (AP).—Negro bus boycotters are expected to continue their mass protest despite the conviction yesterday of a top leader in the anti-segregation campaign.

Defense attorneys, meanwhile, plan to appeal the conviction of the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., all the way to the United States Supreme Court if necessary in another test of the South's segregation laws.

Mr. King himself, speaking at a mass meeting last night, promised to continue leading the protest movement "no matter how many times they convict me."

The 27-year-old Negro minister was convicted by Circuit Judge Eugene Carter yesterday and fined $500 for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law. He has played a leading role in the 17-week-old campaign against segregated seating on city buses. The fine was suspended after notice of an appeal was made.

Last night the young Babtist pastor vowed to continue fighting for "justice and equality." The Negro crowd that jammed the Holt Street Babtist Church gave him an ovation.

Mr. King, pastor of the Dexter Avenue Babtist Church, told the audience, "Freedom doesn't come on a silver platter. Some of the things we have to go through are a necessary part of our campaign. There can never be growth without growing pains."

In addition to the $500 fine which was suspended, Mr. King was also charged with court costs of approximately $500. This was converted into a jail sentence totaling about 386 days since he chose to appeal rather than pay the money.

Mr. King, together with 89 other Negro leaders still awaiting trial on similar boycott charges, had exercised his right to a non-jury trial.

The conviction was announced by Judge Carter at the end of a four-day trial. Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said the State had agreed to postpone the trials of other defendants pending Mr. King's appeal.

Judge Carter could have sentenced Mr. King to six months and fined him $1,000. But the jurist said he took into consideration testimony which indicated Mr. King repeatedly appealed to his people not to use violence in the bus protest.

The State sought to show that the Montgomery Improvement Association, a newly formed Negro organization, had kept the boycott alive with periodic mass rallies and had directed the operation of a car pool which transported Negroes in lieu of buses. Mr. King is president of the MIA.

Negro defense attorneys challenged the constitutionality of the State law which prohibits a conspiracy or agreement to hinder operations of a business "without just cause or legal excuse."

'Umbrella' suit filed in bus boycott

Afro-American Sat. 2-11- p.1

Baltimore, Md.

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The bus boycott which began nine weeks ago as a "passive resistance" movement, shifted Wednesday into the active area of legal attack.

In what has been described as an "umbrella suit," a petition was filed in U.S. District Court seeking a permanent injunction to halt:

(1) Enforcement of Alabama and city of Montgomery laws requiring racial segregation on buses and other public vehicles;

* * *

(2) A CONSPIRACY between city officials and the bus company to compel colored passengers to resume use of city buses;

(3) Interference by city police with volunteer drivers in car pools created to make the present boycott of buses 99 per cent effective;

(4) Threats of violence, intimidation and arrests and economic reprisals against leaders and participants in the bus boycott by city officials, who have openly acknowledged membership in the local White Citizens Council.

The suit, filed by Fred D. Gray and Charles D. Langford, attorneys, asks the convening of a three - judge court for a "speedy hearing" and the granting of "immediate relief."

NAMED AS plaintiffs were: Aurelia S. Browder, Susie McDonald, Jeanetta Reese, Claudette Colvin and Mary L. Smith, all of whom have been the targets of bus drivers and police during the past several months, and all other colored persons "similarly situated."

Cited as defendants were: The three members of the Montgomery Board of Commissioners, Mayor W. A. Gayle, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, and Commissioner Frank Parks; Chief of Police Goodwyn J. Rippenthal, the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., and its agents, James F. Flake and Robert Cleere.

IN ASKING a declaratory judgment to halt the enforcement of state and city segregation laws, the petitioners charge that the laws stand in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

They also seek to enjoin the city commissioners from carrying out their "conspiracy" to break the bus boycott as acting under "color of law to deprive colored citizens of their rights secured by the 14th Amendment."

Pointing out that colored citizens had formed car pools to relieve their transportation difficulties, the suit accused the commissioners of resorting to threats and intimidation to deprive them of the use of this private transportation.

This is being done, the suit charges, to force colored citizens to resume the use of buses on a segregated basis.

THE CITY officials, according to the complaint, not only have brought pressure on volunteer drivers; they have publicly announced over radio and television that they were members of the Central Alabama White Citizens Council.

The council, it is explained, is dedicated to the maintenance of segregation in public schools, and other public places.

* * *

THE SUIT complains that police, upon instructions of the commissioners, have stopped drivers and questioned them in detail about where they obtain their gasoline, how long they have been hauling passengers, where they work.

They have arrested and prosecuted them for minor violations of laws that are not being enforced against white persons, it charges.

Violence Flares In Bus Boycott

Defender

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(INS)—A second explosion within a week has been set off at Montgomery where a bus-segregation row has raised tensions increasingly since last November.

p.1 Chicago Def.

Police said the blast, apparently dynamite, was touched off during the night in the yard of former NAACP leader C. D. Nixon, a Pullman porter.

Sat. 2-11-56

Nixon was not at home, and no one was hurt. The explosion damaged a fence in front of the home.

Earlier an explosion rocked the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Baptist minister who has led a boycott of city buses by Negroes protesting "Jim Crow" seating regulations.

Mrs. Nixon and a neighbor's child were in the home when the explosive was tossed on the front lawn Thursday. Nixon was reported to be in Chicago.

An orderly crowd of about 200 Negroes gathered while police investigated. State toxicologist Van Pruitt, jr., described the explosive as being "very mild."

Nixon, former state president of the NAACP, has been prominent in the bus boycott. He appeared in court when Mrs. Rosa Parks was charged with violating segregation laws pertaining to bus seating.

It was that case whicht ouched off the boycott.

A group of five Negroes brought suit in Federal district court asking that Montgomery city laws and Alabama state laws concerning racial segregation in public transportation be declared unconstitutional.

2nd home bombed in Alabama

Afro-American Sat. 2-11-56 p.1

Baltimore, Md.

By CLIFF MACKAY
Editor, AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The home of the man who put the Alabama Democratic Committee on the spot last fall became the second target of a stepped-up campaign of terror in this capital of the Old Confederacy, Wednesday night.

An explosive, described by police as relatively mild, was tossed at the residence of E. D. Nixon, former State NAACP president, shortly after 9 p.m.

It was the second bombing in three days. A stick of dynamite shattered the windows of the home of the Rev. M. L. King, leader of the bus boycott, Monday night.

THE BOMBING outbreak was believed to have been spurred by the public announcement of a "get tough" policy with the bus boycotters, made Sunday by Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers, an acknowledged officer of the Central Alabama White Citizens Councils.

The Wednesday night bombing damaged only the white picket fence which surrounds Mr. Nixon's home. Two slats were splintered. No windows were broken.

Mr. Nixon, a Pullman porter, was away on his regular run to Chicago.

HE MADE the headlines last November when his check for $25 was returned by the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee after he sought to attend a Jackson-Jefferson Day dinner.

Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams, who was scheduled to address the dinner, refused to appear after he was told about the committee's action.

Nixon had remained in the background in the bus fight, although the boycott has his support.

He is also president of the Montgomery Progressive Democratic Club.

South Eyes Negro Bus Boycott, A 70-Day Success in Montgomery

Herald Tribune New York
Mon. 2-13-56

By Robert S. Bird

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 12.—Nothing could better illustrate the temper of the Negroes of the Deep South than the boycott of city buses which Montgomery's 42,000 Negroes are carrying into the third month with almost perfect success.

Today this Herald Tribune reported visited a Negro church service to get the Negro side of the boycott story. The visit was a circumstance that roused curiosity of the police department enough to send a couple of plainsclothesmen around to "check up and see whether there was any trouble." There wasn't any.

At the beginning of the boycott seventy days ago neither Negroes nor whites expected the showdown to last three days. Today neither side sees any solution in sight, so rigidly have the lines been drawn. The longer the boycott lasts, the more jittery the whites get. And, naturally, the more satisfied the Negroes feel.

In the narrow sense, the issue is over the removal of the imaginary line which arbitrarily segregates Negro seats in the rear of all city buses. The Negroes want a flexible seating arrangement under which segregation itself would be flexible in principle. Actually, the larger issue is a deep-rooted Negro resentment against deep-rooted Southern white customs.

Throughout the South the organized Negro defiance expressed in the boycott in this birthplace of the Confederacy is viewed as gravely dangerous—dangerous to the "Southern way of life" if the whites yield, dangerous perhaps to physical life if the stalemate continues.

Detectives at Church

This reporter went to the service at the eighty-eight-year-old First Colored Baptist Church at Ripley and Columbus Streets, where the pastor is one of the leaders of the boycott. By coincidence, the two plainclothes police detectives came to the church ten minutes later. Presumably the taxi driver, who was unusually non-talkative on the ride over, had used his two-way radio after dropping off the reporter.

In order to understand the Negro side of the story, it is necessary first to realize the bewilderment expressed by the white side over Negro motivation for this boycott. Most of the white leaders simply cannot understand how the boycott ever got rolling and why it has not long ago been settled. They regard it as altogether too simple to explain the matter on the basis of the Supreme Court school integration decision and the resulting ferment at work among the Negroes.

In refusing to accept this view, they point to the fact that up to a year ago race relations in Montgomery were as harmonious as anywhere in the South if not more so. They cite as proof such good works as the $10,000,000 worth of new Negro housing built in the last five years, the pending $2,000,000 bill to finance new Negro parks and recreational facilities, admission of a Negro ballplayer to the city baseball team, and many more concrete showings of good will offered by the white community to the Montgomery Negroes in the recent past.

Pastor Gives the Answer

But the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, the twenty-nine-year-old pastor, gave the answer in the interview. Twelve of his deacons and other church officials sat in with us, gravely nodding their heads in acquiescence to his remarks.

Mr. Abernathy, it should be explained, is an example of the new generation of young Negro leadership in the South. He was educated in Negro colleges here and in Atlanta, served in the European theater in World War II, and is dedicated to helping his people express their aspirations.

A solidly built and soft-spoken man, he is quite willing to risk the dynamite bombs which have been thrown at the homes of two of his co-leaders since the boycott began.

"I can understand how the Southern white man has a real problem," he said with slow seriousness, sitting at his desk down in the basement of the shabby old brick church.

Explains Movement

"Never before has the Negro faced the white man as a man, demanding of him that he do something. The white man just doesn't understand this movement. He thinks we went off the buses here in Montgomery because of a few petty grievances, and that we ought to be ready now to go right back on the buses.

"He feels that outsiders—agitators—are behind this boycott. He doesn't know that this flows from the hearts of every one of the nearly 50,000 Negroes of Montgomery. If any one stepped out right now and said, 'Go back to those buses,' brother, he would be on dangerous grounds—unless conditions are improved. If I, or any of the leaders of this movement, were removed from it, I guarantee it would go right on until conditions are improved."

Getting to the heart of the misunderstanding between the Negroes and the white citizens of Montgomery, Mr. Abernathy pinpointed it this way:

"It is perfectly true that the race relations had been harmonious in Montgomery up to about a year ago. Then an incident happened on the buses, and later more incidents began to occur.

"But what they don't understand is that this peace was bought at a high price as far as the Negroes are concerned. You can always have peace if you want to pay the price. The conditions we want improved go far, far back."

Negroes' Three Points

The pastor stated these three points as the Negroes' price for settling the boycott;

"First," he said, "we want more courteous treatment from the drivers.

"Second, we want the seating arrangement in buses to be on a first come, first served basis—meaning that Negro passengers would start filling seats from the back toward the front, and white passengers would fill seats from the front toward the back.

"Third, we want Negro drivers on the buses which travel the predominately Negro routes."

Support Grows For Bus Boycott

Post & Times Herald P. 8
Mon. 2-27-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb 26 (AP)—A leader in the Negro boycott of Montgomery buses said from the pulpit today that his people would see the boycott "to the finish." Across the Nation Negroes echoed their support.

Washington D.C.

The Rev. Martin Luther King asked the members of his Baptist church not to get weary of the hardships brought about by the 12-week boycott of Montgomery city buses and told them "no goal was ever attained without sacrifice."

The 27-year-old Negro minister, president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, which has backed the boycott, said "even if the boycott ended now, the Negro in Montgomery has achieved a new dignity. But we will not stop now, we will see it to a finish."

Nearly 500 Negroes in the small Dexter Avenue Baptist Church heard King promise that "the prejudiced mind in Montgomery and America can become a kind and loving mind."

Meanwhile, in New York, the first steps were taken toward the organization of an hour-long nation-wide work stoppage in sympathy with the Montgomery Negroes.

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr., Negro Democratic member of Congress and a minister, met at his Harlem church with Negro union officials to plan a March 28 "Deliverance Day" demonstration that will call for a one-hour work stoppage by both whites and Negroes across the Nation.

However, the president of the Oklahoma Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he does not favor the idea.

Jimmy Stewart of Oklahoma City said special prayers and collections were being made for the Montgomery Negroes in 50 churches around the state.

Arkansas Governor For Assignment Plan

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 25 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus said today he supports those who seek to prevent "sudden and immediate" racial integration of Arkansas' public schools.

A pupil assignment plan, whereby school authorities would have the power to assign students and teachers to a particular school, "looks like the best possible plan for Arkansas," Faubus said at a press conference.

Grand Jury To Examine Bus Protest

Daily World
Tues. 2-14-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Circuit Court Judge Eugene Carter impaneled a Bullock County Grand Jury composed of 17 white men and one Negro Monday and instructed them to determine whether or not the three-month-old bus boycott in Montgomery was legal.

Atlanta, Ga.

The protest was started after a Negro woman was jailed and fined for refusing to get up to give her seat on the bus to a white man. Since that time, all efforts of Negro leaders to effect an understanding with the City of Montgomery and the bus company have been rebuffed.

P. 1

The protest leaders, headed by Rev. M. L. King, Jr., asked that bus service be administered "fairly" and that seating be done of a "first-come, first-served" basis.

"GET TOUGH POLICY"

In return, the mayor refused and ordered a "get tough" policy with the boycotters who were either walking or riding in a car pool supplied by the protest movement.

Rev. King's home was bombed and no arrests were made.

Although Judge Carter told the jury that it was to determine the legal status of the boycott and that "No court, whether it be federal court, state court or city court, can interfere with your investigation," he also instructed them that: "The essential idea of boycotting ..... is a confederation, generally secret, of many persons whose intent is to injure another by preventing any and all persons from doing business with him through fear of incurring the displeasure, persecution and vengeance of the conspirators.

The one Negro member of the jury is E. T. Sinclair who gave his occupation as Waiter.

NEGRO WAITER ON PANEL

Memphis, Tenn.

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 13. — Circuit Judge Eugene Carter charged a grand jury Monday to determine whether Negroes who are boycotting Montgomery City Lines buses are violating the law.

One Negro, E. T. Sinclair, a waiter, was among the 18 members of the Montgomery County Grand Jury who began their work after Judge Carter concluded his instructions.

P. 27

City No Place For Hate

Declaring "the doctrine of hate has no place here," the judge told the jurors that "a person's business is property and, if lawfully conducted, is entitled to protection from unlawful interference."

Negroes have boycotted Montgomery City Lines buses since Dec. 5, the day a Negro woman, Rosa Parks, was fined $14 in City Court for refusing to move to the Negro section of a bus.

State and city laws require segregation in public transportation. Since the boycott began, however, a suit has been filed in United States District Court seeking to have those laws declared unconstitutional. No hearing has been set.

Circuit Solicitor W. F. Thetford said anyone taking part in a conspiracy to boycott the bus lines could be indicted under a state law which makes boycotting punishable by six months in jail and a $500 fine.

Code Sets Out Violation

Section 53 of Title 14 of the Alabama Code of 1940 says:

"Two or more persons who, without a just cause or legal excuse for so doing, enter into any combination, conspiracy, agreement, arrangement or understanding for the purpose of hindering, delaying or preventing any other persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons from carrying on any lawful business shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

Even if the grand jury finds the boycott illegal, however, Solicitor Thetford said, the city or state can do nothing to compel Negroes to ride buses again. But he said the jury could indict boycott leaders if there is evidence of unlawful acts.

Judge Carter told the jurors Montgomery "has been a city that both races have had pleasure living in. I say to both black and white, let's continue to live as neighbors."

Bus Seating Offer Gets Negro Veto

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Tues. 2-21-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 20 (AP)—On the eve of a grand jury report that may bring indictments against many, Negro leaders tonight rejected a compromise plan for ending the racial bus boycott here.

P. 32

Terms agreed to this morning by the Montgomery City Commission and the boycott-plagued bus company were turned down flatly by Negroes at a mass meeting called to consider the compromise.

GIVES VOTE

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, chairman of the negotiating committee and pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church, gave the vote against accepting the proposal at 3,998 to 2.

The grand jury has been investigating the mass protest against segregation and is expected to make a final report tomorrow. Indictments are expected against some of the Negroes who have participated in the wholesale refusal to ride Montgomery City Lines buses.

SEAT OFFER

The seating arrangement offered in the compromise was similar to the plan rejected by boycott leaders in previous attempts to end the boycott.

Drawn up "within the framework of existing (segregation) laws," it called for the first 10 seats in the front of buses to be reserved for white persons and the last 10 seats for Negroes. Remaining seats in the center would be occupied from the front to the rear by whites and from the rear toward the front by Negroes.

Bus Boycott Rumored Beginning To Break Up

Grand Jury Nears End Of Massive Investigation Of Negro Protest Movement

Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 20 (AP)—Reports of a break in the 11-week-old Negro bus boycott persisted today as a grand jury neared completion of its investigation of the mass protest against segregation.

The grand jury was expected to make a final report by tomorrow, and may indict some of the Negroes who have participated in wholesale refusal to ride Montgomery City Lines buses.

Several men who have been prominently identified with efforts to settle the boycott conferred in the office of Mayor W. A. Gayle this morning, but declined to comment afterward.

They included all three members of the City Commission, representatives of the bus company and spokesmen for the Men of Montgomery, a civic organization which has volunteered to act as mediator in the lengthening dispute.

A mass meeting of Negroes was scheduled tonight at a Negro church.

Two city detectives disclosed meanwhile that they have been assigned to the circuit solicitor's office for several weeks investigating the boycott. Detectives K. W. Jones and Jack D. Shows were among the scores of witnesses interviewed by the grand jury in the past week.

But they were prohibited by law from disclosing their testimony.

The grand jury which has already indicted one boycott spokesman, Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray, may return other true bills charging violation of Alabama's rarely used anti-boycott law.

Gray was charged with unlawful practice because of a suit he filed in U. S. District Court seeking to throw out city and state laws requiring racial segregation in all public transportation. The suit was an outgrowth of the boycott.

The attorney's indictment was based on the statement of Mrs. Jeanetta Reese, one of the five Negro women whose names were signed to the court petition.

Mrs. Reese told Mayor Gayle in the presence of two newspaper reporters that she didn't know what she was signing.

Gray was charged with filing the suit in Mrs. Reese's name without her consent, an offense punishable in Alabama by a $500 fine and suspension from practice.

The boycott began Dec. 5, after a Negro woman, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was arrested and fined $14 for refusing to move to the colored section of a bus.

Since then, an estimated 75 per cent of the Negroes who normally used the buses for transportation have refused to ride them. Some have used taxicabs to get to and from work; others have depended on a highly organized car pool operating with military precision.

'Not Afraid,' Bus Boycotters Hear Leaders Declare

Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 27. (AP)—Negro ministers leading the racial boycott against city buses Monday night told their shouting followers that "We are no longer afraid no matter what the enemy might do.

But they emphasized again, as they did last Thursday night, that the 12-week-old protest against segregated buses must remain a "passive resistance" campaign.

Said the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.:

"Anything that looks like violence will defeat our purpose."

King himself was the target of violence earlier in the boycott when a dynamite blast damaged his home but caused no injuries. Since then King and 23 other Negro ministers have been indicted by a grand jury for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law.

The Rev. E. N. French, another of the indicted clergymen, told the crowd that jammed the Holt Street Bapust Church that "We are not afraid."

Negro Leaders May Bring End To Bus Boycott

Post-Herald
Wed. 2-8-56

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 7 (U.P.)—Negro leaders in a boycott of city buses have scheduled a meeting here tomorrow which could lead to an end of the 2-month-old demonstration.

The Rev. M. L. King, a Negro leader and president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., said the matter of ending the boycott would be presented to the association tomorrow.

Birmingham, Ala.

However, he added "I really couldn't say yet whether or not we will start riding the buses. It will depend upon tomorrow's meeting and the action taken on any recommendation the board might take."

The improvement association was the principal organizer of the "protest movement," which began over seating arrangements on city buses.

King said the association's action, one way or another, would be in the form of a recommendation to Negroes at large.

He said if an end to the boycott is recommended that it would be presented to the next mass meeting of the Negroes.

The youthful minister said the position of the boycotters had been "changed" somewhat by the filing of a suit in federal court to declare state and city segregation laws unconstitutional.

He said "We are now depending on the courts to give the final answer."

The Rev. M. L. King denied going 30 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone. The Baptist minister was fingerprinted and held in jail about 15 minutes before being released on his own recognizance pending a hearing tomorrow in police court.

Mayor W. A. Gayle announced Monday that the city commission is through "pussy-footing" around with boycott leaders. Negroes have refused to ride buses here since Dec. 5 in protest against the seating arrangement required on buses by segregation laws.

Chief of Police G. J. Ruppenthal said Mr. King's arrest had nothing to do with the bus boycott.

Negroes in Bus Boycott Face Loss of Jobs

New York

By the United Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25.—City Commissioner Frank Park said he received six telephone calls today from businessmen "offering to lay off" Negro employees connected with the boycott of city buses.

He said he received "35 or 40" similar calls yesterday.

"I received a call from a businessman today who said he has a Negro whom he has employed for 29 years but would lay off if necessary to help end this boycott," Mr. Park said.

"I told him I would not suggest discharging the Negro unless he is directly connected with the boycott or is a tool of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People."

Mayor W. A. Gayle announced yesterday the city had "pussyfooted around" long enough and would make no further effort to end the boycott which has left some bus routes riderless since Dec. 6.

Almost immediately, Mr. Park said, the city commission was swamped by telephone calls from local businessmen congratulating city officials and reporting plans to "lay off" Negroes taking part in the boycott.

Wed. 1-25-56

The boycott followed the arrest and $10 fine of a Negro seamstress for refusing to move to the rear of a bus.

Negroes Will Walk Until Demands Met

Commercial Appeal 1-29-56

Houston Tex.

BY CHARLES H. LOEB
NNPA Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala — What happens now?

Now that the Rev Martin Luther King, Jr, titular head of the crippling boycott against this city's segregated bus lines has been found guilty of leading an illegal conspiracy, what does Negro Montgomery intend to do?

Some 2000 persons who got into the Thursday night mass meeting in Holt Street Batist Church..and an estimated 1000 who stood around outside and heard the proceedings over loud speakers say the boycott will continue.."until our demands are met." .. They shouted it out aloud to the young minister who had "stood trial in our places" hours earlier in Montgomery Circuit Court, and who had just promised them that the "protest will continue no matter how many times they convict me."

Earlier he had told this reporter and a battery of microphones in front of television cameras that Negroes of Montgomery believed that their cause was right, their protest legal, and that the U. S. Supreme Court would reverse the Circuit Court conviction.

King, and others prominent in the movement's leadership, told the assemblage that the same program of avoiding any show of violence would be continued.

And money from over the nation continues to flow into the "war chest" of the Montgomery Improvement Association. Outstanding among the many contributions received Thursday night was $4503.55 from a group of 38 churches in the Detroit area. Rev Jessie J McNeal of the Baptist Ministers Conference of Detroit made the presentation and introduced members.

Rev W J Davis of Philadelphia brought a check for $1000 from churches in Philadelphia, and said that the same group had sent $900 previously through the mails. Other contributions, smaller, but numerous, and each hailed with shouts of appreciation,, "Thank you Jesus," were called out to the audience. Then the little people of Montgomery, some having come to the scheduled 8 o'clock meeting as early as 5:30 p.m. in order to get a seat, marched up in single file to make their weekly "freewill offering." This was their way of "sweetening the kitty" to repay the car pool for free transportation given them during the week.

There was no unit of payment that could be detected each contributor perhaps estimating the cost of his transportation in terms of bus fare, and probably adding a little to it each week.

If there was any outstanding impression for the "outsiders" attending it was the feeling that these common people were registering a great and unaccustomed pride in being identified "with the Negro race."

Courtroom observers had seen and heard it too. As the trial ground on they sat as spectators to watch themselves on trial. Hair was well-groomed, apparel selected with an eye to crease and cleanliness, and backs were straight and heads up.

To write into the written transcript the color of the defense witnesses, each was asked while testifying "are you a member of the Negro race?"

Sun. 3-31-56

Almost without exception, the witnesses head jerked proudly up, a humorous glint lashed into the eyes, and the inevitable answer came.

"I am" There was pride in the acknowledgement..a new sense of real importance.the real strength of unity..the feeling of belonging to something worthwhile.

The old sense of apology, frustation, and a great deal of the "inferiority complex" so long ingrained, was rubbing off.

Strangely there was no exhortation to continue the boycott. It was not necessary. The people themselves had served notice on Montgomery. They had done it, not with speeches that might be twisted and used in evidence by an unfriendly court. Not in boastings of courage and bravery. Not in open defiance, but with a weapon that, since 1865, the Negro of the South has used to keep alive his "secret conspiracy" to gain full freedom.

Here it was. Right in front of the faces of white Monegomery. Not the method of communication between leaders and the people, but between the people and the leaders, Now it becomes clear why the two detectives used by the solicitors to spy on the mass meetings, to check cars of pool drivers for inflammatory literature, and to "shadow" Rev. King, had failed to find any tangible evidence to give a perplexed prosecution.

Who said let's stay off the buses? Mrs Gladys Moore, defense witness, member of the Negro race, had given the answer under oath. 50,000 Montgomery Negroes.

They hadn't believed it, but it was true.

Rev King had testified that the people had decided they were tired of being kicked around and that the Negro ministers of the city, sensing their anger and resentment and the dangerous consequences had stepped in to literally keep the lid on the simmering pot that might, at any time, come to a boil and spill over.

"The people talk," Rev R D Abernathy confided to this reporter, and the Montgomery Improvement Association is carrying out their orders. At the mass meeting there was evidence to support this unprecedented state of affairs. The people were voting their resolution though no ballots were being cast.

Like their ancestors before them they were expressing their hopes, their tribulations, and their future course of action in the well known code of the race at the crossroads.

"Like A tree standing by the water..I shall not be moved."

Political Counter-Boycott

Editor, The Advertiser:

Since the Democratic Party has banned everyone who voted for Eisenhower from participating in the coming Democratic primary as a candidate, I propose that we who voted for Mr. Eisenhower withhold our votes and support from any candidate in the primary, and let them know in no uncertain terms as to why.

I think that if this could be done as an organized effort that the Democratic Party would realize that they were losing some good Democratic support and would think twice before making any such high-handed and dictatorial oath as they did this year.

To me it is as if the Democratic Party is their (the committee's) own little clique and they can bar whomever they please. And any Democratic candidate who will offer himself for election this year will, in effect, be a party to this outrageous act. R. L. M.

Arrogant Entrance

Editor, The Advertiser:

Having heard some statements from persons who were at the University of Alabama Friday before the trouble on the following Monday, and, since I have read no such facts in the newspapers, I would like to ascertain if these statements are false or true.

First, on the Friday morning mentioned, it has been said that a large number of students and workers on their way to classes and jobs were held in a traffic jam adjacent to the University campus. The traffic line increased. Horns were tooted and people bent upon getting on their way shouted to know why they were being detained. Finally, a man ran up to the front of the jam where he found a new, high-class car blocking traffic. In the car sat two or three richly dressed Negro men and a Negro woman. When the man inquired why they didn't move on, he was told by one of the Negro men that Miss Lucy was entering the University that morning and that they were waiting for a police escort to take her on the campus.

Second, when the police arrived, the traffic had continued to pile up and the stranded students and workers were dealt with by the police as if they were a mob trying to interfere with Miss Lucy's entrance to the campus.

Third, when Miss Lucy reached the building in which her classes were to assemble, she elbowed her way through the crowded corridors and upon entering the classroom arrogantly walked to the front row and took a place in the middle of it.

Jesus said: "When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honorable man than thou be bidden of him;

"And he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room. But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, friend, go up higher; then thou shalt have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee."

Too Many Legislators Already

Editor, The Advertiser:

Are you going to vote in November for the amendment to increase the lawmaking body? I am not.

The governor was going to pay the old folks more money. Now we need more schools and more teachers and more money for teachers.

He seems to think that the more lawmakers he has, the more special sessions he has, the higher the rate of pay for the lawmakers, and the more buildings he builds, the more money he will have to do the other things with. He thinks it's like "Cracker Jack"—the more you eat the more you want. The more you spend at and around the Capitol, the more you will have to spend elsewhere. It doesn't work that way.

I'd like to vote for an amendment to reduce the present number of legislators by at least half. We have too many and they accomplish too little. Why add to the confusion and throw away more money? I'm voting against it.

Proposal From A Negro Minister

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — What the world needs most now is prayer. The Lord says men ought to always pray and not faint.

Fri. 2-17-56

I have been praying earnestly to the Lord since Christmas morning.

I woke up Christmas morning early, feeling the presence of God all around me, but over our city a grim shadow of discontentment settled on the streets because no sound of a city bus was heard anywhere. I promised God that I would go on a 9-day fast and prayer and used for a sign of that fast two crosses, one a black cross which I am wearing around my neck, the other a white cross which I am wearing on my left sleeve.

Some may ask why am I wearing black and white crosses. The answer should be obvious: I have two brothers, a Negro and a white brother. It seems that I am not getting very far with my praying, but I am not going to quit.

The one thing I hate more than anything else is what our good mayor and commissioner said and did in adopting a get-tough policy and virtually cut out all means of reconciliation. One other is almost as bad and that is the talk of bringing a grand jury into the matter.

All the Negroes in Montgomery are walking their feet off, swallowing the gall of harsh criticism, and dodging police apprehensions. If the city of Montgomery is to keep the faith of its colored citizens, it must show patience and kindness while dealing with their problems. I think I know my people very well, and I am sure that the Negroes in Montgomery did not start out trying to disobey any of the laws of the city, but rather they feel that they have not been given justice in some of the court decisions. Now if the courts go ahead and add to the fire that is already burning, then there will be no peace in sight.

I am asking for one more conference between the city and the Negro leaders and this time I want to be invited to attend. I want us to meet this time inviting our elder brother to be present and I will assure everybody that there will be agreements reached. The reason I want to be there because I want to lead the prayer services and want everybody to come praying for peace.

We the citizens of the United States of America must at this point of our lives use much caution and discretion as to what we say and do. The law is not always the best thing for us to resort to when something goes wrong for the devil is the best lawyer in all the world. The law is his strongest weapon.

I feel that there would be more good done at Tuscaloosa if the law would turn those young Negro youths to the church instead of to the courts. They should be made to go to the church and get on their knees and pray until God has forgiven them and then go to that fine young white man and beg him for forgiveness. I believe that white boy would do that. If I knew his address I would write him to this effect.

May I appeal to my race not ever to resort to such foolish tactics at any time. We cannot beat and kick our way into good civilization. It must be done by improving ourselves and strive to make ourselves acceptable in the sight of others. If the city and Negro leaders decide to do what I am asking, I would be glad if it could be arranged on a Moday for I am only in the city on Mondays.

Montgomery, Ala.

Enclosed you will find a dollar bill. Please pass this on to the Montgomery City Bus Lines. I am starting a crusade in Georgia and South Carolina, the territory that I travel. The crusade is to be "Bucks For Bus Lines And The Protection Of The White Race." I intend to send them a buck each week to try to "whip," or at least help out on the situation over there.

If enough people in the South could hear of my plan, I'm sure the Bucks will pour in so fast that your colored preachers there will be forced to "call the dogs." When a Negro realizes that he can't hurt them any more, he will be glad to start riding.

More power to you good people in Montgomery and please get the news of this movement on the wires.

Entering Wedge

Editor, The Advertiser:

Is it to be understood that our U.S. Supreme Court expects us to forego all of our state and police regulations because they might abridge the privileges and immunities of some citizen? This court decision, if the current interpretation of the 14th Amendment strikes down all state and city regulations governing the sale of liquor, gambling, age of voting, intermarriage of races, divorce, regulations as to Sunday operation of business, as well as the regulation of schools. Are we ready to be stripped of our rights to say what and how we may enjoy the privileges of living?

This recent decision is only an entering wedge to break down every regulation of our police laws. Have the majority of our states, white and black, no inviolate privileges? The 14th Amendment was passed at bayonet point, and never before has been so construed. Let there be no violence, but let our legislature and Congress clarify the matter.

I would like to say if I want my picture made I know where to find a studio, and if I want dancing lessons I know where to find that too. If I wanted any more hospital insurance I know where to find that too. I am sick and tired of phone calls.

This Is Y

P. 2-B

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — The present campaign of the YMCA to enlarge its usefulness, merits the consideration of everyone of our citizens.

Here's why I say so. As a teenager, I left a small town at the turn of the century to accept a job in Montgomery. Met another young man before coming here by the name of Tom Martin, now head of Alabama Power Company. As I window-shopped one night (and that's all on $30 a month), Tom Martin came along and invited me to go as a guest to the "Y," then located upstairs about where the Alabama National Bank stands.

Montgomery

Immediately I joined and almost lived in the gymnasium. There I became acquainted with other young fellows, several of whom are now among my best friends. One invited me to the First Baptist Church Sunday School which later became my church home. The church was located then on Madison Avenue. I feel that I could have gone in most any direction at the time; but I know that the visit to the "Y" that night, over 50 years ago, and my associations with it was an influence for good in my life.

Ala.

I recall one night that a speaker before a group of boys described the "Y" something like this: "A purifying stream flowing through our community and effecting the lives of our youth."

Later, as a member of the "Y" Board, I know it managed well on skimpy funds with administrative personnel who sacrificed on low pay because they loved it. More than 2,000 Lion's Club boy proteges, who enjoyed membership and went on camps under the supervision of "Y" during the last 25 years, had a valuable contact. So many a man today can rise up in gratitude and call the name of the Montgomery YMCA "blessed."

No one will regret helping it carry out its plans to better help our youthpower develop into the kind of citizenship which means to our nation's safety. We buy insurance and in other material ways endeavor to make secure the future of our loved ones; but without building up moral and cultural values, all might not be well.

Yes, let's all have a part in making this campaign a success.

I was reading today that our esteemed governor had finally taken a stand, however puny, regarding the segregation issue.

Could it be that he is waking up finally to the fact that communistic agitators from without the borders of our beloved state and our beloved South are on the threshold of destroying the civilization and harmony between the peoples that go to make up the population here?

Or could it be that he realizes he is politically doomed should he continue to take the jellyfish stand he has taken.

Two News Stories

Editor, The Advertiser:

The incident that happened at the university when two Negro men assaulted a teen-age student was a cowardly act and certainly will not be overlooked by the students. Miss Lucy was not atacked, or assaulted even though the Northern papers and the Eastern papers said she came very near being. It seems that they know a great deal more about what happened than we do. They vastly exaggerated what actually happened, as usual. I am wondering if they will give the incident yesterday as much publicity as they did Miss Lucy. In all probability it will be entirely ignored.

Bus Boycott Group Denies Charge Of Misusing Funds

Wed. 6-13-56 P. 1

Montgomery

A flat denial that funds for transportation of Negroes who are boycotting Montgomery buses are being misappropriated was issued yesterday by the Montgomery Improvement Assn.

Ala.

The MIA, organized to coordinate the boycott when it began six months ago, issued the denial in reply to charges by the Rev. U. J. Fields, who resigned as MIA recording secretary.

Files said Monday boycott leaders have put personal interests before the protest movement and money being contributed across the country to sustain the protest is being used "for selfish purposes."

Dr. Moses W. Jones, second vice president of the MIA, issued a statement calling Fields' charges "deeply regrettable." He said they were "simply another attack designed to hinder our protest movement."

"No money received by this association has been misappropriated," the statement said. "The president, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., has always insisted upon honesty, that all funds received be duly acknowledged and that a bi-monthly financial statement be made to the board of directors."

King was out of town yesterday.

Alabama Boycott

The Washington Evening Star

The strategy adopted by the authorities in Montgomery, Alabama, in an attempt to break a Negro boycott of a busline is almost beyond belief.

This boycott, started in protest against Montgomery's bus segregation arrangement, began on Dec. 5. It has been extremely successful, with nearly 42,000 Negroes finding other means of getting to and from their destinations. As a result, 115 Negro leaders now have been indicted under an antiunion law, adopted in 1921, which makes it a misdemeanor to conspire or agree "to interfere with or hinder business."

It is hard to believe that this is happening in 1956, and we suppose that the indictments, if the Negroes should be convicted, will ultimately be thrown out by the courts. Meanwhile, however, the spectacle remains — the spectacle of white people, who are staunchly opposed to integrated schools, attempting to compel Negroes to patronize segregated buses. And this in the face of the fact that the Negroes, surprisingly enough, are willing to accept a modified system of bus segregation—a first-come, first-served plan under which whites would start seating from the front and Negroes from the rear.

The Montgomery grand jurors, speaking through the indictment, said this: "It is the feeling of this grand jury that if we continue on our present course of race relations, violence is inevitable. The leaders of both races are urged to take a long and thoughtful look into the future." This is a remarkable expression to come from a grand jury which seems to think that Negroes can be compelled to patronize segregated buses. And it is even more remarkable, perhaps, for what it implies, but does not explicitly state.

The implication is, or seems to be, that reason and sense of fair play are being destroyed in Montgomery by rising racial feeling. If this is correct, it is indeed time for the leaders of both races, and, in this instance, especially for the leaders of the white race, to take a long and thoughtful look into the future.

Frustration And Folly

The Washington Post

The municipal authorities of Montgomery, Ala., chose Washington's birthday—they might even more appropriately have chosen Lincoln's birthday—to ease their sense of frustration with a monumental display of folly. Their sense of frustration is easy to understand. Negroes in Montgomery have refused over the past 11 weeks to ride in buses where they were humiliated by segregation and by frequent discourtesy on the part of bus drivers. The effect of their refusal has been serious from the point of view of the bus line's economic status—and serious also from the point of view of a white community determined to perpetuate a pattern of race relations which gradually is being swept aside by the logic of justice and the force of economic change.

"Distrust, dislike and hatred are being taught in a community which for more than a generation has enjoyed exemplary race relations," declared a grand jury which indicted the leaders of what it called an illegal "boycott" of the bus line. That the prevailing pattern of race relations should have seemed "exemplary" to some white people of Montgomery is readily understandable. But these white people would have to be singularly obtuse to believe that the colored members of the community also consider it "exemplary." In point of fact, of course, Negroes submitted to it perforce; and now that they are economically able to do so they are protesting against it.

The frustrating thing about this Negro protest from the white point of view in Montgomery is that it is impeccably lawful, orderly, dignified—and effective. It strikes at an important pocketbook nerve of the community. In an effort to stop it, a grand jury has indicted 115 persons for violating an old state law against organized, illegal boycotting. Included in this number are 10 respected ministers of the gospel and a great many persons guilty of nothing more than driving their neighbors to work in a car pool. The boycott, if it is one, is unlikely to be broken by such tactics.

Negroes, like white persons, have an indubitable right to travel as they please—afoot or by bicycle or by car or by bus. There is really no way to force them to patronize a bus line; and there appears to be no way, at least in Montgomery, to operate a bus line profitably without their patronage. Coercion in this situation can produce only "distrust, dislike and hatred" at home while making Montgomery look ludicrous if not worse abroad. The inescapable road to "exemplary race relations" seems to lie in according Negroes the equitable, courteous treatment they now have the strength as well as the right to demand.

Effect stayed until appeal

News Tues. 6-5-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 5—Segregation on Montgomery buses was ruled unconstitutional today in a split decision by a Federal Court panel of judges.

The ruling, filed in Federal Court here this morning, is not effective immediately. Parties were given two weeks to submit to the court in writing their views on the form of judgment to be entered and on whether such a judgment should be stayed pending appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Since no injunction, as requested by Negroes who filed the suit in Federal Court, was issued today, it couldn't be determined immediately whether the court's formal order will apply only to the city of Montgomery or whether it will go beyond that.

The three-judge panel was convened May 11 to hear a request for an injunction against the laws that brought on Montgomery's bus boycott by Negroes. The suit also asked a declaratory judgment holding the statutes unconstitutional.

Majority opinion was handed down by Judge Richard T. Rives of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans and Judge Frank M. Johnson of the U. S. District Court in Montgomery.

The third judge, Seybourn H. Lynne of the U. S. District Court in Birmingham, dissented.

THE MAJORITY opinion declared that Montgomery bus segregation ordinances "violate the due process and equal protection of the law clauses of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The two judges also said that the "separate but equal" doctrine set forth in U. S. Supreme Court's 1896 ruling in the intrastate transportation case of Plessy V. Ferguson could no longer be applied in similar cases.

The judges cited as a reason the recent South Carolina bus segregation case which they said overthrew the separate but equal doctrine.

Referring to the South Carolina case, which the U. S. Supreme Court sent back to the lower courts, the two judges said "there is now no rational basis upon which the separate but equal doctrine can be validly applied to carrier transportation within the City of Montgomery and its police jurisdiction."

They said the separate but equal concept had been "repudiated" in other recent decisions involving segregation in public education, in the use of Louisville, Ky., city parks, Baltimore recreational centers and golf courses in Atlanta.

"Even a statute can be repealed by implication," the judges said. "A judicial decision, which is simply evidence of the law and not the law itself, may be so impaired by later decisions as no longer to furnish any reliable evidence."

JUDGE LYNNE, in dissenting, declared:

"Only a profound, philosophical disagreement with the ultimate conclusion of the majority that the separate but equal doctrine can no longer be safely followed as a correct statement of the law' would prompt this, my first dissent."

Judge Lynne said that the separate but equal doctrine set forth in the Plessy vs. Ferguson transportation case was still in effect.

"Because I would dismiss the action on the authority of Plessy vs. Ferguson . . . I respectfully dissent," Judge Lynne said.

"While any student of history knows that under our system of government vindication of the constitutional rights of the individual is not, and ought not to be, entrusted to the Congress, its reticence to intrude upon the internal affairs of the several states should caution us against doing so where the path of duty is not plainly marked and when we must hold a clear precedent of the Supreme Court outmoded," he said.

News P. 13

FOUR MONTGOMERY Negro women in May asked the panel of judges to outlaw Montgomery bus segregation laws whose enforcement was ordered by Alabama Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones.

Judge Jones had said that when the U. S. Supreme Court on April 23 sent the South Carolina bus segregation case back to the lower courts that it did not at the time rule on the constitutionality of bus segregation.

He said that city and state laws still stood and ordered the Montgomery City Lines to enforce segregation on buses in Montgomery.

The bus company had abandoned enforcement after the Supreme Court's action in April in the South Carolina case. No actual integration on Montgomery buses was reported, however.

Lindbergh sees no change here

Birmingham City Commissioner R. E. Lindbergh said he has not seen a copy of the court' ruling but declared, "We don't contemplate any changes being made in the situation in Birmingham."

Lindbergh said the court ruling was given in the middle district of Alabama. Birmingham is in the northern district.

Commissioner J. T. Waggoner echoed Lindbergh, saying, "We don't contemplate any changes now or later."

Mayor James W. Morgan was not available for comment. He is on vacation in Florida.

THE SUIT RULED on today was an outgrowth of the Montgomery bus boycott begun Dec. 5. Only a few of the city's estimated 50,000 Negroes have been riding city buses since then.

Named as defendants in the suit were the Montgomery City Lines, two of its drivers, James F. Blake and Robert Cleere; members of the Montgomery Board of Commissioners W. A. Clark, Clyde Sellers and Frank Parks; Montgomery Chief of Police Goodwyn J. Ruppenthal, and C. C. Owen, Jimmy Hitchock and Sibyl Pool as member of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

The suit was brought by Aurelia S. Browden, Susie McDonald and two minors, Claudette Colvin and Mary Louise Smith, who were represented by Q. P. Colvin and Frank Smith, as "next friend."

IN ITS RULING today the two judges denied Atty. Gen. John Patterson's motion that the Alabama Public Service Commission be dismissed from the suit. ASPC President C. C. Owen had testified that APSC should not be a party in the suit because it had no authority to regulate the Montgomery City Lines which, he said, operated entirely within the Montgomery city limits.

The panel ruled that a 1945 Alabama law imposed on APSC the duty of administering and enforcing its race segregation requirements and that APSC was therefore a proper party in the case.

The two-majority judges also denied a request made by the defendants that the panel "for reason of comity" decline to exercise jurisdiction in the case until the state courts ruled on the construction and validity of the statutes and ordinances in question.

"That doctrine," the judges said, "has no application where the plaintiffs complain that they are being deprived of constitutional civil rights, for the protection of which federal courts have a responsibility as heavy as that which rests on the state courts."

JUDGES RIVES and Johnson concluded their opinion in these words:

"The ultimate question is whether the statues and ordinances requiring the segregation of the white and colored races on the common carrier motor buses in the City of Montgomery and its police jurisdiction are unconstitutional and invalid. Unless prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, the power to require such segregation is reserved to the states or to the people.—See 10th Amendment.

"In their private affairs, in the conduct of their private businesses, it is clear that the people themselves have the liberty to select their own associates and the persons with whom they will do business, unimpaired by the 14th Amendment. The Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3. Indeed, we think that such liberty is guaranteed by the due process clause of that amendment.

"There is, however, a difference, a constitutional difference, between voluntary adherence to custom and the perpetuation and enforcement of that custom by law. Shelley vs. Kraemer, 334 U. S. 1, 13. The 14th Amendnments provides that 'No state shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor deny any persons within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.'

"Those provisions do not interfere with the police power of states so long as the state laws operate alike upon all persons and property similarly situated. Barbier vs. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 32. That amedment 'merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed.' Marchant vs Penn. Railroad, 153 U. S. 380, 390.

"We cannot in good conscience perform our duty as judges by blindly following the precedent of Plessy vs. Ferguson, supra, when our study leaves us in complete agreement with the Fourth Circuit's opinon in Flemming vs. South Caroline Electric and Gas Co., 224 F. 2d 752, appeal dismissed April, 1956,—U. S.—, that the separate but equal doctrine can no longer be safely followed as a correct statement of the law. In fact, we think that Plessy vs. Ferguson has been impliedly, though not explicitly, overruled, and that under later decisions, there is now no rational basis upon which the separate but equal doctrine can be validly applied to public carrier transportation within the City of Montgomery and its police jurisdiction. The application of that doctrine cannot be justified as a proper execution of the state police power.

"We hold that the statutes and ordinances requiring segregation of the white and colored races on motor buses of a common carrier of passengers of the City of Montgomery and its police jurisdiction violate the due process and equal protection of the law clauses of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This holding does not, however, become effective until the entry of formal judgment. The parties are requested to submit to the Court in writing within two weeks from the date of this opinion their views as to the form of judgment to be entered and as to whether such judgment should be stayed pending appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States."

THE PROLONGED Montgomery bus boycott, focusing worldwide attention on a city whose population of 125,000 is made up of some 50,000 Negroes, was the first wholesale use of economic force by either race since the Supreme Court's school integration decision two years ago.

Since the boycott began last Dec. 5 in protest against the arrest of a Negro seamstress who refused to move to the colored section of a bus, the Negro passenger load has been only af raction of normal.

hWere buses once carried 30,000 to ~~40,000 Negro~~ riders daily, the compan ysays only 300 to 400 are riding now.

Instead, the boycotters rely on a smooth-functioning car pool which takes them to and from work without charge. Operated by the newly-organized Montgomery Improvement Assn., the motor pool uses scores of privately owned cars and 14 new model station wagons purchased in the name of Negro churches.

THE SUIT challenging constitutionality of the city and state segregation laws was filed in federal court Feb. 1, the same day a bomb exploded outside the home of a boycott leader, E. D. Nixon, and on the day the City Commission adopted a "get tough" policy toward the boycotting Negroes.

A Leader Jailed

Worth

What will the Montgomery, Alabama public officials do nex to try to force Negro citizens to purchase second-class citizenship? In Recorders Court there January 28 the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., pastor of fashionable Dexter Avenue Baptist Church was fined $14 on charges of alleged "speeding" January 26.

This distinguished minister was taken to jail, frisked, finger printed, and etc., for a minor traffic violation. Usually the most ordinary person is merely given a "ticket" in such cases. But this was not so with the Reverend Mr. King. Somebody wanted him in jail because he is tabbed "the boycott leader," it seems.

For nine weeks a segment of the Montgomery population has stopped riding the buses, over alleged mistreatment. The bus company has a franchise which gives it a monoply. It is protected from competition by the city. A customer who is not satisfied with the services either rides or does not ride. Tues. 1-31-56

Complaints by the suffering group were presented both to the bus company and to the city officials. Both turned down the recommendations for relief. Both claims that the law, custom and tradition stood in the way of the asked-for improvement. P. 6

City officials appealed to the former bus riders to return to the buses. A proclamation was issued urging the "white" people to use the buses more. Then the city officials reportedly joined the law-defying White Citizens Council. An intemperate appeal was issued to white people not to transport their Negro help in order to force them to ride the buses. Birmingham Ala.

Can you imagine city officials openly and boastfully connecting up with a hate group which seeks to control though, regulate the personal lives of citizens, deprive a racial segment as a whole from the enjoyment of the benefits, privileges, responsibilities, and guarantees of the United States Constitution? Can you imagine in this day and time a crude attempt to persecute a man simply because he disagrees with another.

Since their joining the WCC, the Montgomery city officials have announced that they will hold no more conferences with the representatives of the alleged mistreated group.

But let us suggest that the aggrieved group and the city officials come together and sponsor a friendly legal suit designed to test the constitionality of the city's and the state's bus segregation laws. In time, we belive, such laws will be legally challenged any way.

A New Hero Emerges In The South

Sat. 2-25-56

Elsewhere in this issue, appears a story of the new leadership that is emerging in the South today.

It is written from the observations made by our Defender Publications correspondent, Ethel L. Payne, during her recent trip to Alabama, focal point now of the resistance movement against the tyranny of white supremacy. Chicago, Ill.

A seasoned reporter who has literally made the world her beat, Miss Payne has brought back from behind the "color curtain" some heartening news in the battle that is raging for the second emancipation of the black man. It is a fitting tribute to the courageous Negro clergymen.

We urge you all to read it.

In the strife-torn South, history is being written today. One writer has said that the issue is whether black man and the white man can live side by side peacefully and he expresses grave doubt whether integration will ever be acceptable to the white man.

We believe it is much more fundamental. That is the basic rights of all men whether they are black, white, brown, yellow or green to live in freedom from want and tyranny and the dignity which is their divine right.

Under the old false theory of separate but equal, this has been impossible to attain because there is no such thing as separate and equal.

These are bitter and trying days in which courage and leadership are needed more than ever. We are thankful that a great deal of the necessary spiritual and moral guidance as well as practical leadership is being provided by Negro clergymen who dare to raise their heads and speak the truth. No amount of intimidation; not even threats of bodily harm to them and their loved ones has been able to stop them.

In this "midnight of the mind" as the Rev. M. L. King, leader of the resistance movement in Montgomery, has described it, our brothers and sisters behind the "color curtain" need all of the support, morally and financially, that can be mustered.

We cannot let them fail for lack of concern on our part. This is the least we in the comparative safety of the North can do.

We have long felt that the church is the best institution to give effective leadership. This newspaper proudly salutes the Negro clergymen for making the truth to go marching on.

Montgomery Bus Lines Abandons Sunday Service

Call Kansas City Mo.

Fri. 3-23-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) —The Negro boycott which has crippled bus operations here for 14 weeks, forced the Montgomery City Commission to announce last week that Sunday service on all but two of the 14 bus routes would be discontinued. P. 4

Mayor W. A. Gayle, who joined the local pro-segregation Citizens Council in protest because of the boycott, said Sunday revenue on the 12 routes had not been enough to warrant continued operation.

Bus service on week days won't be affected by the Sunday curtailment. Only the bus routes to Maxwell AFB and Gunter AFB will continue to operate on Sunday.

Gayle said he had received a money order for $55 from a group of 53 Atlanta, Ga., citizens and a check from Atlanta for the $1 to be turned over to the bus company.

An unsigned letter accompanying the money order said the Atlanta group is working to promote additional support "of your cause" in the belief "the struggle in Montgomery . . . will act as a predecessor of future segregation issues in the south."

Since the boycott began last Dec. 5, the bus company has dropped several predominantly Negro lines entirely, has reduced the number of buses on others, and has had the fare increased from 10 cents to 15 cents.

Despite the fare increase, the company's revenues are still off by at least $100,000 in three months. This is a reduction at a rate of close to $500,000 a year.

It is believed, moreover, that the $100,000 figure is decidedly low—that the reduction so far is probably larger.

And it isn't the bus company alone that has lost. The reduction of service has forced the company to lay off 37 employees (32 drivers and five shop workers). These men averaged about $80 a week (a 52-hour week at $1.55 per hour). If they have been idle 12 weeks, they have lost some $35,000 already. They are losing $140,000 to $150,000 a year.

Meanwhile, the boycott doesn't seem to be hurting Negro citizens one bit. They are either walking or using a highly-organized car pool to get to and from destinations.

While they bitterly oppose the boycott, literally thousands of Montgomery housewives are driving their maids, cooks and even houseboys to and from work.

In another development last week, an amendment was filed in U. S. district court to an anti-segregation suit, adding three additional defendants and removing the name of one Negro woman originally listed as a party to the action.

Atty. Fred Gray, acting for the Negro boycotters, changed the suit to add the names of the three members of the Alabama Public Service Commission to the list of defendants that already included Mayor W. A. Gayle and the other two members of the City Commission.

The name of Mrs. Jeanetta Reese, who earlier denied giving Gray permission to use her name in the suit, was stricken from the list of plaintiffs.

Gray was indicted for unlawful practice on the basis of the woman's statement. But the case was dismissed in circuit court when the state admitted it did not have jurisdiction.

'We Decided To Go To Jail Together,' Says Montgomery Bus Protest Leader

Call, Kansas City, Mo.
Phil, 3-23-56

CLEVELAND. — "Perhaps you've heard that Negroes will not stick together. Well, if you hear it again remember Montgomery, Ala."

This was the admonition given here last week by one of the 24 ministers indicted in Montgomery in February for their participation in a mass Negro protest against discrimination in Montgomery city buses. A total of nearly 100 Negroes were indicted.

Addressing a crowd of 2,100 persons at a prayer-protest rally, sponsored by the Cleveland NAACP, the Rev. L. Roy Bennett recounted that "we decided to go to jail together instead of one by one."

A total of $3,301.64 was donated by the audience to aid the Montgomery group in its fight against segregation and to help in the legal defense of those arrested there.

Mr. Bennett, a Methodist minister in Montgomery, related:

"Our story started in April, 1955, when a young girl refused to give up her seat on a bus, thereby violating city and state law, was jailed and fined. She had moved across an imaginary line set up by the bus driver.

Woman Refused To Give Up Seat

"Then, last December, a woman who had sat in the same bus seat for years refused to give it up to a white man. That was the straw that broke the camel's back. She was arrested, and that night there was the biggest and most spontaneous mass meeting ever seen at our church.

"We had to do something to stop the brutality of police and the drivers. We set Dec. 5 as the day for our protest, in which no Negro would ride on a bus...We, the six or seven thousand Negroes gathered at our Dexter Avenue church that night, set up three things to accomplish:

"First, to request more courtesy to our people from the bus lines; secondly, to seek a seating arrangement on the basis of first come, first served, and, thirdly, to request the employment of Negroes as bus drivers of the predominantly Negro lines.

"Dec. 23 was the last of the meetings we had with city officials. They refused any compromise on our first two points. On the third they said union rules would take a little time for any integration of Negro drivers into the union.

Negroes Have Walked And Walked

"Since then Negroes in Montgomery have walked and walked and walked...In a sense it is a spiritual movement and a passive movement. While we are walking, the bus line has lost $3,500 a day. Imagine, $3,500 a day for 91 days. We're going to fight until we can sit down where we darn please."

The call for funds at the meeting was led by the Rev. Angus C. Hull Jr., of the Cleveland Baptist association, who also served as moderator.

Phil, 3-23-56

Other persons participating in the program included Dr. James E. Levy, president of the Cleveland NAACP; Charles P. Lucas, former executive secretary of the Cleveland NAACP; the Rev. A. Henson Jarmon, NAACP committee member and church pastor; Ralph Rudd and Jack G. Day of the Civil Liberties union, and Arnold Walker of the Urban League.

Test Validity Of Boycott Law

Call, Kansas City, Mo.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (NS) — A three-man board of federal judges will hear a case brought by five Montgomery Negro women which attacks the constitutionality of city and state laws requiring racial segregation in public transportation.

Phil, 3-23-56

Named to the board yesterday were U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Richard T. Rives and District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., both of Montgomery, and District Judge Seybourn H. Lynne of Birmingham, Ala.

No date was set for the hearing.

Attorneys representing the five women also are representing the 90 Negro leaders indicted in the mass bus boycott at Montgomery.

Boycott Rolls On After Conviction

Negroes Still Spurn Montgomery Buses

Birm., Ala.

MONTGOMERY, March 23 (AP) —Negroes still refused to ride segregated city buses today despite the conviction of one of their leaders in the first of Montgomery's boycott trials.

A spokesman for Montgomer City Lines Inc., said, however, "there might have been a few more" patronizing the busline than there have been in recent days and weeks.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, was fined $500 yesterday after a four-day trial on charges of conspiring to boycott the buses.

His sentence was suspended and trials of 89 other defendants also indicted under Alabama's anti-boycott law were postponed after King filed notice of appeal. He has said he will fight to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

The protest began last Dec. 5 after a Negro woman, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was arrested for refusing to move to another seat on a bus on orders from the driver. City and state laws require segregation in all public transportation.

Mrs. Parks was in the audience last night when King told a Negro mass meeting the boycott will continue with renewed determination.

Bus Segregation Suit Challenged

Times-Picayune, New Orleans, La.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 27 (AP)—Attorney General John Patterson filed a motion in United States district court Tuesday seeking to dismiss a segregation suit against members of the Alabama public service commission.

Wed. 3-28-56

The suit challenges constitutionality of the state law and city ordinance in Montgomery requiring separate facilities for white and Negro races in public transportation. It was an outgrowth of the racial boycott still continuing in Montgomery against segregated city buses.

Patterson, as Alabama's chief legal officer, asked for dismissal of the complaint that the segregation laws should first be tested in state courts instead of before a three-judge federal panel which has been named to hear the suit.

The attorney general contended that the petition filed by four Negro women fails to show that the public service commission has jurisdiction over Montgomery city lines buses. The bus company is under the city commission's jurisdiction.

No date has been set for a hearing on the complaint.

Missing The Boat

Defender P. 9

We've been wondering what's going to be accomplished by the boycott trial in Montgomery. Sat. 3-31-56

In the first place the regimental indictments and the subsequent trial of Rev. Martin L. King, head of the Montgomery Improvement Association, seems to us a waste of time and money.

Though Rev. King's trial has dragged on a week, we assume that those of the other 90 defendants can be disposed of more quickly. But at one a day, it will take three months to exhaust the list of persons indicted.

Chicago, Ill.

But none of this is getting any closer to a solution of the basic problem. For even as Rev. King was on trial, buses were still being boycotted.

Should Rev. King be convicted, it will have no bearing on the boycott. Further, his conviction will prove nothing since it is a certainty that it will be appealed to higher courts up to the U. S. Supreme court in Washington.

More time and money wasted, and still no end to the boycott.

The demands of the MIA are certainly reasonable. Courteous or, at the least, civil treatment is due any human being, and during the trial it was brought out by a bus official that the first come, first served basis of seating is no violation of any jim crow statute.

The determination of the white man in some areas of the South to pile humiliation upon humiliation on the Negro can be the factor that completely destroys his nice little jim crow society.

The issue of intra-state jim crow would not have arisen at this time, had the bus and city officials been willing to give the Negro citizens the modicum of respect they ask. They had not attacked the jim crow system, they simply wanted to modify it.

The late Lucius Harper had a saying: "It is better to be thought a fool than to open your mouth and confirm it."

The southern white man has certainly been opening his mouth wide.

Negro Clerics Promised Aid

Advertiser P. 1
Montgomery, Ala.

NEW YORK, March 18 (AP)—The Fellowship of Reconciliation said today that more than 200 white and Negro clergymen have expressed willingness to go to Montgomer, Ala., and take the pulpits of 25 Negro clerics facing bus boycott charges. 3-19-56

Ninety-three Negros, including the clergymen, go on trial tomorrow in Montgomery as leaders in the 16-week-old boycott.

The fellowship group, in a statement, said more than 400 ministers throughout the nation responded to an appeal for support of the nonviolent resistance campaign against segregation on Montgomery's buses.

It said more than 200 of these volunteered to fill the pulpits of any clerics who may be jailed.

The fellowship describes itself as a voluntary, nondenominational Protestant organization founded in 1915 by clergymen seeking settlement of international and racial conflicts by peaceful means. The group claims a membership of 15,000 in this country, with affiliated units throughout the world.

Strikers, City At Impasse In Montgomery Bus Boycott

Chicago, Ill.

By ETHEL L. PAYNE

MONTGOMERY — One of the steering committee members in the Alabama bus boycott is E. D. Nixon, a tall, gaunt man who has had his home bombed, but who shows absolutely no fear.

A Pullman Porter who runs to Chicago, Nixon gained some fame when he protested over the exclusion of Negro Democrats from a scheduled $100 a plate dinner in Montgomery.

As a result of his protest, Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan who had been scheduled to speak, cancelled his engagement. Nixon now has his home guarded 24 hours while he is away on his runs because his wife is alone.

The house has powerful flood lights turned on at night and a watch dog gives warning as soon as anyone approaches the front walk. Nixon is one of the leading spirits in the organization.

When Cong. Adam Clayton Powell came to Montgomery on a speaking engagement, Nixon accompanied him to the Executive Mansion to visit with Gov. Folsom, an unprecedented thing in the South.

Folsom is reported to have warned city police to lay off harrassing owners of private cars being used in the pool.

WANT JITNEY FRANCHISE

J. E. Pierce, a professor of the State Teachers college, who is on the transportation committee, authored a plan to seek a franchise for a jitney service, but no action has been taken on this.

Atty. Fred D. Gray, the lawyer for the Montgomery Improvement Association. has filed a suit in court asking for an injunction to stop police and city officials from interfering with the car pool arrangement and petitioning for a change in the state laws on travel.

Thus, it is the first test of intra-state segregation laws since the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled out separation by race in inter-state travel and waiting room facilities.

Gray is 25, a graduate of Alabama State and Western Reserve U. law school and is a member of the Ohio and Alabama bars. An ordained minister of the Church of Christ, Gray was reclassified from 4-D to 1-A, the day after he filed the suit.

Mrs. Rosa Parks, the little lady who started it all, is a member of St. Paul AME church. Asked why she made her act of defiance she said, very firmly, "There just comes a time when your cup runs over and you just can't take anymore. Besides, God's in this plan. Wrong can't go on forever."

3-POINT PLAN

The association has outlined a three-point plan of settlement. This includes courtesy on the part of the drivers, service on a first come first-serve basis with no reserved seats for either race and to employ Negro bus drivers in predominantly Negro areas.

This does not mean the end of segregation, but it calls for Negroes filling up the bus, starting from the rear and working towards the front; the whites to start from the front and work towards the back. When the bus would fill up from either direction, the rest would have to stand.

The NAACP has disclaimed any approval of this modified plan of segregation, but it is lending overall support to the boycott.

Bus company officials have of-

Meanwhile, as city officials were seeking ways of forcing an end to the boycott, many Negroes now say they will never ride the buses again, even if the strike is settled.

E. D. NIXON, an oficial of the Montgomery Improvement Association whose house was bombed in the present boycott. Nixon, a Pullman Porter, has long been outspoken in the fight for civil rights. He protested the exclusion of Negroes from the $100 a plate dinner given by local Democrats. As a result, Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan canceled his scheduled speaking appearance in Montgomery.

White riders are angered because the company has doubled the fare since the boycott and they are bearing the burden of the increased cost. Transfers, once free, now cost a dime.

NO ONE YIELDS

So far, the company has not yielded on any of the points. Neither have the boycotters. The company, National City Lines, is a Chicago corporation.

Its representatives have been in and out of Montgomery, but despite Rev. King's invitation to them to meet and discuss the situation with association leaders, they have instead bowed to local custom and done all their negotiations with city officials. As a result, an impasse has been reached.

Some weeks ago, Rev. King wrote letters of appeal to some prominent Chicago Negro leaders, asking them to try and contact heads of the company to try and work out some time for a meeting, the purpose of which was to see if the policy could not be relaxed. As yet, the group has not acted.

HOUSE BOMBED

Recently, the minister's house was bombed. Luckily, his wife and young baby who were alone at the time were unharmed, but almost before the explosion was over, crowds of citizens gathered.

If there had been any plans at all of ending the strike, such incidents as this strengthened the will to resist.

When Mayor W. A. Gayle came to investigate the incident he found the house surrounded by Negroes singing, "Amazing Grace, How Sweet the Sound." When they came to the refrain, "I once was lost, but now I'm found," they rolled out the words over and over again.

The mayor left hastily. He showed his feelings about the boycott when he openly joined the White Citizens' Council to show that he meant to deal firmly with the leaders of the strike.

The day after the bombing of Rev. King's house, Rev. Ralph Abernathy, a co-leader of the boycott, got a telephone call threatening his life.

The grand jury which is now investigating the boycott has subpoenaed a number of members of the Montgomery Improvement Association in an effort to question them and pin the blame on certain key leaders. When this is done, a spokesman said he expects one, maybe four indictments to come.

But it looks as if the boycott can go on and on and on.

MRS. ROSA PARKS, Montgomery seamstress who started the bus boycott which has attracted world wide attention. The strike began after Mrs. Parks protested about giving up her seat to a white rider. She was arrested and fined.

Negroes Tell Of Bus Treatment At Trial

Daily World Thurs. 3-22-56 P.1

Atlanta, Ga.

BY ROBERT H. DENLEY

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — Bitter, long-standing grievances over their treatment on Montgomery buses spilled forth from Negro witnesses Wednesday as the defense of one of their ministers, Rev. M. L. King, Jr., opened in Circuit Court.

As the prosecution rested its case against the 27 year old Baptist Negro minister accused of leading a bus boycott, the defense tried but failed to get an immediate verdice in favor of the defendant.

Rev. King is the first of 90 Negroes, including 24 ministers, to go on trial in connection with the boycott that began on December 5.

All of the defense witnesses told of mistreatment or discourtesy on Montgomery buses and some said they stopped riding before December 5.

QUIT DEC 5

However, one witness—Mrs. Gladys Moore — said she quit December 5 and since then had gone to work by Taxi and returned home by car pool operated by an organization of which the Rev. King is president.

Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter who is hearing the case without a jury, asked the witness.

"Why did you stop riding the buses on December 5 ?

She replied:

"Well, nobody asked me to stop riding .....

The Judge cut off that answer and repeatedly asked Mrs. Moore why she happened to mention December 5 as the day to quit riding buses.. At one point she said:

"I stopped because we had been treated so bad through the years, we all decided to stop riding."

50,000 NEGROES

Judge Carter asked Mrs. Moore whom she meant by "ALL." the witness answered: "All of us—All 50,000 of Montgomery's Negroes."

The courtroom's predominantly Negro audience burst into applause. Judge Carter sternly warned that if there was recurrence of the demonstration he would send someone to jail for contempt.

"I kiow you have feelings," the Judge said, "But the courtroom is not the place to vent them."

The answer that finally satisfied Judge Carter as to why Mrs. Moore stopped riding buses on December 5 was:

"That was the day they had the trial for Mrs. Rosa Parks."

Montgomery's 16 week bus boycott apparently was triggered by Mrs. Parks' arrest after she refused to move from one seat to another when ordered to do so by the bus driver.

HANDBILLS USED

Although no testimony in this trial has shown it, handbills reportedly were circulated among the Negro population setting December 5 as the date for a boycott.

Judges Named To Air Attack On Race Laws

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. 3-17-56

U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery and U.S. District Judge Seybourn H. Lynne of Birmingham have been named members of a three-judge court to hear a case attacking the constitutionality of local and state laws requiring racial segregation on public transportation.

Judge Joseph C. Hutcheson Jr., presiding judge of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, recently designated the two federal jurists to rule on the case along with U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. of Montgomery.

Times, 3-24-56

AUTOMATIC MEMBER

Judge Johnson is automatically a member of the three-judge court because the suit was filed in the district where he presides.

Five Montgomery Negro women filed a federal suit here Feb. 1 asking that Montgomery city ordinances and Alabama state statutes requiring racial segregation on public conveyances be declared unconstitutional.

The suit, entered by Negro attorneys Fred B. Gray and Charles Langford, claimed that local and state transportation segregation laws violated rights guaranteed the Negroes under the 14th amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

No date has been set for hearing the case.

Montgomery City Commission members, Mayor W. A. Gayle, Frank Parks, and Clyde Sellers, along with Police Chief G. J. Rupenthal, Montgomery City Lines Bus Inc. and two bus drivers were named as defendants in the original suit.

Some 20 days after the Negroes filed suit, attorneys for the city and the bus company filed answers denying most of the Negroes' allegations and asking dismissals of the suit. On March 8, Gray and Langford filed an amended complaint in U.S. District Court here dropping the name of Jeaneatta Reese, as one of the plaintiffs and adding the three members of the Alabama Public Service Commission as defendants.

Attorneys for the city, bus company and new defendants C. C. Owens, Jimmie Hitchcock, and Sibyl Pool of the Alabama P. S. C. have until March 30 to file an answer to the amended complaint.

Negro Clerics Promised Aid

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. 3-19-56

NEW YORK, March 18 (AP)—The Fellowship of Reconciliation said today that more than 200 white and Negro clergymen have expressed willingness to go to Montgomer, Ala., and take the pulpits of 25 Negro clerics facing bus boycott charges.

Ninety-three Negros, including the clergymen, go on trial tomorrow in Montgomery as leaders in the 16-week-old boycott.

The fellowship group, in a statement, said more than 400 ministers throughout the nation responded to an appeal for support of the nonviolent resistance campaign against segregation on Montgomery's buses.

It said more than 200 of these volunteered to fill the pulpits of any clerics who may be jailed.

The fellowship describes itself as a voluntary, nondenominational Protestant organization founded in 1915 by clergymen seeking settlement of international and racial conflicts by peaceful means. The group claims a membership of 15,000 in this country, with affiliated units throughout the world.

Negroes Are Not Asking Race Mixing On Buses

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISTR — Your editorial, Jan. 11, "Two Questions Arise," was perfectly devastating. More power to you. Fri. 2-13-56

But what I want to know, Why all this fuss about intergration in the schools? I am talking about Alabama. Who wants it? Certainly the white people do not want it. No doubt there is a considerable number who would not object to it but no one would say that they would ever make any trouble about it. And we are told by our state superintendent of education, who is in a position to have a good judgment of the situation, that 95% of the colored people do not want it.

The demands of the boycott in Montgomery sustains his judgment, since they are not asking for integration on the buses but only for a fair deal. P. & A

And yet our legislators are going up the hill and down again trying to find some measure that will destroy our public school system. Surely the few persons among that 5% who may make trouble here or there in our centers of population can be handled without the awful tragedy of destroying our system of education. Surely those who advocate such measures have never studied the history of public education in the United States to learn the long hard struggle to get this precious agency established for the preservation of our democracy.

We are just plain scared and when people get frightened they do many irrational things like the man who, when his house caught fire, rushed up stairs, threw the looking glass out of the window and carried the feather bed down stairs. Montgomery, Ala.

Let us get down to brass tacks! What the colored people really want are at least four rights to which all citizens are entitled.

¶ They want justice in the courts.

¶ They want health, sanitation which would reduce the mortality among both white and colored.

¶ Of course they want education but they would be satisfied if their schools were as good as the schools for whites.

¶ They want equal economic opportunity.

Enlightened self interest should give these rights to them.

Rebellion Is Not Good Citizenship

Editor, The Advertiser:

In my travels to other cities in the United States I have always boasted of the amicable relation between the white and colored people of Montgomery. I feel that these same conditions would have continued to exist, if those Northern agitators of the NAACP had not sent speakers down here to influence the colored population against the whites. I am heartily in favor of segregation, being a "born and bred Southerner." But the Montgomery Negroes who wish to vote, claiming they are good citizens (when they advise defiance of segregation laws), are urging rebellion against the laws of Alabama and Montgomery. Whether the Negroes consider the law unjust and unfair, it is still the law of Montgomery and Alabama until repealed.

Secondly the Negro preachers on Sunday instead of preaching the word of God, and the brotherhood of man, harp on this theme of segregation and at every meeting take up collections to keep the movement alive. Their emissaries threaten the Negroes with bodily harm if they ride the buses. There are only a certain small number of Negroes who have cars in Montgomery. Thousands of Negro men and women, who are dependent upon their jobs for their very livelihood, have to walk to their work, arriving tired and despondent and dreading the long walk home in the cold or rain. This affects also many thousands of poor white people who cannot afford a car, and with the removal of certain buses are forced to take taxis to their work, an expense many cannot afford.

The preachers tell the deluded people, "You are sinning against God; You are sinning against the future of your children, if you do not obey the mandates of the NAACP." As long as we have to live in the same city, and depend one upon the other, at least we could have pleasant and amicable relations.

Negroes, Look Around You

Editor, The Advertiser:

The white people of Montgomery are typical of the other white people of America, slow to anger and slow to make up their minds. But once they do they have always come out victorious.

The bus fare has already been raised 50%. Should you continue the bus boycott six months the loss would be repaid in 18 months and you will keep on paying and paying as long as you live. So what have you gained?

Where is your appreciation, your sense of duty? Look around your home. Who furnished the "know how" to build your homes and furnish them? Who furnished the "know how" to prepare your foods and medicines, give you electricity, make your clothes, design and build your cars and every other convenience you so richly enjoy, that goes with civilization. Now what have you done for yourself?

You are indebted to the white people of Montgomery for life itself. As the white doctor brought most of you into the world. The white man paid about 95 per cent for your education, furnished you jobs and a place to live, etc. Now suppose the white people of Montgomery would not hire you any longer or give you a place to live where would you go or do?

Ball Is Right

Editor, The Advertiser:

The most constructive advice given in any letter to you is contained in the one from Fred Ball in Monday's paper. Why is the law he mentioned not resorted to?

If the leaders of this boycott were rounded up and made to feel the punishment resulting from breaking this law, there seems to be no reason why normal condition would not return to Montgomery.

How pathetic that preachers of both races should be involved in leading people into such a state of affairs as now exists in our state capital? The trouble all began because a law was violated. It is inconceivable to contemplate the chaos resulting from the violation of many of our laws with reactions as those that followed the one violated by Rosa Parks.

Ministers Asked To Back Plan Of Negroes In Montgomery

Daily World

Wed. 1-18-56

J. E. Jordan, local leader, made an able talk to the Atlanta Baptist Ministers Union Tuesday in session at Wheat St. Baptist Church. Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Jordan briefly urged the ministers to join the fight Negroes are presently conducting in Montgomery protesting mistreatment of Negroes on busses of that city, stating that Rev. M. L. King, Jr., a Georgia n[illegible] doing a good job lea[illegible]it.

He said he w[illegible] s poor" as he is to give [illegible]se if others will also [illegible] he was willing to c[illegible]tee from Atlanta in [illegible] to Montgomery to present the money in order to let the Negroes in Alabama know that Georgia Negroes are with them in this fight.

Mr. Jordan also warned the ministers that we should show an interest in the Negroes' plight in Mississippi, Alabama, South and North Carolina, and Louisiana.

He said he was urging ministers and laymen to raise money at once to help the hard pressed Negroes in Montgomery and send the same to Montgomery at once. P.3

Mr. Jordan said Negroes all over the South are beginning to feel the pinch, especially in small towns if he holds his head up. We must do like the Jews—cooperate with our people everywhere in the South.

After the talk by Mr. Jordan several of the ministers praised the movement and pledged their individual support. The Union will act on the matter next week, public relations director, Rev. Taschereau Arnold stated.

Bus Boycott Still On

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The bus boycott continues!

These four words sum up the situation, here, where the colored citizens of Montgomery have refused to ride the city's buses since Oct. 4.

The Rev. M. L. King, spokesman for the Montgomery Improvement Association, told the AFRO, Saturday, that "It looks like the city officials and the operators of the buslines are trying to find a way to save face.

"After eight weeks, I believe that they are beginning to get the idea that we do not intend to ride a bus until our demands are met." About 95 per cent tof the colored residents refuse to ride the buses.

THE CITY officials last week, postponed three times a hearing on the renewal of the Montgomery Bus Lines franchise that expires at the end of March.

"I don't know what the significance is," the Rev. Mr. King said. "It appears that the company is seeking to renew the franchise to prove that we couldn't drive them out of the community.

"We aren't interested in putting them out of business, we want them to comply with our demands."

THE DEMANDS include (1) More courtesy toward passengers by drivers; (2) A first-come-first-served seating policy; and (3) the hiring of colored bus drivers.

While cities such as Baltimore and Washington were in the midst of the season's worst snow storm, the citizens of Montgomery, who would rather walk than ride a bus, enjoyed spring-like weather.

The temperature was in the 70's.

Avid interest in maintaining the demonstration continues. Thursday, because of the large attendance at the weekly meetings, five churches in different sections of town held meetings. Each was well attended. The overall total was estimated at 5,000.

The meetings were held at Peoples Baptist, the Oak Street AME Zion, the King Hill Baptist, the Greater Washington Park Baptist and North Montgomery Baptist Churches.

The demonstration, which began its ninth week Sunday, stemmed from the arrest of Miss Rosa Parks, a seamstress, on Dec. 1 for refusing to get up to give a white person her seat on the bus.

She was later fined $14 for violating the state's segregation laws.

Mayor W. A. Gale appointed a special citizens committee in early December to negotiate the demonstration, however, the committee hasn't met in two weeks.

The colored members of the committee objected to the president of the Montgomery White Citizens Council on the panel.

Desegregation: Economic Weapons

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

The Negroes of Montgomery, Alabama, have started something which will not be stopped by the conviction of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., on the charge of organizing an illegal boycott. The bus boycott is not halted. Trials of 89 other defendants were suspended pending appeal of the King case, and that may take several years to reach a final adjudication.

It is difficult to see how that process can do anything but hurt the segregationists' cause. For even eventual upholding of this conviction — which is by no means certain — would not kill the idea of nonviolent use of economic power. Meanwhile at every step there would probably be a continuance of bad publicity for the methods adopted to enforce white supremacy. Also, unhappily, there may be a spreading use and abuse of boycotts, damaging to both races and to the South as a whole.

The Montgomery boycott developed as a protest by most of the city's 50,000 Negroes against discrimination on the busses. In the King trial there was abundant testimony intended to show justification — which might be a defense under the law. It left little doubt that treatment of the Negroes on busses fulfilled but half of the "separate but equal" standard.

Southerners honestly convinced that the two races will do better if kept separate — at least in certain associations — will find their case damaged by the ugly evidence of insult and humiliation in this record. Senator Eastland recently declared segregation was not based on any sense of racial superiority. But as practiced it is often hard to disengage from manifestations of "white supremacy" which are not pretty even when as unconscious as the discrimination practiced in the North.

Negroes have by no means been the only ones to employ economic weapons in the segregation struggle. Whites months ago began firing or denying credit to Negroes who signed petitions for desegregated schools. Whites have set in motion some of the most harmful rumor-bred boycotts of business firms accused — usually with no truth — of aiding the NAACP. Whites, indeed, appear to have suffered most, being also on the receiving end of boycotts by Negroes for supporting the White Citizens Councils.

It is clear that the economic weapons are dangerous ones, and southern leaders are deeply concerned by the harm they are doing. One remedy is to expose the false reports which start many of them. But a more fundamental answer is also being sought in steps to cultivate moderation and positive improvements in race relations. Leaders in Montgomery would be well advised to follow this course.

So far the Negroes there have had all the best of it — especially in national and world opinion. They have asked for a rule which obtains on busses in other southern cities like Memphis. This still aims at segregation, but with a first-come-first-served rule. Whites are seated in front, Negroes in the back, but either race may overflow its own area if there are seats elsewhere. Whites at present are in the poor position of trying to compel Negroes to ride busses. Also to stand even though there may be empty seats.

Moreover, some of the Negro leaders appear to understand that the spirit in which economic weapons are used is vital. They have emphasized calmness and nonviolence. Mr. King pleaded on one occasion, "We must use the weapon of love. We must have compassion and understanding for those who hate us." Economic power, if exercised in that spirit, will not be easily stopped.

'My Feet Are Tired But My Soul Is Resting'

Herald Tr. 6-4

By JAY JENKINS
Special To The Herald

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "My feet are tired, but my soul is resting." So spoke a Negro woman. She was talking about the boycott of city buses by members of her race which is entering its thirteenth week here.

Miami Fla.

Her statement sums up a change which has gradually come over the boycott. At first, it was a passive protest with economic overtone. It has become virtually a spiritual crusade.

Sun. 3-4-56

A reporter stood on Montgomery St. Thursday and watched the big yellow-and cream colored buses roll past for an hour without seeing a single Negro in any of them.

Negro leaders say the boycott is 95 per cent effective and that the bus firm's loss of business is averaging $3,200 per day.

It all began last Dec. 1 when Mrs. Rosa Louise Parks, 43-year-old Negro seamstress, climbed aboard a Montgomery City Lines bus to go home.

The rear of the bus was filled with Negroes and she sat down beside a Negro man in the third seat from the front. Two Negro men sat in the third seat across the aisle.

Two stops later, white passengers had filled up the front seats and were having to stand up. The driver told Mrs. Parks and the three men they would have to leave their seats.

All three men obeyed. Mrs. Parks, in what she insists was a spontaneous impulse, refused to move. The driver called police and she stayed in jail briefly until her $100 bond was posted.

Under the city code, Mrs. Parks was a lawbreaker. The code says Negroes and whites must sit separately, and that bus drivers have police powers to enforce the code.

One exception concerns Negro maids who are accompanying white children. The maids can sit with the children.

City officials don't deny Mrs. Parks' assertion that her action was spontaneous and unplanned, but they point out the quick and expert planning followed the incident.

The next day, on Dec. 2, leaflets appeared in Negro sections protesting her arrest. That Friday night the first of a series of mass meetings were held, and the Negroes formed the Montgomery Improvement Assn.

Negroes began walking in Montgomery.

Even after the boycott was under way and the association began spelling out the Negroes' terms for ending it, there was no demand for an end to segregation on the buses.

The terms included a request that bus drivers be instructed to treat the Negroes with more courtesy and that Negro drivers be employed for bus routes in areas of heavy Negro population.

The third key request did not question the segregation policy. It merely asked that passengers be seated in the the bus. Negroes would be seated from the rear, whites from the front.

Meeting after meeting between Negroes and the bus company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of National Bus Lines of Chicago, as well as city and business leaders has failed to make progress.

Meanwhile, Montgomery's Negroes — who comprise more than one-third of the city's 125,000 population —had to find some way to ride.

Negro taxicabs began charging Negroes 10 cents — the cost of a bus ticket — but the city ruled the cabbies had to charge full fare.

So car pools were set up, with regular stops in various parts of the city. To avoid classification as taxis, the cars carry their passengers free. The passengers, in turn, contribute to the churches.

And the churches, whose ministers have been the leader of the boycott, relay funds for gas and oil to the car pool.

The whites reacted by convening a grand jury which indicted 89 Negroes, including 26 ministers, on charges they violated the state's anti-boycott law.

This law contains penalties, including fines up to $1, and imprisonment for up to six months. The Negroes will be tried later this month.

Negroes here are confident that ultimately they will be cleared of the charge. They are banking on a key phrase in the law which bans boycotts "without a just cause or legal excuse."

It is a just cause and it is legally excusable to boycott a bus company when you are forced to give up your seats to whites, they believe.

Montgomery seems peaceful enough now. Since the bargaining sessions failed, city officials have momentarily turned to other things. Negro ministers from the pulpit have told their congregations violence must be avoided.

The strong religious flavor of this boycott grew out of the fact that Negro ministers organized it. Last Sunday, the Negro ministers urged their followers in sermons to pray for God's guidance in the controversy.

The Rev. Mr. King, association president, asked for a special collection of a dollar per person, the funds to go into the boycott kitty, at the Sunday services in his church.

Both the Rev. Mr. King and Mrs. Parks, whose arrest touched off the boycott, are members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

But the Negro ministers have gone to great lengths to stress that the boycott is a local protest. For example, they opposed a proposed nationwide one-hour work stoppage, advanced by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, New York Democrat, as a gesture of support.

A newsman, who has been close to the boycott since it began, said that interest—and tensions — seems to ebb and flow. At first, the boycott was lost in the pre-Christmas rush.

Interest mounted again to a peak, capped by the mass arrests. Then it began ebbing.

The future is uncertain. This boycott could be settled peacably. Its economic impact is limited largely to one company — the bus firm.

Should the boycott here, a sort of test-tube for the South, spread to other areas in Alabama, violence is not only possible but likely.

Car Used in Boycott Victim of Ala. Bus Conflict Stranded Here

Black Dispatch p. 1 Thurs. 3-8-56
Okla. City, Okla.

A 27-year-old veteran of World War II and the Korean war, who told of having fled from Montgomery, Ala., last December after the automobile which he had used to help effect a boycott of the city's bus lines became involved in an accident, was stranded this week in Oklahoma City.

Willie Coleman Brown, who has been a guest at the Northeast Fourth Street YMCA through the personal assistance of Jimmie Stewart, local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People arrived in the city Monday, having hitch-hiked from Phoenix, Ariz.

Brown said he left his home last December 20, shortly after his car was involved in an accident with one driven by a white man in Montgomery. Brown, who said he went to California where "things are pretty rough for a fellow who hasn't got a trade or profession," indicated that he was afraid of being jailed in Montgomery.

Thurs. 3-8-56

The Alabaman said he had been attending adult classes, finishing his high school education on the GI bill, when the boycott started.

"We veterans got out of school at 1 p.m., and we were able to give the biggest support to the car pool," he declared. "Naturally, the police didn't like it, and they were always trying to run us in."

Brown said he had purchased his 1955 Plymouth automobile in New York last July 12, and had driven the car to Montgomery with the original New York license plates. According to the veteran, he had been arrested twice prior to the accident in December, on charges of driving while intoxicated. The second time his driver's license was revoked, he stated.

Okla. City, Okla.

"When I got in that last accident, I knew it wouldn't help me much to stick around. I had paid about $1,500 on my car, but I just got out of it and kept going. They're still making cars."

Brown said he rammed the rear of a white man's car, when the driver ahead of him stopped suddenly. "I saw the woman in the car acting like she was unconscious, and I just knew they'd really stick me when they found out I'd been helping out in the boycott," he said.

Brown said he would really like to go back to Montgomery, "because that's where all of my friends are and it's home." Moreover, he wants to complete the twelfth grade so that he can go on to business college and take a course in bookkeeping and accounting. He said he was slated to have received his high school diploma in March.

Wednesday he was not sure of what he would do. But he had hopes of getting sufficient funds or transportation to reach the town in South Carolina, where his wife, Gladys, is a school teacher.

BUSINESS SUFFERS BY RACIAL DISPUTE

Times p. 22

Montgomery Merchants Who Deal With Negroes and Whites Are Hard Hit

Times 2-28-56

By WAYNE PHILLIPS
Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 27 —Caught in the middle of the struggle between white man and Negro in Alabama is the business man who must deal in peace with both.

New York

This is true of the Montgomery City Lines, operators of the buses boycotted since Dec. 5 by Negroes. It is true of the retail store owner. And it is true also of a whole roster of makers of consumer goods who have been accused of taking sides in the race struggle.

N.Y.

Among the latter are the makers of Philip Morris Cigarettes, Ford products, Philco radio and television, Falstaf Beer, Coca Cola, Colonial bread, Holsum bread and International Harvester.

Caught in the Middle

But whatever the origin, they travel like wildfire, passed on by word of mouth. Before them the business man is helpless, compelled to either stand mute or give offense to one side or the other. And while he waits for the storm to pass his business often suffers.

The Montgomery City Lines, a subsidiary of National City Lines in Chicago, does business in a city where both local ordinance and state law compels it to maintain racial segregation. Its drivers are given the power to determine how this shall be done, and to police their decisions.

It was in the process of carrying out those laws—even granting unfairness and poor judgment by a driver—that the spark was lit that touched off the current bus boycott. As a result the company has lost almost 65 per cent of its riders, been forced to increase its fares from 10 to 15 cents, curtail its schedules, and has been operating at a loss.

A side effect of the boycott has been the impact on the city's retailers, some of whom had derived considerable business from prize locations at key bus stops. The Liggett's Rexall Drug Store, for example, occupies a corner on Court Square where thirty-five buses pass during the morning and evening rush hours.

Corner Loses Value

Before the boycott that corner would have been crowded with hundreds of Negroes going to and from work, or stopping off to change buses. Since the boycott this traffic is negligible on the corner, and sales have declined.

The Negroes have denied that their refusal to ride the city buses is an "economical reprisal." The White Citizens Councils, organized to defend segregation, deny also that they recommend such policies. But despite the denials economic reprisal and threats of it are a key part in the race conflict here.

In Tuskegee, Ala., for example, the Feb. 7 issue of the Tuskegee Civic Association News, a Negro publication, had an article urging Negroes to work to get white members of the voting registration board who would facilitate their voting. And it included this sentence:

"Any local business man who sells you goods and services, or who in any wise benefits from your money, and who is not sympathetic to your becoming a registered voter, is not interested in your total welfare, and by his acts or lack of them is not deserving of your patronage."

Editors' Personal View'

Dr. Charles S. Gomillion, dean of students at Tuskegee Institute and president of the association, denied that this was an appeal for a boycott—which would be illegal in Alabama. It was, he said, just the personal view of the publication's editor.

Among the Negroes of Montgomery, already inflamed by the bus conflict, there travelled like wildfire in recent weeks the rumor that the local Coca Cola Bottling Company had contributed $25,000 to the White Citizens Councils.

The rumor so affected the business of the soft drink company that its manager, Charles P. Britewell, told the leaders of the Montgomery Negro community that they could announce not only that no such contribution had been made, but that he was personally opposed to the councils.

A statement such as that made by Mr. Britewell could backfire, however—by touching off a reaction among the strong supporters of the White Citizens Councils. Their power has been shown by what has happened in this recent region recently to the sales of Philip Morris cigarettes.

Report of Gift Denied

Philip Morris, Inc., was said to have made a financial contribution to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People—an organization that is anathema to the segregation-supporting Southerner.

The company and the N. A. A. C. P. deny that any such contribution was made.

However, at the cigarette counter in Montgomery's chief hotel one package of Philip Morris has been sold in the last twenty-four hours. And the manager of the Liggett's Drug Store mentioned earlier estimates his sales of that brand are off 20 per cent.

The report was spread through a St. Louis publication called White Sentinel. This publication, which is circulated here through the Central Alabama White Citizens Councils, is strongly pro-white and anti-Negro.

Another product that traces sales resistance to the same publication is the Falstaf Brewing Corporation after publication that it had donated to the N. A. A. C. P. The company declared this was not true, and that the donation was by one of the Negro salesmen.

NEGROES MEET AGAIN TO DISCUSS BUS ISSUE

Attorney's Trial On Illegal Practice Set Friday

Tues. 2-28-56

ACCUSED IN FILING SUIT

Memphis, Tenn.

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 27. — Bus-boycotting Montgomery Negroes were called to another mass meeting Monday night while the first of their leaders awaited trial on a grand jury indictment.

Monday night's rally was scheduled at the Holt Street Baptist Church, where the first mass meeting was held at the outset of the bus segregation protest last December. The pastor, Rev. A. W. Wilson, is one of 24 Negro ministers indicted for boycotting.

Periodic Mass Meetings

There was no announcement on the subject of the meeting Monday night. Negroes have had periodic mass get-togethers since the boycott started 12 weeks ago Monday.

Meanwhile, the trial of Negro attorney Fred D. Gray, one of the legal spokesmen for the boycott who is under indictment for unlawful practice, was set for Friday in Circuit Court.

Gray is charged with filing an antisegregation suit in United States District Court without consent of one of the five Negro plaintiffs. The suit was an outgrowth of the Negroes' refusal to ride segregated Montgomery city lines buses.

The same grand jury that declared the boycott illegal and indicted 100 Negroes for violating Alabama's Anti-Boycotting Law made the accusation against the 25-year-old Gray 10 days ago.

His indictment was based on a statement by Jeanetta Reese that she signed the antisegregation complaint without knowing what it was. She made that statement to Mayor W. A. Gayle in the presence of two newspaper reporters, and later testified before the grand jury.

Claims She Knew

Gray said at the time that she did know what she was signing.

The attorney was indicted under a state law that prohibits a lawyer from representing a client without permission. Maximum penalty is a $500 fine and suspension from practice.

Trials of the other Negroes indicted for boycotting will start March 19.

The bus boycott began Dec. 5 after a Negro woman, Rosa Parks, was arrested for refusing to obey a bus driver's order to move to the Negro section of the bus.

She was fined $14 in City Court, appealed it to Circuit Court, was sentenced there to 14 days in jail, and has appealed that to the state Supreme Court.

Chicago Firm Owns Boycotted JC Buses

Sat. 3-17-56

CHICAGO — The National City Lines, which operates the jim crow bus lines in Montgomery, Ala., which colored citizens of that city are boycotting, is a nationwide transit trust controlled by northern financial interests.

Thus the northern directors of this company share responsibility with the White Citizens Councils for the arrest and prosecution of the leaders of the bus boycott in Montgomery and the wave of terror against citizens supporting the boycott.

The giant trust, with headquarters at 616 S. Michigan Ave., is a holding company with more than 40 wholly owned subsidiary transit systems in cities from coast to coast across the nation.

THE COMPANY also has large investments in a number of other transit lines and many of its directors also serve on the boards of ot ransit systems and banks an ndustries.

Following an interview with representatives of the National City Lines at their Chicago office, Willoughby Abner, president of the Chicago NAACP branch, said:

'Colored citizens and liberal whites from coast to coast are asking the directors of National City Lines some pointed questions, for these directors could do much to bring about an honorable and acceptable settlement in Montgomery.

ACCOMPANYING MR. ABNER were the Rev. A. Lincoln James, pastor of Greater Bethesda Baptist Church, and Charles Hayes, director of District 1, United Packinghouse Workers, AF of L-CIO. Both are members of the executive committee of the Chicago N.A.A.C.P.

Representing National City Lines at the conference were K. E. Tottem, manager, and B. W. Franklin, vice president.

The NAACP delegation pointed out the growing concern of colored and liberal whites citizens about the situation in Montgomery. Company officials promised to have a statement on the position of National City Lines on the situation available within a few days.

Alabama Negroes protest arrests with "total walking days" -- won't even ride in cars

Tribune. Los Angeles, Calif. Fri. 3-9-56 p. 1

(SPECIAL TO THE TRIBUNE)

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Undismayed by the arrest of 89 leaders on 115 grand jury indictments (some of them were indicted twice) the 50,000 Negroes of this city are planning a series of "total walking days" before Mar. 28 when the trials of the 89 get underway.

One of the "total walking days", which are to protest the arrests, has already been held.

It followed the mass arrests, and was preceded by careful instructions from the pulpits of the Negro community, as to procedure, decorum, and the spiritual significance of the boycott, which was three months old last Sunday.

Leaders asked the Negroes not to congregate in any particular place; not to go to the courthouse where some of them were still surrendering under the indictments; not to demonstrate in any way except by not riding, neither in car pools nor in Negro taxi cabs.

Negroes from all walks of life, garaged their cars and walked.

At a protest meeting which followed the arrests, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the boycott, schooled some 5000 Negroes who filled his First Baptist church from unfinished basement to balcony, and overflowed onto the sidewalks, in the techniques of "non-violent passive resistence", as follows:

"The word, boycott, does not completely describe this movement. That word is a little too small. This is a protest depending on moral and spiritual forces."

He urged Negroes to ap[illegible] any ordeal "armed with the [illegible]er of love.

"If we are arrested eve[illegible] if we are exploited everyday; if we are trampled on — let nobody pull you so low as to hate them", he said to a chorus of 'amens'.

Throughout the boycott, which is in its 95th day today, the 28-year-old Rev. King, a second-generation minister, has refused to refer to the feeling between the Negroes and whites as "tension".

This is not "tension between [illegible] a [illegible] d in- [illegible] shall, [illegible] r Negroes, but a victory for justice and fair play, a victory for democracy."

HAS "FAITH IN MAN"

Sunday after his arrest, the Rev. King, free on $300 bail, preached on "Faith in Man." He described the Christian faith as "man's ability to rise above his own evil nature, his heredity and environment.

"There is something deep down in our Christian faith that says man, however low, can be lifted. No man can so mistreat me that I will not believe there is hope in human nature. . . . If you just keep on loving a man, you will get down to the God in him."

At each opportunity, the Rev. King tells the boycotters: "Don't get weary. Don't lose faith in me. My faith in man is, at bottom, a faith in good. Believe that the most prejudiced mind in Montgomery can become a living mind — a mind of good will. . . . Don't get mad at man. Man, for all his prejudices, is still young. Give him a chance."

Tribune

Montgomery's Negro leaders have to be careful what they say in public, attacking segregation, which is the law. p. 2

The Rev. King, nor any of his associates, made no public reference, therefore, to another Alabama segregation fight — the attempt of Autherine Lucy to get into the University of Alabama.

However, the young minister was obviously referring to the reports that Miss Lucy's aged parents are against her stand, when he said:

"Thank God, there are some people who can rise above the old and broken down thoughts of their parents.

"You hear 'my parents don't agree with me . . . my community doesn't agree with me' but thank God there are people who can rise above superstition and fear."

REJECTED COMPROMISE

The Rev. King, who is president of the Montgomery Improvement ass'n., who are the boycotters, and the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, chairman of the negotiating committee, last week rejected a "compromise agreement" offered by the bus line, which did not include consideration of their demands for employment of Negro drivers.

The boycott ostensibly is not a demonstration against segregation itself — a suit is in court testing the segregation issue — but demands better seating arrangements, Negro drivers and courtesy from the white drivers.

Although whites of the town, as if under coaching, refuse to discuss the boycott outside their circles — and on the "total walking day" preserved an embarrassed silence, the Negroes are bouyant and humorous about the situation.

The Rev. A. W. Wilson referred to himself in his sermon as "your indicted preacher."

When he heard he was indicted, the Rev. Wilson hunted up a deputy, drove him to the jail. There, he was disappointed when told the charge had been dropped against him because he had testified before the grand jury.

Another Negro said he asked the authorities to indict him because "I wanted to be numbered with the right, but they wouldn't charge me."

The MIA operates a fleet of 300 cars which transport Negroes from 46 pick up stations. To avoid being arrested for operating jitneys, no one is charged for transportation. The pools are financed by donations which have even come from out of the country.

The Rev. King has said that donors have his word that "no one will exploit this movement for gain. We all know that the Till case was exploited. . . . We need money, but we're not going to do anything and everything to get it. No one is going to get fat on this, and no one is going to get any handouts."

According to the Rev. Wilson, the boycott has had a "wholesome effect on the entire community. I believe the Negro population has been brought closer together than ever before."

New boycott, inspired by Montgomery, breaks Currie's

Tribune p. 1 Los Angeles Calif.

Re-inspired to act by the example of bus boycotters in Montgomery, Ala., Los Angeles Negroes knuckled down to a boycott of the Currie Ice Cream Co., and in less than two weeks its 30-year-old lilywhite hiring policy was ended Wednesday with a promise to "hire Negroes in all of the stores that are located in Negro communities."

Beginning Monday morning with the store at 27th and Western, Negroes will soon work at three of the Currie locations, including 3656 S. Crenshaw and 5269 S. Figueroa, Adolphus B. Clay, the one-man 'neighborhood FEP committee' who initiated the boycott after a Tribune story 'broke' the company's policy to the community, said this week.

Tri. 3-9-56

Two more Currie Ice Cream stores in the Negro community are not operated by Currie's, Clay disclosed. One, at 6740 S. Compton, is leased to a Negro, and is staffed by Negroes. The other franchise, over which the company has no control, is at Jefferson and Hoover.

Reflecting the influence even here in faraway California of the deeply spiritual boycott in Montgomery, Ala., by Negroes who are walking to work rather than ride jim crow buses, pickets whom Clay posted outside the store at 2656 S. Western, less than 10 days ago were welcomed by a community which some six months earlier had merely eyed them before walking around them and into the store.

Business was hard hit by the boycott at the ice cream parlor all last weekend and this week, until the pickets were called off by Clay after the three-hour conference with company representatives.

The company had 10 representatives at the conference, Clay said.

Earlier criticized in the community for showing an inclination to play a lone hand in the negotiations, Clay said only a "man nam[illegible] Smith" and a local newsman, Abie Robinson, accompanied him.

Negotiations were conducted with A. W. Compton, vice president of Currie's, Floyd Chatman, general manager, two lawyers, and other officials, including Bill Green, personnel manager, who had told the Tribune that the company would not hire Negroes until 100 percent of its trade was Negro.

Tribune

Under the terms of a written agreement which the local man received, Currie's will interview five Negro women, to be supplied by Clay through the Los Angeles Urban League, hiring at least one of them by Tuesday. p. 2

Whoever gets the jobs will not have too much, details of the agreement revealed. Although the firm has a union contract, it pays its waitresses but 94 cents an hour, gives the women less than 40 hours per week.

Clay said the first offer made him would have netted a Negro woman but $14.50 per week. He ended up getting the company's promise of a 27-hour week at $30, he stated.

A Western avenue barber who launched the boycott because he was affronted by the sight of Negroes spending their money where they couldn't work, Clay officially represented the Pacific States Association of Elks Civil Liberties in the campaign.

Boycott Costing Them $3,500 Day

Defender p. 5 Sat. 3-10-56

Chicago, Ill.

The boycott of city buses by Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., over segregated seating, has focused attention on a nation-wide transit corporation, owners of Jim Crow buses from coast-to-coast.

The corporation is the National City Lines. It is directed by northern financial interests, gains much of its revenue from Negro passengers in at least 16 states.

With headquarters in Chicago, America's transportation center where every train, bus, truck and plane must sometimes go and from which they must sometimes depart, the National City Lines has become a giant operation in southern states.

There also are more than 40 subsidiary city transit systems wholly owned by the organization.

DIVIDENDS PAID

According to figures made available in 1954, the National City Lines serves approximately 4,250,000 persons. Two years ago it paid a dividend of $1.60 a share. At that time shares had a par value of $1 and the dividend was paid on 1,412,063 outstanding shares of an authorized two million shares.

About two weeks ago, officers of the Chicago NAACP, headed by its president, Willoughby Abner, local labor power, obtained an audience with several officials of the corporation, and sought to convince them to help alleviate conditions in Montgomery.

LOSE $3,500 A DAY

Since the boycott started almost 100 days ago, the Montgomery bus line has been losing an estimated $3,500 a day.

Representing the National City Lines at the conference with the NAACP were B. W. Franklin, vice-president, and K. E. Totten, manager.

The contention of the officials of the bus corporation was that they were only running the bus lines in Montgomery in accordance with the laws and customs of Alabama.

The directors of the corporation are prominent businessmen, many who have large holdings in other businesses, including beer companies and transit authorities. They include:

Laurence M. Marks of New York's Wall Street, an investment broker who heads his own financial house and is a leading member and former governor of the New York Stock Exchange.

BLUE BLOODER

Marks also is a trustee of the quarter billion dollar Brooklyn Savings Bank, director of the Shamrock Oil and Gas company of Amarillo, Texas and has membership in such exclusive Blue Blood groups as the Piping Rock, Union, Links, Sleepy Hollow and Wall Street clubs.

C. Frank Reaves, another director, is a board member of the Baltimore and Philadelphia transit companies and sits on the boards of Northwest Airlines and the huge Bohack grocery chain.

Frank Willard is a partner of the financial house of Reynolds and Co., at 120 Broadway.

Another "big" director of the National City Lines is D. H. Pratt, president of the Philadelphia Transit company, and director of the Baltimore Transit co.

On the West Coast, where National City Lines operates buses in more than a dozen California cities, director E. C. Houghton can be found in offices of the Los Angeles Transit Lines, in which National City Lines has a controlling interest. He is president of the company.

Houghton and R. Stewart Moore, another National City Lines director, may also be found at offices of the Key System Transit Lines, which connects San Francisco with Berkeley, Oakland and other East Bay cities.

SUPPORTING MONEY

A large portion of money supporting the Montgomery bus line comes from St. Louis, Mo., where the giant transit trust collects fares from both sides of the Mississippi River in St. Louis and East St. Louis, Ill.

Two of the NCL directors live in St. Louis and both are directors of the St. Louis Public Service company. They are David R. Calhoun and John L. Wilson.

Calhoun, president of the St. Louis Public Service co., is connected with about 18 various companies including the Pullman and Budweiser brewing companies.

Wilson is a director of the same brewery—Anheuser-Busch — that produces some eight million barrels of beer annually, and the First National Bank of St. Louis.

E. Roy Fitzgerald of Chicago, president of National City Lines, is board chairman of the St. Louis Public Service company, and holds directorships on boards of the Los Angeles, Baltimore and Key System transit companies and the Railway Equipment company.

Other NCL directors are F. G. Beamsley of Chicago, director of four other transit companies; E. V. Anderson, Chicago, director of two transit companies; R. A. Farrell, general attorney for the NCL in Chicago; J. M. Fitzgerald of Chicago and W. T. Rossell of New York.

States in which National City Lines operate buses or has large investments are: Alabama, California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah and Washington.

Montgomery Calling Detroit

Advertiser p. 4-A

THhe editor and his colleagues have scarcely been able to get their work done in recent weeks because of the dozens of northern newspapermen working out of The Advertiser on the race issue story. We have, as was our part, cheerfully assisted them in every fashion. There have been some swell people among them.

Ala. 3-10-56

Whether we like it or not, the Alabama race story is a big story and it is proper that the nation's press should tell the tale, which the better papers are doing with more skill and honesty than was the case formerly.

Nevertheless, the editor has been subject to occasional vexations with his visitors and the other day we pitched into a Detroit reporter.

Montgomery, Ala.

"This Alabama story is a good one by any standard of news," we remarked, "but why in hell don't the yankee papers spend part of their time revealing their own race problems?"

An amiable and able man, this Detroit reporter laughed good naturedly at this testy outburst and agreed that yankee papers think race news is news only if it occurs under a magnolia tree.

With a disarming frankness, this reporter confirmed that race conflict in Detroit is a grievous problem and that the three Detroit dailies and the radio had "some kind of agreement" to muffle race conflict news in order not to add fuel to the flame.

AT THAT point we arrived at the inflamed conclusion that it was dingy newspaper practice if there existed a conspiracy of silence in Detroit alongside an energetic effort to chronicle the Alabama story.

The reporter did not claim to know the terms of the agreement, but understood it was made five or six years ago. It was not simply a matter of not identifying Negroes as such in the news—many northern papers adhere to that journalistically indefensible practice—but went to the point of covenanted subordination if not masking of race incident stories.

THE editor decided to see what some long distance phone calls would reveal of this alleged covenant of silence. We must acknowledge that our long distance investigation did not substantiate what we had heard. But the interviews were interesting and there evidently is more of a tale to tell than we were able to gather.

FIRST, you must remember the blazing race riots in Detroit in the summer of 1943. A Negro shot a white man and results were described thus by Newsweek magazine (July 5, 1943):

> When the shooting, the stoning, the knifing and the bludgeoning, the arson and the looting had ended after 24 hours, 35 were dead, some 700 injured, 1,300 under arrest, and a million dollars' worth of property damaged. War production dropped 40%.

IN RECENT years the friction has occurred because of white resentment as Detroit's 300,000 Negroes commenced to move into white residential areas.

Our first call was to Louis J. Kramp, chief of the Associated Press Bureau in Detroit, who talked like an able and forceful newspaperman. He asked his news editor, Charles Kane (or Cain), to come in on the conference phone as he had been in Detroit only three years.

We popped the question of whether there was some sort of conspiracy of silence on the part of Detroit papers and radio to muffle, subordinate or mask race tension and strife stories.

The answer was that presumably there was "some sort of understanding," an agreement to "play down the Negro angle." Its history, scope and provisions they did not know.

These AP executives did say that what the independent Associated Press and the Detroit papers put out on race incidents were sometimes "different."

How far this went beyond the use of "Negro" in identification was not precisely established, we find in examining our notes.

NEXT we phoned John H. Laub, director of Detroit's Commission on Community Relations (15 members, eight citizens and six municipal executives appointed by the mayor; established in May, 1953).

From this interview we derived some amusement. The Hon. Laub, in charge of stifling race conflict, was plainly frightened by the questions of a Confederate agent. He kept asking the editor to give his name again. To the most harmless questions about Detroit race relations, he responded with gross, clumsy evasiveness. Sometimes he waited so long to answer that it seemed the operator had cut him off.

"How disturbed are race relations in Detroit, Mr. Laud?"

"In general, I think race relations are basically sound, though we do have problems."

"What problems, Mr. Laud?"

"The problem areas are in housing and public accommodations."

"Public accommodations — you mean trolleys, buses?"

Bus Boycott Is Settling Down to a Finish Fight

Herald Tribune Fri. 3-9-56

By Robert S. Bird

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar 8.—Four items in the news here today helped to show how the gulf between the whites and Negroes is steadily, though calmly, widening in the Negro but boycott now in its fourth month.

1. Mayor W. A. Gayle revealed that he has received $56 in contributions from fifty-three citizens of Atlanta, for the Montgomery City Bus Lines, Inc., and that he "welcomes" further contributions for the company—to be sent to it directly.

2. The bus company announced that starting next week, Sunday service will be discontinued on all but two of the company's remaining fourteen routes. This is on top of an estimated 33 per cent curtailment of service and a 50 per cent fare rise put into effect earlier in the boycott.

3. The company announced that it is renewing for ten years its franchise, which expired today after twenty years.

4. The Negro boycott leaders announced that they are about to increase their car pool fleets from the present 200 cars to 300 cars, and are opening permanent offices with a paid secretarial staff.

Freely interpreted, these developments mean that neither side is yielding an inch to the other and that the fight is to the finish. And that segregationists in other states are demonstrating, in a small way with dollars, that they are counting on the Montgomery whites still to hold the line against the Negroes.

The question is, where does the boycott go from here?

In a formal sens,e it goes into the state courts on March 19 when the indicted boycott leaders will go on trial for allegedly breaking a 1921 state law, making it a crime for them to carry on such a boycott. But it seems almost certain that even if convictions, fines and jail sentences resulted, that would not deter this boycott movement.

A more dangerous possibility for the community is that the boycott may be heading into a more complicated boycott snarl; one which neither side wants because it could hurt each to almost an incalculable extent.

The businessmen of this community are feeling more and more creepy over the way cross boycotts are springing out from hydra-headed rumor. This has been going on for some time, and is getting worse. As fast as one "spook" boycott is nailed, two more appear.

What happens is that somebody starts a rumor that a certain firm has, for example, contributed to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. This would be a firm which enjoys a share of Negro patronage. Immediately after the report is circulated, the target company finds itself boycotted by white customers.

Works Other Way, Too

Or, the rumor starts among the Negroes that a white company has associated itself with the whites' Citizens Councils. Then the Negroes begin boycotting the company.

In most cases, the affected businesses are afraid to meet the rumor with public denial, because they feel that may give it further currency. But to try to absorb it in silence is costly too.

The Citizens Councils headquarters here is kept quite busy answering telephone calls and letters from persons who have heard various rumors and want to "co-operate" if the rumors are true. State Sen. Samuel Engelhardt, executive secretary of the statewide organization of Citizens Councils, told this correespondent today that his organization has no means of investigating the truth of these reports. He says the Citizens Councils in consequence can only "go straight down the middle, taking no part either for or against the boycotts.

Fear Major Reprisals

These "spook" boycotts, troublesome as they are, are not the big danger, however. The bigger peril that looms is the possibility that one side or the other may be lured or shoved into concerted reprisals on a major scale. It is generally agreed, on both sides, that if the Negroes withdrew their purchasing power from the merchants of downtown Montgomery, these businesses would be in a bad way fast. Up to now the stores have suffered only in a limited way from the bus boycott, for the Negroes still get downtown by their car pool.

The stores report no diminishing of business from the higher priced Negro trade, through some falling off in the volume of lower priced goods and some curtailment of instalment buying. But a real boycott of the stores could be extremely serious for almost all the shops.

Grave Danger for Negroes

Also, it would create a grave danger for the Negroes. It is generally agreed that if the Negroes boycotted the city stores, the whites would instantly retaliate with widespread job dismissals of Negro employees. Most of them depend on white employment for their income. Even worse, the whites own most of the Negro residential quarters. Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes occupy an extensive area inside the city.

This Negro residential area ranges from the slums of Chicken Shack Row and Gold Bug Alley to the fine two-story brick homes on landscaped grounds in what is called the Sugar Hill section. In between are miles of middle class Negro frame homes—neat but not expensive. It is estimated that more than 80 per cent of the Negro dwellings are owned by whites.

Both Sides Frightened

The effect of employment retaliation against the Negroes on rental and mortgage payments to the whites can only be imagined. This is why the enlargement of this bus boycott to a general economic boycott is a bugaboo that frightens both sides. And yet, as each side entrenches itself further, the possibility becomes the greater.

Meanwhile, the bus company stands in the middle. Jack Crenshaw, attorney and spokesman for the Chicago-owned company, tells a sorry tale. In the more than three months of the boycott, he says, the company has lost in the neighborhood of "around $100,000 on gross revenues, not taking into consideration the fare increase." The fare rise was from ten to fifteen cents, but since the buses are virtually empty these days, the added revenue cannot have substantially offset the losses.

Few Negroes on Buses

Although he will not give traffic figures, the general estimate is that about 75 per cent of bus passenger traffic was Negro. Today less than 2 per cent of the Negroes are riding the buses, and they are mostly either very old or handicapped people.

Now that spring has come in with caressing climate — except for occasional tornado warnings —the Negroes are walking to and from their in-town employment with downright pleasure. For those who have any great distance to travel, the car poll is now well organized.

In the beginning, more than 325 cars were volunteered in what turned out to be a somewhat exaggerated outburst of enthusiasm. Gradually over the weeks some drivers found themselves unable to carry on with this volunteer work, or unwilling to put up with police harrassment, and others with old model cars found their cars unable to carry on.

The pool was down to about 200 cars at the beginning of this week. But a reasonably efficient dispatching service had been devised and these 200 cars were doing the work of the larger number at the start of the boycott.

The new effort to bring the number of cars up to 300, together with a smoother functioning dispatching system, should place the Negroes' substitute trasportation system on a solid basis.

As it is almost any Negro can get to any place he wants in the city by walking a short distance to any one of the forty-five pick-up points, most of them on church premises. Several parking lots downtown are the pick-up points for home-going people from the shopping sections to the outlying areas. And anybody who is stranded at any point anywhere in the city can get special service by calling the dispatcher in the little frame building which is boycott headquaters in the Negro section.

Show New Fearlessness

To appreciate all this organizational success, it is necessary to consider this all-omportant fact: The Negroes of Montgomery are demonstrating a new fearlessness of the whites in this boycott.

J. E. Pierce, a Negro political science professor at the Negro Alabama State College here, who is one of the indicted leaders, said to this correspondent: "The Negroes of Montgomery grew up overnight. The day before the boycott they were like children, cowed by the white man. The next day they were a mature people, asking for what is their right. There are enugh of the good things in this country for all of us, and the Negroes of Montgomery are no longer afraid to as for their share."

The tension here has subsided as the boycott has grown prolonged. Whether it will flare again nobody knows. The atmosphere seems to suggest now that both sides are revising their apraisal of the other—and digging in for a long showdown.

Justice Blind in Alabama, Bus Boycott Trial Proves

Call 3-4 Kansas City, Mo. Tues. 3-6-56

By CHARLES H. TORB
NNPA Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Motion denied!

Here, in terse legal language, was Alabama's answer to the Rev. Martin Luther King and, through him, 50,000 Montgomery Negroes on whether the Negroes of Alabama have the right, under statutes to petition, assemble, and peacefully protest their grievances.

It was a justice that was indeed blind. Blind both to the spirit and to the letter of constitutional law. In fining the militant young Montgomery minister $500, and hearing the expected defense notice of appeal, Judge Eugene Carter, with the air of a good southern gentlemen dispensing charity to his faithful retainers, approved a mutual agreement between state and defense lawyers that the 89 other defendants arrested with Rev. King remain free on their original bails until such time as the remedies in appeal sought in the King case have been exhausted.

No Farcial Trial

Contrary to expectations, this trial was no farcial performance—no arrogant show of Dixie justice at its worst. It was not dispensed by a tobacco-chewing backwoods judge addressing his petitioners of color as "boy," or Rufus, or Mandy. It was prosecuted by able solicitors; the best the city of Montgomery and the Montgomery City Bus Lines could obtain.

They knew well the law under which they had elected to try as conspirators Rev. King and those associated with him in operating the activities of the Montgomery Improvement association under whose leadership the Negro in Montgomery has shown the world an almost unbelievable miracle of Negro cohesion and determination.

The old statute they had dug up in their effort to "put an end to this foolishness" had been tailored to their specifications by another generation of Alabamans who at the time were rather desperate about the increase in union memberships. Its original target was against white workers. Now, in Alabama's great hour of need it was lying there, rusty, unused never repealed, to be used against this unprecedented show of Negro solidarity.

Outcome No Surprise

Among the brilliant staff of Negro lawyers who conducted the defense, there was never any doubt about the outcome, though each of the eight scrupulous refrained from such predictions.

Charles Langford, Arthur Shores, Fred D. Gray, Robert Carter, Orzell Billingsley, Peter Hall, Dr. C. Eubanks Tucker and Edmund Ragan, huddled together over the counsel table, exchanging notes, ferreting out witnesses from the tips handed them by Montgomery eaders, were not simply trying a simple misdeameanor in a small-town Circuit Court.

They knew what they were doing and they knew that they, or a hundred different of their counterparts have to be doing the same thing all over the stubborn Southland and before the fine-sounding pronouncements of the United States Supreme Court can have real meaning for the Negro in Montgomery who must either walk or ride the city buses and hear, over and over again, "to the rear, you n-----s."

Judge Eugene Carter knew that they were not really trying the case before his court. They were trying it before the Supreme Court of the United States, and to their everlasting credit legal experts who watched their thoroughness, nodded their approval of their efforts.

Objection, overruled. Objection, overruled. Until one lost count after it became apparant that the ratio would run something 20 overruled to 1 sustained.

But the counsel for Rev. King and his associates well knew that some nine million of Negroes in 17 states of the South were really the clients, their real clients.

So, they refused to be ruffled by the special inflection State Prosecutor Thettford gave to his precise "Nigra" when referring to colored people. The two other solicitors found it quite easy to pronounce the acceptable Negro.

Judge Carter was a "Nigra" pronouncer, too, as he sat calm, detached, radiating keen enjoyment of his role, there upon the bench holding the ramparts for the anti-desegregationists — holding the fort for the Folsoms, Eastlands, Longs and leaders of the reluctant South . . . buying time for crumbling confederacy that feels its birth pains again but is afraid to conceive.

As Expensive As Possible

Appeals are long, drawn-out affairs, and costly, too. So, the South, Alabama, Montgomery, Judge Carter are making it as expensive as possible and as long delayed as trick laws, manifestos, Citizens Councils, economic squeezes, and police state justice can make it.

The result is inevitable, but Alabama bought time at Montgomery, but they have done little to ease the plight of northern investors who have their money sunk into the Montgomery City Lines.

Will Negroes now board the buses

Some 70 Negroes right outside the courthouse, minutes from the finale, told this reporter "No." Some added, "Never."

They waited outside to cheer, to hug, and to kiss the little leader they have come to trust and adore, and to crowd around him and his attractive and loyal wife with cries, "Hail the King." "Don't worry, we're still walking."

And the city of Montgomery, too, is paying a dear price for this show of Dixie legal strongarm. It has been pretty expensive, this putting "those Negroes in their places."

Thousands Lost

Montgomery City lines has lost more than $300,000 in revenue they once collected from Negroes who no longer use their buses.

Before the boycott, (as one Negro witness, Mrs. Georgia Gilmore, declared on the witness stand) bus officials couldn't tell the white money from the Negro money.

Now they can.

The white money is far from enough to support the operation. Negroes' testimony revealed during the trial, are 70 percent of the company's customers.

Pardon. Ex-customers.

The city of Montgomery loses, too. Its interest was a lush two percent of the gross income, but that's only money.

Far more important, though, is that observers with eyes to see and ears to hear concede that it has forever lost its power to divide, disrupt, intimidate, and consequently to exploit its Negro citizens.

BIG CROWD PRESENT.—Part of the big crowd which was present at the Montgomery, Ala., courthouse when the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist church, was found guilty of conspiracy in connection with the four-month-old bus boycott in Montgomery. Throughout the trial, the people of Montgomery filled the courtroom of Judge Eugene Carter and overflowed into the corridors. The courtroom itself holds only 250 spectators. Hundreds failed to get in but they remained on the outside to give the Rev. Mr. King their moral support.

2 Negro Bus Riders Tell Of Boycotters' Threats

Constitution Wed. 3-21-56

Atlanta, Ga

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 20 (AP)—State's attorneys sought to show today that Negroes have been threatened for riding buses during the segregation boycott in Montgomery, but only part of the testimony along that line was allowed.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, presiding at the trial of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., one of 90 Negroes indicted on boycotting charges, threw out the entire testimony of one Negro witness who said his life had been threatened.

But the judge permitted two other Negroes to testify about threats they said they received.

At the same time, defense attorneys brought from one prosecution witness a statement that Negro ministers he had heard speak at mass meetings during the boycott had made a point of appealing to their race to shun violence. That witness was Joe Azbell, city editor of the Montgomery Advertiser.

The hearing recessed until 9 a.m. tomorrow. The state indicated it may finish presenting its case then.

Azbell told the court that a decision was made at a mass meeting the night of Dec. 5 to continue the bus boycott which originally had been scheduled for that one day.

He quoted King as telling the mass meeting that the Negro race wouldn't "retreat one inch in our campaign to win our democratic rights."

Wed. 3-21-56

The state in two days of testimony has attempted to link King to what the prosecution calls a conspiracy to boycott the racially segregated Montgomery City Lines buses.

Atlanta, Ga.

Despite defense objections, prosecution also got into the record testimony today from seven bus drivers about incidents of violence against the bus line early in the boycott. Five buses were fired on in Negro sections of Montgomery and two others were struck by bricks or similar missiles.

Earlier, a Negro leader told how a smooth-running motor pool provides transportation for the boycotting Negroes.

Other witnesses testified that the Montgomery Improvement Assn., which was formed the day the boycott started, arranged the pool and has paid for gasoline and other expenses.

King is president of the improvement association, and the state is trying to link him to what it calls a "conspiracy" to hinder operation of the segregated Montgomery City Lines, Inc., a privately operated company which has a franchise for city bus service.

The indictments against King and 89 other defendants awaiting trial charge violation of a state law which prohibits any conspiracy or other agreement, "without cause or legal excuse," to impede the operations of a lawful business.

At one point in the proceedings, Judge Carter, who will decide King's fate in the absence of a jury, said he thought the state had already established "a prima facie case of conspiracy." But he did not say the prosecution had succeeded in linking King to it.

Rufus Lewis, chairman of the association's transportation committee, told the court how the committee inaugurated the car pool soon after the Negroes stopped riding city buses in protest against segregated seating facilities.

Lewis said the committee arranged to pay volunteer drivers $4 a day for use of their cars and bought gasoline for some. He said 200 Negro autoists volunteered to get other Negroes to and from work.

Although he would not concede that the purpose of the pool was to "keep Negroes from" patronizing the bus company, the witness did say its function is to provide transportation for those "who want rides in preference to riding the buses."

He said the committee worked out a detailed list of "dispatch" stations to get Negroes to work in the morning and "pickup" stations to get them home at night.

Are Gandhi's Principles At Work in Montgomery?

P. 6 Courier Sat. 3-10-56

By HAROLD L. KEITH
(Courier Staff Writer)

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Two of the highest principles to which mankind subscribes have been introduced into the Montgomery (Ala.) boycott and thus bring to mind the little brown man of India who showed the world during the turbulent first half of the twentieth century that "love" and "truth" are formidable weapons against evil.

Mohandas Karamchad Gandhi, who was known to his intimates as "Bapu" and to the rest of the world as "Mahatma," often answered questioners that truth is "my sole objective" in explaining his tireless battles on behalf of oppressed India.

The preachers of Montgomery, Ala., have brought into play the same set of values that the late Mr. Gandhi used.

Mr. Gandhi, a disciple of the principle of "non-violence" or "ahimsa" was led along this path by his intensive readings into the New Testament of the Bible and the Bhagavad Gita, the Holy Book of Hinduism.

He once stated, "When I read in the Sermon on the Mount such passages as 'Resist not him that is evil, but whosoever smiteth thee on thy cheek, turn to him the other also' . . . I was simply overjoyed."

Gandhi felt that non-violence was impossible without a living faith in God. A non-violent man can do nothing save by the power and grace of God.

"Without it, he won't have the courage to die without anger, without fear, and without retaliation."

The principle which Gandhi stressed to motivate the Indian nation's non-violent campaign for independence from British rule was that of satyagraha or "insistence on truth."

SATYAGRAHA STEMS from the Sanskrit language of ancient India. Brokn down it stands for "truth" through "satya" and "insistence" through "agraha."

The weapon used by Gandhi was that of "hartal" which means literally, "stoppage of business" or "boycott." Gandhi felt that the way to reach truth is through love. He said that evil must be opposed but not by making the evildoer suffer. In his words, one must influence the evildoer to change his ways by undergoing suffering oneself . . . even if need be, unto death.

According to the Vedic scriptures of the Hindu faith, truth (dharma) is equivalent to ritual correctness and propriety, not conformity.

WHILE IN South Africa, protesting against the status of indentured laborers in 1893, Gandhi developed his non-violent techniques.

The ministers of Montgomery, Ala., may or may not have been inspired by this little brown man . . . who was slain by a bullet fired by a Mahasabha extremist, but they are most certainly adhering to his principles.

Likewise, Montgomery's 42,000 Negroes have showed a willingness to suffer by walking to work for truth.

Negro In Bus Case Is Found Guilty Of DWI

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 3. —(UP)— A Negro attorney active in the bus boycott court suits here was found guilty Friday of drunken driving and fined $100 in Recorder's Court.

Attorney Charles D. Langford received the fine after Judge John B. Scott took the case under advisement Thursday.

Attorney Fred Gray, another figure active in the boycott fight, was Langford's legal representative. Gray appeared before the judge to hear the brief decision and then immediately filed a motion for appeal.

Has History Overtaken Us?

Pittsburgh, Pa.

THOSE among us who are constrained to believe the "American Dilemma" will not be resolved short of twenty years more, in the least, may find it strange and absolutely incredible if, as appears, the hand of destiny, at Montgomery, is beckoning our generation, both colored and white, to shoulder the Cross which each of the last two generations, in turn, held at arm's length. European philosopher-historians long have diagnosed the infectious social wound which restrains American democracy and, upon mature deliberation, decided it must prove fatal (as it almost did in the States' Rights War 1861-1865) unless sterilized, at long last, by the elixir of Christianity.

GANDHI
. . . the lion quit

Henry Thomas Buckle and Arnold J. Toynbee, in their monumental works of history, have constantly predicted that the Negro's answer to disinheritance, in America, would be invincible only if indoctrinated with Protestant ethic. Born without a positive intellectual tradition, we have been unable to correctly interpret such postulations.

Dr. Buckle, in 1841, said our proper religious function was to find new concepts for Christianity. In 1941, Dr. Toynbee, another Englishman, was more direct, saying: "If the miracle (of kindling the ashes of Caucasian Christianity) were indeed to be performed by an American Negro church, that would be the most dynamic response to the challenge of social penalization that had yet been made by man."

At Montgomery, Alabama, history threatens to overtake us, in this generation, here and now, under the initiating sponsorship of the Rev. Martin L. King and the First Baptist Church . . . shepherding 40,000 forlorn souls.

A gentle, non-violent protest, as launched by the Rev. Mr. King and his ministerial contemporaries, finds its highest expression in the Christian religion. It is an invincible method for seceding from illegal, administrative jim crow as affects the Montgomery bus system. Prayer and God are wonderful allies for humankind . . . and both seem to comprise basic foundation for the Montgomery boycott.

Here, of a sudden, the precepts of Jesus Christ and Mohandas Gandhi loom level with our world . . . forcing pause upon Dixie whites who are working with demonic determination, to preserve, in the South, the very type of civilization they are denouncing in the world at large. We should remember that Gandhi, alone among mortals, twisted the tail of the British Lion with simple, religious ethic . . . a feat which Philip's Spanish Armada, Bonaparte's uncanny legions, Hindenberg's furor titanicus and Hitler's wehrmacht,

The Montgomery spark, kindled when a tired, humble woman was forced to vacate her seat in favor of white Montgomery school children, may eventually power spiritual light for the whole American nation.

The unexpected turn of events has driven official Montgomery into legal quicksands. The whole truth resides in a Pittsburgh Post-Gazette editorial, February 25, to wit: "There is absolutely no excuse for the arrests of Montgomery Negroes whose only offense is to advise their followers not to patronize a public bus line that discriminates against them."

Before white Montgomery agrees to surrender nineteenth century barbarism, in exchange for twentieth century humanitarianism, violence may be perpetrated. The British jailed Gandhi, at Poona, India, as recently as 1944; but the gleam which first flamed in his eyes, from the moment of the Amritsar massacre, in 1919, did not dim until twenty-eight years later, in August, 1947, India was freed by a Britain which no longer could endure its own conscience.

The Montgomery movement, at once religious, political and economic, is beautifully ploughed up soil; leaving administrative white Montgomery to search its soul and, eventually, to counsel white Montgomery and white Dixie they live in a spiritual vacuum.

Pastor voted out, 40-0—

Congregation ousts bus boycott figure

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 18—(AP)—Dissention within a Negro church congregation resulted last night in the ouster of the minister who had played a controversial part in Montgomery's Negro bus boycott.

By a 40-0 vote with a number of abstentions, the congregation of the Bell Street Baptist Church decided to remove the Rev. U. J. Fields.

The 25-year-old minister was not available for comment.

Mon. 6-18-56

ADELL ROBINSON, chairman of the board of deacons, said the vote was "the only thing we could do to satisfy the membership." He said dissatisfaction in the congregation that had existed for "quite a while" might have been brought to a head last Monday when Fields criticized boycott leaders.

THE PASTOR told reporters then that funds of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., coordinating agency for the boycott, were being misappropriated and its leaders subordinating the anti-segregation protest to personal interests.

Both charges were denied by MIA officials.

Another congregation leader, who refused to be identified, said the "false charges" were the direct cause of the ouster. He said Fields told the congregation just before it voted that he had been misquoted in details of his charges but stood by the substance.

The preacher had been in public trouble with his parishoners in mid-March when a group tried to turn him out of his pulpit. Fields said at the time a small group disapproved of his boycott activities. Until his resignation last Monday he was recording secretary of the MIA.

The church leader said the congregation dropped by about half after the March dissention.

Two fire engines and an ambulance were called to Fields' home Thursday night on a false alarm that police said might have been intended to harass him.

Negroes in Miami reject boycott idea

MIAMI, Fla., June 18—(AP)—Negroes have rejected the idea of a boycott to force integration on Miami's buses.

Instead, said leaders of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored people, they will file suit in federal court challenging the constitutionality of Miami's bus segregation laws.

A RESOLUTION condemning bus boycotts as "untenable" was adopted at a mass meeting of about 400 Negroes, including NAACP leaders, yesterday.

The resolution said bus segregation is outdated, that Miami Transit Co. should employ Negro drivers on predominantly Negro lines, and that legal action should be started to end bus segregation.

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney representing the NAACP, said he will file the suit "very soon."

E. L. DAVIS, Graves' law partner, said the fight is not with the bus company but "it is with the people who pass and refuse to revoke segregation laws."

Davis added:

"We intend to fight the laws and the best approach is through federal court."

Bus-Boycott Parties Sued By Detectives

MONTGOMERY, July 20 (AP)—Two city detectives whose squad car was involved in a wreck with a station wagon used to carry bus boycotting Montgomery Negroes filed suit today for $1000 damages each.

Named defendants were Alberta James, who was driving the station wagon at the time of the accident on a downtown street May 23, the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church which owns the wagon, and the Montgomery Improvement Assn. which operates the car pool transportation system the Negroes have adopted to replace segregated city buses.

Detectives Jack Shows and K. W. Jones claimed "severe personal injuries."

Bus boycott lawyer accused of drunk driving

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 18—(AP)—Charles D. Langford Negro attorney active in Montgomery's long bus boycott, was arrested by city police this morning on a charge of driving while intoxicated.

Asst. Police Chief Marvin Stanley said a report by Arresting Officers A. E. Bland and C. R. Ross related they stopped Langford shortly after 2 a.m. because of what they called improper driving. He was taken to jail then on the drunk driving charge.

Langford was released on $200 bond and a hearing in Traffic Court set for July 26.

CITY, STATE HEADS ACT

Highest Court Asked To Upset Alabama Bus Segregation

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 8-24-56

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23 (UP)—The Supreme Court was asked today to overturn a decision that outlawed racial segregation on the city buses of Montgomery, Ala.

A boycott of the bus system by Montgomery Negroes has been in effect for many months. They won a decision in a special three-judge federal court last June 5 that state and city laws requiring separate seating of the races are unconstitutional.

The lower court ordered both the Montgomery Board of Commissioners and the Alabama Public Service Commission to stop enforcing the laws.

Today's appeals were filed by Walter J. Knabe, Montgomery attorney on behalf of the board and by State Attorney General John Patterson for the commission.

Patterson argued that the state commission has never sought to enforce segregation on Montgomery city lines because the state motor carrier law does not apply to vehicles operating wholly within city limits.

He said the lower court itself recognized this fact but said involvement of the state commission in the case "would be harmless . . . even if erroneous."

"We most emphatically disagree," Patterson said.

He contended that the commission has a right to be free of such court orders and the costs of appealing them.

Knabe argued that the federal court had no jurisdiction in the situation.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—City and state authorities Thursday brought the celebrated Montgomery, Ala., bus segregation dispute to the Supreme Court.

Attorneys asked the court to overturn the decision of a special three-judge Federal court last June 5 which struck down state and city statutes requiring separate seating of whites and Negroes.

The appeals were filed by Walter J. Knabe of Montgomery on behalf of the city Board of Commissioners and by state Atty. Gen. John Patterson for the Alabama Public Service Commission.

Convenes Oct. 1

The court, now in recess, convenes for the 1956-57 term on Oct. 1. But it will not act in the case until the other parties to the lawsuit, a group of Negro riders, have a chance to answer the appeals.

The lower court ordered both the city board and the state commission to cease enforcing the segregation laws.

Mr. Patterson argued that the state commission has never sought to enforce segregation on Montgomery city lines because the state motor carrier law does not apply to vehicles operating wholly within city limits.

He said the lower court itself recognized this fact but said involvement of the state commission in the case "would be harmless . . . even if erroneous."

"We most emphatically disagree," Mr. Patterson said.

He contended that the commission has a right to be free of such court orders and the costs of appealing them.

Mr. Knabe argued that the Federal court had no jurisdiction in the situation. But he said even if it did, it should have held off until the constitutionality of the laws were tested in state courts.

Mr. Knabe said the bus facilities were unquestionably equal for both races. He challenged the complaint that enforced separation is a violation of the "equal protection of the laws" guaranteed in the 14th Amendment.

"The intangible factors which the Supreme Court considered most relevant in the school segregation cases are not present with equal force in this bus case," Mr. Knabe said.

Lawsuits Failed

"Moreover, certainly in so mundane a field as public transportation if a state provides equal physical facilities and equality in other tangible factors, it should be left to its own devices so far as police power and legislation are concerned."

The case started when attorneys filed a complaint against the city and state on behalf of Negro riders and asked for establishment of the special three-judge court.

Negroes have been boycotting the Montgomery buses for many months. Lawsuits against ringleaders have failed to stop the movement.

Political Implications Seen In Cases of Racial Tension.

By Allan C. Brownfeld. Fri. 3-9-56

The boycott in Montgomery of the segregated bus facilities, outbreaks of violence on the campus of the University of Alabama, refusal by the University of Mississippi to permit guest speakers to discuss the issue of segregation, the killing of an NAACP leader in Georgia, the murder of 14-year-old Emmett Till in Mississippi, all go to show that one of the major issues in the 1956 Presidential campaign will be that of civil rights.

The only conclusion to be drawn is that the Negro vote is moving in the direction of the party which answers the call of civil rights and liberties with action—not words.

Urges All U.S. Walk to Work In Step With Montgomery Negroes.

By Donald B. Allen

I have been tremendously impressed by the simple dignity of the Montgomery Negroes in resisting discrimination by simply walking to work. Their unwillingness to resort to violence and their resort to prayer is an example for all of us.

I suggest that one day be selected next month when everyone in America agrees to walk to work. This would show the world that the overwhelming majority of us are in step with the Montgomery Negroes.

Your articles regarding the tragic racial disturbances in Alabama have been read with interest, but you may be able to tell the public why this 26-year-old colored woman (a little old for college) attempted to enter the University of Alabama in the face of many other colleges offering scholarships. Does this not clearly show that it is not education she seeks, but that her one object is to create racial disturbances?

Another point is the complete injustice of a blanket law covering all states on an issue as serious as this. Laws regarding liquor, which is in no way as paramount as the race question, are left to each state.

Conviction Desired

Reactions to Trial Of Rev. King Vary

Courier P. 1 (part) Sat. 3-31-56

By EVELYN CUNNINGHAM

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Nobody—but nobody—was opinionless following the boycott conviction of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. Many weren't saying what they thought but, for the most part, there was wide and free discussion of the trial.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Later that evening, at a mass meeting in the Holt Street Baptist Church, Dr. King declared that "Maybe the idea of freedom in the Southland will be born right here in the cradle of the Confederacy."

Sat. 3-31-56

He told the hymn-singing audience that "freedom doesn't come on a silver platter. Some of the things we have to go through are a necessary part of our campaign. There can never be growth without growing pains."

State Solicitor William Thetford had no comment after the trial. "We don't do much commention around here," he said with a wide smile.

Dr. Lawrence Riddick of Atlanta University said, "If I said what I think they'd hold me for contempt of court."

R. H. Shores, a contractor and builder of Montgomery and father of Defense Attorney Arthur D. Shores, felt that despite the verdict, defense attorneys did a "wonderful" job in the manner in which they handled the case.

The Rev. Ralph O. Abernathy, second man in the protest and pastor of First Baptist Church, said "I expected something like this. It will only strenghten our cause, give our people the added determination to fight it through to the Supreme Court. In the beginning we were confident we were conducting our protest within the confines of the law and we are still of that opinion."

Congressman Charles Diggs of Detroit, Mich., observed, "This again makes it abundantly clear that there is one kind of justice for whites and one kind for Negroes in the South."

Frances Rutledge: "I'm kinda hot now, so I ain't gonna never get on no bus as long as I stay black."

Mrs. Cleonia Taylor: "I've never been so disgusted in my life."

Miss Peggy Taylor: "I'm mad."

Thomas Jenkins: "It's no more than I expected. I've been working around this place (the court house) for the last twenty-five years. And I can just about tell what they'll do in court."

John Graham: "I prayed all night for a conviction. This way, it's better for us. If they'd let him go, we'd'a lost in the long run."

W. L. Wilkins: "I think it's rotten."

Mrs. Mentha Johnson: "We're still happy, still in the protest and we're still going to be Christian about it."

L. J. Burton: "One of the worst things I ever heard in my whole life."

Unidentified Lady: "All I can say is the buses are gonna dry rot now."

"Supporting boycott" of LATL promised Alabama

Los Angeles, Calif.

A "supporting boycott" of Los Angeles Transit Lines will be urged "within a few weeks" if demands of the Montgomery bus boycotters are not met, Manuel D. Talley, action director of the National Consumers Mobilization, announced today.

Talley, who went to federal prison as a conscientious objector during World War II, announced that his organization has written a letter to the Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery boycott, advising him that "You may count on us for a withdrawal of patronage from the Los Angeles affiliate of National City Lines if your just demands are not set soon.

"If you can walk, we can walk," Talley said he told the Alabama leader.

National City Lines, which owns the Montgomery company outright, owns 59 percent of the stock in Los Angeles Transit Lines.

During World War II, E. C. Houghton, president of LATL, headed the Montgomery company.

Last week, in Chicago, where the branch Naacp did the research which disclosed part or whole ownership by National City Lines of bus and trolley systems of 40 cities in 17 states, a one-day boycott was proposed by a provisional committee, to demonstrate sympathy for the Montgomery boycotters and to help achieve their anti-discrimination goals.

In addition to LATL, Natonal City Lines owns, or owns an interest in, the public transportation systems of more than 10 California cities.

In addition to Talley's announcement, action against National City Lines was taken on the local front by a delegation of citizens waiting on Houghton and urging through him that the giant trust "immediately hire" Negro drivers in Montgomery and "take a positive stand against jim crow seating."

Taking part in the meeting were Sidney Moore, field organizer, Local 347, AFL-CIO Building Service Union; the Rev. George Cofield, pastor, Mt. Corinth Baptist church; the Rev. V. J. Waldron, pastor, Evangelical United Brethren church; Mrs. Willie Thomas and James Burford, Florence FEP committee; Herschel Chubb, Building Service Union.

While admitting that the Montgomery situation is causing National City Lines, of which he is a director, "grave concern", Houghton blamed the union refusal to admit Negroes for the company's failure to hire them, and Alabama segregation laws for jim crow seating.

National City Lines is presently being sued by the Naacp, along with the Montgomery City Council to outlaw the segregation.

Patronage of the Montgomery buses has fallen off to the point where the NCL may give up its franchise there, Houghton was reported as stating.

In a letter to the Rev. Waldron, referring to the leaflet he co-sponsored; "A Call to Action to Support the Courageous People of Montgomery . . . ", Stephen O'Donnell, director of public relations for LATL, sought to turn protest against National City Lines away from the local company and to Chicago where the head office is located.

O'Donnell marshalled interracial experiences of LATL to demonstrate "our attitude here" even though the local company's "attitude" was not questioned.

He recalled that 10 years ago, after employing minorities "for many years" as track workers and in company shops and stores, "we decided to employ Negroes . . . as operators.

"As of Mar. 4, the company employs 161 Negro operators out of a total of 1421."

O'Donnell noted that "Negro operators have won their share of awards given for the measurable aspects of performance, such as safe driving . . . courtesy. . . ."

LATL is "grateful", O'Donnell added, "that we do not have to contend with the problems facing Montgomery. . . . "

While commending the local community for 'admirable restraint in the methods selected . . . expressing support for . . . Montgomery," the trolley executive added:

"But I hardly think it would help the Montgomery Negro community to achieve its objective, in fact, I believe it would further handicap them, to draw Los Angeles Transit Lines into this controversy in any way."

March Twenty-eighth: Cash Wednesday

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 3-24-56

Ash Wednesday came this year on Feb. 15; Cash Wednesday comes on March 28, a day of universal prayer for the success of the unprecedented bus boycott by the heroic Negroes of Montgomery, Ala., and a day when every American Negro should give one hour's pay in support of that boycott.

A decisive battle of pride and principle is being fought out on the plains of southern Alabama, with courageous and determined Negroes seeking full citizenship status on one side and the supporters of vicious tradition on the other.

On Dec. 5, 1955, the freedom-loving Negro citizens of Montgomery, first capital of the erstwhile Confederacy, rose in indignation over the persecution of Mrs. Rosa Parks, a colored woman of finest character and culture, who refused to give up her seat to a white man in a local bus, and was arrested and fined for her courage.

Montgomery Negroes who honor their womanhood and are sick and tired of being pushed around as second-class citizens, revolted against this vicious tradition, which began immediately after the territory was stolen from the Alabama Indians of the Creek Confederacy and became a Negro slave state in 1819.

Montgomery Negroes refused after Dec. 5, 1955, to ride the city buses which, because of state jim-crow laws, are symbols of all the insults, discriminations and persecution to which they have been subjected for generations.

This historic demonstration has cost the 50,000 colored citizens of Montgomery, Ala., much effort, time and money, but they have never faltered one instant, and the costly bus boycott goes on to the admiration of the entire world.

On March 28, the Negroes of the United States and their white friends will repair to their houses of worship and pray to God for the success of this dramatic demonstration of manliness in Montgomery, and for the souls of white folk who blindly insist on perpetuating the hateful customs deriving from chattel slavery.

But along with that great spiritual demonstration (which will certainly be without parallel in American history) it is necessary for every Negro who is proud of his people and hates the trappings of slavery which smother them, to give material evidence of his interest and sincerity.

An economic battle must be fought with economic ammunition: that is to say, coin of the Republic, dollars and cents, so that the fight may be pressed to a successful conclusion; and the call is for every American Negro on March 28 to send one-hour's pay to the Montgomery Improvement Association, c/o Rev. M. L. King Jr., Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, Montgomery, Ala.

That money will be used by the association to bankroll the militant opposition to insulting jim crowism in Montgomery and everywhere in the South, and thus speed the day when American Negroes everywhere will finally be free.

Today our people are 96 per cent employed, with a larger working force percentage-wise than whites, they are getting the highest wages in their history, and they have no excuse for failing to help.

Make out your checks or U. S. money orders for one hour's pay and mail it NOW—then pray to God on March 28 for a truly free America!

2500 Orleanians Turn Out To Give Aid To Montgomery Case

Weekly Star Orleans La.

Sat. 3-24-56

By Cleveland Williams

A throng of more than 2500 Orleanians crowded Union Bethel Methodist church last Sunday singing, praying and raising a financial offering in excess of $3000 in a mass sympathetic demonstration to assist the bus boycotting ministers and citizens of Montgomery, Ala., in their struggle for justice and fair play.

The large gathering, many lined in the street because of the lack of standing room, were told that "the time is out for segregation of any kind" in a passionate plea by the Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., president of the N. O. Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, the principal speaker. The rally was sponsored by the Alliance.

The Rev. Dr. Davis pointed out that today, as in the early phases of our American history, "where there is unity there is strength." This is demonstrated in Montgomery where more than 100 days Negroes on the "grass root leader level" have used the non-violent democratic way to illustrate their demand for ending "Jim-Crow" in public transportation, he explained.

"It is Montgomery today," Dr. Davis observed, "but it could be any place else tomorrow, even here in New Orleans. Negroes here have been tired for years of sitting behind screens and standing up when there are numerous vacant seats elsewhere on the bus. What are we going to do about it in New Orleans?"

Amid repeated applause, the smooth-toned speaker continued:

"The citizens' council of New Orleans, inspired by Leander Perez, is asking for 50,000 whites to join hands in fighting integration, and today I am issuing the call to 100,000 Negroes in this vicinity to rise up and let Perez and his followers realize that the time is out for segregation and all that this evil monster stands for, and in keeping with the United States Supreme Court decision, we will fight to run it from the land."

"How will we fight?" he asked.

"We are going to fight on our knees," he cried, "and with the dollar bill." (A chorus of "Amens" and applause greeted the popular religious leader.)

Reading from a recently published white citizens' council pamphlet on "Segregation or Disintegration" calling for organization or destruction, the Rev. Mr. Davis called for "Integration and Organization" through legal means for all American citizens.

"Religion must meet the crisis of our day," he emphasized. "With work afoot to destroy the NAACP in Louisiana, the Church must unite its strength and continue the fight for freedom. If we in the United States are to be the leading nation of this world, all of its citizens must be full Americans in every sense of the word . . . and not on a part-time basis. The passage way to this has been opened by the nine Supreme Court judges, and we, as Negroes, must go forward."

He labeled the organizers of the citizens' council today as the same leadership of yesteryears who told black Americans to be law-abiding citizens while they use all sorts of trickery to flaunt and defy every effort Negro citizens attempt to follow the letter of the U. S. Constitution and Supreme Court.

Praising the progress made by the NAACP in the South, Rev. Davis said: "If our country is to maintain leadership of democracy in this world, then we must be Americans free from segregation," noting that Negroes here will never forget the progress made by the Louisiana NAACP chapter.

Sat. 3-24-56

Rev. Davis concluded by asking that churches take leadership and fight through prayer and dollars.

The final appeal was laid by the Rev. Morris Burrell. The response was heartwarming with women setting the pace, followed by professional leaders, ministers, a host of young people and many others in the endless parade which lasted for more than an hour.

Tears filled the eyes of many as an elderly paralytic making a vainless effort to open her purse was rescued by a man nearby. Asked how much did she want to put into the collection, she smiled: "Take what you want . . . all if necessary."

The Rev. P. W. Raphael, president, First District Baptist association, was master of ceremonies. Others participating on the program were the Rev. W. W. Creecy, president, Liberty Missionary Baptist and Education association; the Rev. T. N. Washington, pastor, Second Baptist church, and the Rev. R. D. Sherard, Beecher Memorial Congregational.

(In Cleveland, Ohio, last week citizens of all races and creeds rallied to the cause, raising $7,000 for the Alabama bus boycotters.)

Locally, the total Sunday represented an incomplete report. It is believed that the actual amount will be disclosed during a special meeting Thursday of the Alliance, according to the Rev. Davis. The group will meet at the YMCA.

During the meeting Sunday, newsmen observed many persons unable to gain admittance into the jammed church sending contributions in relays from the sidewalk, marking one of the few times in city history that Orleanians have responded in such an organized manner.

Observers felt that the same sense of wanting to do something should be carried over into a mass drive to get more Negro citizens registered so that ballot-wise the Negro can put officials in office who will uphold the laws of the land.

Music was furnished by the Union Bethel choir.

Davis significantly pointed out that in "Louisiana $100,000 has been appropriated by the state legislature, tax monies of yours and mine, to tell us that we, Negroes, are second-class citizens. We face a crisis and the quality of our strength is now being tested."—(Staffer Jim Hall Photos.)

Set Deadline To End Ala. Bus Bias

Defender 6-30-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — A three judge court issued an injuction last week ordering an end to bus jim crow in Montgomery and the state of Alabama by June 29.

The injunction was handed down by the same federal jurists who on June 5 invalidated the state and city bus segregation laws.

Effective date of the injunction was withheld 10 days, however, to allow for an appeal. If no appeal is forthcoming then the injunction will go into effect automatically.

STUDY APPEAL

Officials said they would have to study the situation before deciding whether to appeal the case directly to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Negro attorneys who won the legal battle that came during Montgomery's half-year-old Negro bus boycott in protest to the laws also said they were uncertain of their move.

The judges said a notice of appeal during the 10-day period would keep the injunction's suspension in effect until a new suspension order can be written to last until the appeal is decided.

If no appeal is made by June 29, the injunction will automatically go into effect.

The order says:

City and state authorities are permanently enjoined and restrained from enforcing . . . statutes or ordinances requiring the segregation of white and Negro passengers in the operation of public motor bus transportation facilities in the city of Montgomery."

Judge Richard T. Rives of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans said an appeal would be a preferred case when the Supreme Court reconvenes in October because of the suspended injunction.

DELAY SEEN

Rives said if an appeal takes the case to the high court "a decision will probably not be made before early next year at the earliest."

If the decision is appealed, Rives said, Negro attorneys could then ask the Supreme Court to set aside the suspension until the case is decided.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. that coordinates the boycott, said the "prevailing opinion" among members is that most of the city's 50,000 Negroes would continue to shun city buses "until some definite action is taken" to end bus segregation.

dolph, President of Sleeping Car Porters.

RIP U. S. CHAMBER

The Negro and white delegates heard Dr. T. R. M. Howard, N. A. A. C. P. board member from Mound Bayou, Miss., who appeared as a convention speaker.

Dr. Howard blasted a recent statement by Boyd Campbell, head of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, who declared that NAACP has been responsible for stirring up trouble among Negroes in the South on the issue of desegregation. The union officials commended the work of the NAACP and urged its support by the labor movement.

Defendants in the complaint challenging validity of Montgomery city and Alabama state laws are Montgomery City Lines, which operates the city's only bus service; the City Commission, whose three members all belong to the White Citizens Council; the chief of police; two bus drivers, and the members of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

Five Negroes originally filed the suit, but the name of Mrs. Jeaneatta Reese was stricken from the complaint after she told Mayor W. A. Gayle in the presence of newspaper men that she did not know what she was signing.

The court in a 2-1 opinion ruled on the segregation issue June 5 but didn't put the order into effect. Instead, they gave the attorneys two weeks to submit written recommendations on what form it should take.

How much time after tomorrow it will take to get the order prepared wasn't known. U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. said there is no way to tell.

Perhaps the most significant question still unanswered is whether the panel will order city and state authorities to stop enforcing bus segregation laws in Montgomery immediately, or whether they will grant a stay of execution pending an appeal to the Supreme Court.

If they put an injunction into effect at once against continued enforcement of the laws, it will mean segregation as far as the panel is concerned must end then and there.

If they grant a stay, the order will have no effect until the Supreme Court reviews it.

But whichever course the panel takes, that action can be appealed to the Supreme Court without waiting for the merits of the case to be presented on appeal.

The city or state can ask the higher court to order a stay pending the appeal, for example. Or, if the three-judge panel grants a stay and delays its actual integration order, the Negroes who are contesting the laws can ask the Supreme Court to set it aside.

Alabama Bus Bias Laws Face Court Test Today

Herald Tribune P. 3

Fri. 5-11-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 10 (AP).—Bitterly contested city and state bus segregation laws, upheld only yesterday in a state court, face another, perhaps more significant test, in Federal Court tomorrow.

A three-judge panel, whose decision can be appealed directly to the United States Supreme Court, has been convened to hear a suit by four Negroes challenging the racial barriers responsible for a mass boycott of city buses in Montgomery.

Injunction Sought

Th esuit, filed as an outgrowth of the boycott, now in its sixth month, seeks an injunction to stop city and state officials from enforcing the anti-race mixing laws, and a declaratory judgment holding the statutes unconstitutional.

Since some judicial officers, including Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in Montgomery and the Public Service Commission in South Carolina, contend the April 23 ruling of the Supreme Court did not decide the segregation issue, the trial here may produce the first clear-cut finding by the Supreme Court.

The action of the three-judge panel can be reviewed directly by the Supreme Court, while the South Carolina case involved in the April 23 decision goes back to a lower court for trial.

Negro attorney Fred Gray, who filed the suit in court, was indicted by a Montgomery County grand jury on a charge of unlawful practice on the strength of Mrs. Reese's statement, but the charge was dropped at the request of the state.

Arrests Cited

The suit points out that two of the complaining Negroes, Claudette Colvin and Mary Louise Smith, were arrested for violating the city segregation laws. It also cites the arrest of a Negro seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks, which touched off the long bus boycott last Dec. 5, although Mrs. Parks is not one of the plaintiffs.

Negroes by the thousands have refused to ride the buses since the day Mrs. Parks was fined $14.

BEFORE 3-JUDGE COURT

Hearing Scheduled May 11 On Anti-Segregation Case

A federal suit attacking the consitutionality of local and state laws requiring racial segregation on buses has been set for hearing on May 11.

Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. informed attorneys that evidence in the case will be heard by a three-judge court.

Johnson, a member of the three-judge panel, said evidence will be heard before any motions to dismiss the suit. They are expected to be filed by the defendants.

Defendants named by four Negro women who brought the action on Feb. 1 include members of the Montgomery City Commission, the Alabama Public Service Commission, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, Montgomery City Lines Inc., and two bus drivers.

The Negro women charged that current city and state laws requiring racial segregation on public transportation violated rights guaranteed them under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Members of the court, in addition to U.S. District Judge Johnson, of Montgomery, will be U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery and U.S. District Judge Seybourn H. Lynne of Birmingham.

The federal suit is the second of its type filed by Negroes in the South seeking to declare unconstitutional existing transportation segregation alws.

LEADER OF BOYCOTT DRAWS FINE OF $500

Negro Pastor Planning Swift Appeal— Trials For 89 Others Delayed

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 22.—The first of the Negro bus boycott leaders, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., was convicted after a four-day trial Thursday.

Defense attorneys immediately began an appeal that may lead ultimately to the United States Supreme Court.

Rev. King, 27-year-old pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, was fined $500 for violation of Alabama's seldom-used anti-boycott law for his part in the 17-week-old boycott against segregated city buses.

The fine was suspended, however, after Negro defense lawyers served notice of appeal. They have said they will take the appeal to the United States Supreme Court if the state appellate courts uphold the conviction.

$500 In Court Costs

Court reconvened a short while later and King also was charged with court costs of about $500 in addition to the fine.

Under a formality of court procedure, however, the fine and costs were converted into a jail sentence since he chose to appeal rather than pay the money. He was sentenced to a total of 386 days.

But the sentence was suspended when the defendant posted an appeal bond of $1,000.

As he left the Courthouse, the minister was cheered by waiting Negroes with shouts of "Behold the King" and "Long Live the King."

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, presiding over the trial in the absence of a jury, could have fined King $1,000 and added a six-month jail sentence under the state law.

Other Trials Delayed

But he said he decided on a lesser penalty because it was shown in testimony the minister used his influence throughout the mass bus protest to urge his people to refrain from violence.

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford announced immediately after the verdict was read the state had agreed to postpone the trials of 89 other boycott defendants pending King's appeal. The 90 Negroes were indicted by a Grand Jury Feb. 21.

In a statement to newsmen following his conviction, King said the verdict "will not increase or diminish in any way my interest in the protest."

"We will continue with the protest in the same spirit," he continued, "with non-violence, passive resistance, and using the weapon of love."

There was no demonstration in the courtroom, but Negro spectators crowded around King outside as he left the Courthouse.

The minister expressed confidence to reporters Federal courts will throw out his conviction and hold the Alabama law unconstitutional.

Defense attorneys Fred D. Gray of Montgomery and Arthur Shores of Birmingham insisted in their closing arguments the state had failed to prove King committed any unlawful acts and that Negroes had a justifiable reason for refusing to patronize the bus company.

Nearly two score Negro witnesses had testified of repeated acts of mistreatment in the past decade at the hands of white bus drivers, and defense lawyers argued the boycott was the culmination of those experiences.

Gray contended the young pastor had done nothing whatever to prevent the bus company from carrying on a normal business.

Shores, on the other hand, argued the Negroes had a just cause for refusing to ride the buses and that whatever King did "he has done perfectly within his own rights as guaranteed within the Constitution."

In their pre-trial arguments and repeatedly during the four-day hearing, the Negro lawyers injected the question of Federal Constitutional rights in the trial, admittedly with a view to taking their case into Federal Court if necessary.

Mr. Thetford, in his final argument, insisted the state had proved its case and that King had been clearly identified as "the leader" of the continuing bus protest.

He described the defendant as one of a "selfish little group of men seeking power and influence among their race and seizing this opportunity."

King, testifying in his own behalf earlier Thursday, denied commission of any unlawful act and said he had never urged other Negroes even to refrain from riding the buses.

He emphasized also he had carefully steered clear of violence during the boycott, that he admonished Negroes to follow a policy of non-violence and passive resistance to opp[illegible]

Montgomery boycott Labor's fight, says union leader

CLEVELAND — Organized labor was warned in the May issue of the Butcher Workman, official publication of the American Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, that the "anti-labor boycott law . . . being tested in Mongomery, Ala., was passed in 1921 as a strike-breaking weapon against the mineworkers . . . and is being sharpened for use against the AFL-CIO's southern organizing drive."

Writing under the title, "The Negro's Fight is Labor's Fight, too, in Montgomery", Sam Pollock, president, Local 427 here, said "The White Citizens Councils . . . and other anti-union forces . . . know that if the anti-boycott law works against the Montgomery Improvement ass'n., they can use it against organized labor. If the MIA wins, union drives get a big boost. If the MIA loses, it will be a setback for . . . organizing drives. In its own self-interest, the union movement must take a stand in the fight in Montgomery."

Because of pressure to drive wages down to the southern level . . . because of the constant threat . . . of runaway shops, the "unorganized South" hurts labor "everytime they go into negotiations", Pollock said.

He accused southern business and politicians of passing "right to work laws, charging prohibitive licensing fees for unions;

"But the South's main weapon against labor is jim crow," said Pollock. Main reason for the backwardness of southern organizing drives is that "southern bosses — economic and political — keep Negroes and white workers from getting together."

Pollock said successful organizing campaigns of the 30's up North had taught Labor that "the most effective way to organize is to unite workers regardless of race . . . and to oppose discrimination against Negro workers both in the unions and in the community.

"Full moral and material support" to the Montgomery movement could "deal a blow to the boycott law before it is used against the southern organizing drive . . . (could) demonstrate in action the ability of labor to stand firmly on its principles . . . win the support of Negro workers and assure organization of . . . white and colored . . . on a unified basis — the only basis on which the southern organizing drive can succeed," the labor leader said.

Records Of Association Reveal Thousands Spent To Support Bus Boycott

More Than 90 Negroes On Trial For Protest Against City Lines

By TOM JOHNSON and FRANK McARDLE

State prosecuting attorneys yesterday produced testimony and bookkeeping records to show several thousand dollars has been spent by the Montgomery Improvement Assn. to finance automobile rides for Negroes who have boycotted the Montgomery City Lines Inc. buses.

Financial records indicating some $30,713.80 had been disbursed by the improvement group for transportation services and other association expenses during the boycott.

The testimony came out at the trial of the Rev. M. . King, pastor of the Negro Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and recognized boycott spokesman. He was indicted for boycott activities along with more than 90 other Negro residents here.

FINANCIAL RECORDS

Erna Dungee, 668 W. Jeff Davis Ave., wife of a Negro doctor and financial secretary of the association, affirmed financial records presented by Asst. Circuit Solicitor R. E. Stewart. The records showed the organization main-3-tained bank accounts in a Montgomery bank and an Atlanta trust company to conduct its operations.

Following the woman who had testified, Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter adjourned the court until 9 a.m. today when King's trial will be resumed. King was the first of 90 defendants charged with boycotting city buses.

Circuit Solicitor W. F. Thetford said the boycott trials will continue without interruption "at the present." He said no docket has been prepared on the order in which they will be tried.

FORMED DEC. 5

King was identified as the president of the improvement association which was organized last Dec. 5, the same day the boycott began.

The Baptist minister's signature and that of E. D. Nixon appeared as powers of attorney on each of the checks introduced as evidence.

Earlier another minister, the Rev. A. W. Wilson, testified about the association's purpose.

The Dungee woman testified association checks were paid to eight service station operators for gasoline purchases for operation of the transportation service.

She also affirmed that a "standard service" fee of $4 per week was paid to persons driving automobiles for the association. At least 15 persons were named as recipients of the payments for driving. Several others were confirmed as receiving compensation for related service in transportation.

REPEATED OBJECTIONS

Repeated objections were entered by the defense attorneys to the admission of the bookkeeping records on grounds that the records—deposit slips and checks—were photostatic copies and "not the best evidence" and the records of the improvement association were "immaterial and irrevelant."

Judge Carter overruled the objections and admitted the evidence. He explained that "there is enough evidence at thre present to connect the material with a charge against the defendant."

The hurist had called attention to the "wide range of activities" allowed the court by the law in determining conspiracy in boycotting.

Defense Attorney Peter Hall, Birmingham, voicing most of the objections, exclaimed, " . . . we know the latitude is wide, but just how wide."

MONEY MOVED

Particular attention was focused on a check for $5,000, made out to cash and endorsed by King. The association secretary testified the money was simply a transfer of funds from Alabama National Bank in Montgomery, to Citizens Trust Co., in Atlanta, Ga.

The following service stations were revealed by the testimony as receiving the checks for gasoline purchases with approximate amo received by each:

Advertiser

Derby Auto Service, $300; Peo-Adams Service Station, $385; Washington Park Service Station, $355; Oliver's Service Station, $600; Fletcher Smith, $417; D. W. Williams, $1,318; Day Street Service Station, $347.

According to the Dungee woman records, checks in the amount of $4 each for driving services were issued to: John Moncrief, Robert Lee Nunn, J. L. Jackson, L. C. Walker, the Rev. R. B. McCain, arry Bryant, H. N. Johnson Frank Massey, Thomas McCloud, J. H. Cherry, M. W. Richburg, he Rev. A. Sanders, J. W. Marcus, A. Murphy, the Rev. W. J. Johnson, the Rev. H. J. Palmer, and W. S. Smith.

Before adjourning the court yesterday Judge Carter commended the gallery for "being very orderly and well behaved despite such a large crowd."

Judge Eugene Carter refused to rule the boycott indictments invalid and ordered trials for the 93 defendants.

Defense Atty. Arthur Shores Bir-Birmingham argued the indictments were so "vague and indefinite' it was impossible for the defendants to know specifically what they were indicted for.

MOTION OVERRULED

The demurrers held the anti-boycott law under which the Negroes were indicted violates the right of free speech, freedom of assembly and freedom of worship as guaranteed by state and federal constitutions.

Tues. 3-20-56

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA BUS BOYCOTT

Judge Carter overruled the demurrers.

Replying to Shores, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said both the Alabama and U.S. Supreme Courts have held that the boycott law was not in violation of freedoms of speech, assembly "or anything else."

Soon after the court convened, Shores formally asked for separate trials for each of the scores of defendants.

This means each defendant must be tried individually instead of with others whose cases have similar circumstances. It also means the trials could conceivably drag on for months.

Besides Shores, the defense attorneys include Peter Hall, Orzell Billingsley, Fred Gray, Charles Langford and Robert Carter, of the New York City NAACP legal staff.

INTERESTED SPECTATOR

Negro Congressman Charles C. Diggs (D-Mich) also was present as "an interested spectator." He said he had brought a "substantial sum of money"—more than $5,000—contributed by residents of Detroit to support the boycott.

J. H. Bagley, manager of Montgomery City Lines, was the first state's witness to testify. He was called to the stand shortly after noon.

Solicitor Thetford ran into difficulty trying to show King was a part of a conspiracy. Judge Eugene Carter repeatedly ruled for defense attorneys who objected that King had not been linked to the questions asked by Thetford.

Bagley told of receiving two documents—one identified as a 'resolution" and the other never identified.

King's attorneys objected to their introduction and Judge Carter ruled the papers had not been linked with King.

BUSINESS FELL OFF

Bagley testified that business fell off following the beginning of the boycott on Dec. 5.

He said "only a small percentage is riding now that were riding before Dec. 5. I'd say five or six per cent."

Bagley said he encountered King twice—once at the first meeting called by Mayor W. A. Gayle and again when the mayor appointed a bi-racial committee to try to end the boycott.

Bagley said King acted as spokesman both times, reading the demands of the Negroes.

If the demands were met, the Negroes would resume riding the buses, Bagley said he was told by King and another defendant.

The Rev. Wilson, pastor of the Negro Holt Street Baptist Church, was called at the afternoon session.

His church was used for the first mass meeting of Negroes on the night of Dec. 5. Wilson testified he didn't know who engaged the church for the meeting.

He said "somebody called on the phone and talked with his secretary Wilson said he granted permission for use of the church.

Later, under examination by Asst Solicitor Robert B. Stewart, Wilson said the meeting was arranged in the name of the Interdenominational Ministers Alliance, a Negro ministerial group.

VAGUE ON DETAILS

Wilson was vague on many of the details of that first mass meeting because, he said, he was in his office most of the time except when he helped arrange seating for the press.

asked if he saw the Rev. King at the meeting, Wilson replied, "Not that I recall."

"Did you see the Rev. L. R. Bennett?"

"It's been so long, it's hard for me to recall,' answered Wilson.

Stewart asked Wilson if he recalled seeing King "before, during or after" the meeting and Wilson replied: "I do not."

ARRESTED TERMINAL

Rights Group Asks Bias Statutes Be Made Invalid

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

Two prominent figures in Birmingham's community life have been arrested on "disorderly conduct" charges in connection with using the general waiting room at the Birmingham Terminal Station.

Carl Baldwin, business man and his school-teacher wife, Mrs. Alexinia Baldwin, were scheduled to appear before Recorder's Judge Ralph E. Parker at 9 a .m. Wednesday, Dec. 26 on charges obviously growing out of Birmingham's determination to enforce local travel segregation laws in the face of a recent Supreme Court ruling that such laws are unconstitutional. Meantime the Interstate Commerce Commission has issued a directive calling for the ending of all forms of segregation in interstate travel.

The Baldwins through their attorney, Demetrius C. Newton, asserted that they had purchased tickets and had made reservations to Milwaukee, Wisconsin on the crack passenger train, "The City of Miami" which was scheduled to arrive at the local Terminal Station at 5 a. m. Saturday, Dec. 22.

MAKE ARREST

While using the general waiting room, a squad of five policemen, Newton said his clients told him, came to the terminal station and said the "police lieutenant gave them 20 seconds to get into the colored waiting room." When they did not go to the Jim Crow waiting room, they were hustled off to City Hall and then to City Jail, Newton's statement said.

The desk sergeant at Police Head quarters last Saturday said that Lt. J. R. Davis was in charge of the shift that worked the Terminal Station area.

The Baldwins were taken to City Jail where they were released on $100 bond each. Records exhibited by Atty. Newton indicated they were released around 7:50 a. m. last Saturday.

Meantime the Alabama Ch[illegible] Movement for Human Rights on Dec. 20 addressed a letter to the three-man Birmingham City Commission suggesting that "the Birmingham statute on segregation on buses and street cars is invalid, and should be.. immediately repealed at your next Commission meeting."

Bus Protest Leader Says:

State Press P. 1

"We Decided to Go To Jail Together"

Fri. 3-23-56

Little Rock, Ark.

CLEVELAND, Ohio—"Perhaps you've heard that Negroes will not stick together. Well, if you hear it again remember Montgomery, Alabama."

This was the admonition given here last week by one of the 24 ministers indicted in Montgomery in February for their participation in a mass Negro protest against discrimination in Montgomery city buses. A total of nearly 100 Negroes were indicted.

Addressing a crowd of 2,100 persons at a prayer-protest rally, sponsored by the Cleveland NAACP, the Rev. L. Roy Bennett recounted that "we decided to go to jail together instead of one by one."

A total of $3,301.64 was donated by the audience to aid the Montgomery group in its fight against segregation and to help in the legal defense of those arrested there.

Mr. Bennett, a Methodist minister in Montgomery, related:

"Our story started in April, 1955, when a young girl refused to give up her seat on a bus, thereby violating city and state law, was jailed and fined. She had moved across an imaginary line set up by the bus driver.

Woman Refused to Give up Seat

"Then, last December, a woman who had sat in the same bus seat for years refused to give it up to a white man. That was the straw that broke the camel's back. She was arrested, and that night there was the biggest and most spontaneous mass meeting ever seen at our church.

"We had to do something to stop the brutality of police and the drivers. We set December 5 as the day for our protest, in which no Negro would ride on a bus . . . We, the six or seven thousand Negroes gathered at our Dextet Avenue church that night, set up three things to accomplish:

"First, to request more courtesy to our people from the bus lines; secondly, to seek a seating arrangement on the basis of first come, first served, and, thirdly, to request the employment of Negroes as bus drivers of the predominantly Negro lines.

"December 23 was the last of the meetings we had with city officials. They refused any compromise on our first two points. On the third they said union rules would take a little time for any integration of Negro drivers into the union.

Negroes Have Walked and Walked

"Since then Negroes in Montgomery have walked and walked . . . In a sense it is a spiritual movement and a passive movement. While we are walking, the bus line has lost $3,500 a day. Imagine, $3,500 a day for 91 days. We're going to fight until we can sit down where we darn please."

The call for funds at the meeting was led by the Rev. Angus C. Hull, jr., of the Cleveland Baptist Association, who also served as moderator.

City Threatens Bus Line If It Permits Integration

Wed. 4-25-56 P. 1

Raleigh, N. C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24 (AP)—An order to stop segregation on city buses brought angry threats of reprisal today from city and state officials who vowed to keep the races apart as long as possible.

Despite the decision from Montgomery City Lines Inc., to abandon its policy of separate seating of white and Negro passengers, there were no reports of actual mixed seating on the first day.

An Alabama Journal reporter who spot-checked the buses said all the Negro riders he saw were seated in the rear, the part reserved for members of that race under the traditional segregation pattern.

Neither was there any indication that the bus company's action in refusing to continue enforcing city and state segregation laws would bring an immediate end to the boycott by Negroes who have refused to patronize the segregated buses since Dec. 5.

A leader of the bus boycott, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., issued a statement saying "there will be no change in our position immediately" and that the protest would go on for the time being.

Mass Meeting.

King said some action may be taken, however, at a mass meeting called for Thursday night. He said the Montgomery Improvement Assn., of which he is president, probably would make a recommendation or at least "discuss alternatives" to ending the boycott.

The statement was issued following a meeting of the executive board of the Improvement Assn. which was formed to support the boycott.

King said the Negroes were still awaiting word from bus company Manager J. H. Bagley on their original demand for employment of Negro drivers on predominantly Negro routes, and added:

"If Mr. Bagley says that he will examine applications from Negroes with the same equanimity as he would an application from a white person, that might satisfy our people."

Whether that meant the Negroes might continue the boycott indefinitely without some concession on the hiring of Negro drivers, the minister said he couldn't speculate.

Bagley wasn't available for comment. In the past he has said the company had received no applications from Negroes for jobs as drivers.

Meanwhile, what effect the move to end segregation here might have on the $500 fine levied against King on his boycotting conviction wasn't immediately determined.

The Negro baptist minister has appealed, saying he would go to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford, who prosecuted King, said abolition of the segregation laws wouldn't affect the conviction because, he explained, "segregation as such wasn't an issue" in his trial.

Defense attorneys contended the Negroes had a "just cause" and "legal excuse" for refusing to ride the buses, and produced testimony of repeated acts of mistreatment by bus drivers.

Whether they will use the segregation argument in their appeal wasn't learned because the defense lawyers weren't available for comment.

Times & Observer

A comparatively few Negroes rode the buses today despite the announced end of segregation. R. C. Mills, assistant manager of Montgomery City Lines, said the number was about the same that continued to use the buses throughout the boycott.

P. 16

The bus company previously had estimated that at about 5 to 15 per cent of the normal Negro passenger load.

Whether other Negroes were waiting word from the boycott leaders before patronizing the bus line again could not be determined.

City and state officials meanwhile insisted that Alabama's segregation laws are still in effect despite the U.S. Supreme Court decision yesterday which said all bus segregation is unconstitutional.

Tte ruling applied directly only to South Carolina, and Alabama officials. contended segregation laws here will remain intact until a court order is directed specifically at them.

That could come May 11, the date set for hearing on an antisegregation suit already on file attacking constitutionality of Montgomery city and Alabama state laws. The suit was filed as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

Until the city and state laws are knocked down, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and other city officials and President Jack Owen of the Alabama Public Service Commission declared that segregation will be rigidly maintained.

The city commission, all three of those members belong to the White Citizens Council, issued a statement saying it "does not consider that the Supeme Cout decision constues Alabama laws o city ordinances by which we are governed."

City Turns To State Court To Head Off Bus Integratio

Wed. 5-2-56 P. 1

Montgomery, Ala.

Montgomery city officials turned to the state courts yesterday to try to head off Montgomery City Lines' announced intentions to desegregate city buses.

In a suit filed in Montgomery Circuit Court, the city asked for a temporary injunction to restrain the bus company from putting its desegregation policy into effect.

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones has set a hearing on the city's petition at 10 a.m. Thursday.

A non - segregated seating arangement on buses, said the city "threatens the public health and safety by creating a clear and present danger of race riots, disorderly conduct, assaults, affrays, bombings and other physical attacks."

The bus company announced an end to traditionally separate seating facilities for white and Negro passengers on April 23, following the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to review a South Carolina case concerning bus segregation.

Company attorneys immediately interpreted the court's action as a ruling against segregated travel facilities, and ordered the local bus firm to comply.

Subsequently, however, students of constitutional law determined that the court's refusal to reivew the South Carolina case was based on a technical legal point and did not affect segregation.

RACE VIOLENCE FEARED

Memphis, Tenn.

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 1. —Expressing fear of "race riots" and other violence, city officials have done into court in an effort to force city buses to comply with segregation laws. P. 25

The privately operated bus company, Montgomery City Lines, announced a week ago drivers would no longer enforce separate seating arrangements for white and Negro passengers.

There have been no reports of actual integration, however, because most Negroes are still boycotting the buses and theose who are riding have stayed in the rear of the buses where they always sat.

A hearing on the city's injunction suit, filed late Monday, is set for 10 a.m. Thursday before Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in State Court.

Another complaint challenging constitutionality of city and state bus segregation laws and filed by Negroes is pending in United States District Court. It will be heard May 11.

'Creates Tension'

The city's suit, signed by Municipal attorneys and Mayor W. A. Gayle, contends the bus company's integration order "threatens the public health and safety by creating a clear and present danger of race riots, disorderly conduct, assaults affrays, bombings and other physicial attacks."

Continuing, the suits says the desegregation policy, if continued, 'creates tension, uncertainty . . . and is in violation of the established social pattern."

The bus company order to its drivers threatens public morals, too, the complaint adds, by "engendering in the public a contemptucus disregard for all laws and customs, and weakens public confidence in and respect for community officials."

It says the integration order invites "irresponsible elements" of the population to "incite riot and civil commotion."

The "very existence" of a bus system in Montgomery is threatened by the integration order, the complaint says, perhaps referring to a previous threat by the City Commission to seek revocation of the bus company's franchise unless it complies with segregation laws.

All Council Members

Mr. Gayle and the other two city commissioners, all members of the White Citizens Council, insist Montgomery city and Alabama state segregation laws are still in effect, despite the recent Supreme Court ruling.

Mr. Gayle said the bus charter could be canceled if the company is found to be violating the law.

Montgomery City-Bus Line Talks Snarled

The officials scheduled another Conference for either Friday or Saturday following Thursday's two and a half hour meeting.

The city commission firmed up its position that segregation should be maintained on the buses in a brief statement which read in part:

"The city commission has heretofore taken the position that the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court did not pass on the statues of Alabama and the ordinances of the city of Montgomery. We are now advised that there is a question as to whether the Supreme court even passed on the statutes of South Carolina.

"We have conferred with representatives of the city lines, but have reached no conclusions."

Bus Company officials refused to comment on the meeting.

Court Fines King $500 On Boycott Law Charge

Advertiser Fri. 3-23-56 P.1 Montgomery, Ala.

Judge Orders Continuance In 89 Cases

By TOM JOHNSON
And FRANK McARDLE

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Negro leader of the bus boycott here, was convicted on a charge of violating a state anti - boycott law and was fined $500 and costs in Circuit Court by Judge Eugene Carter yesterday.

Judge Carter ordered a continuance in 89 other cases of Negroes charged with the same violation until a final appeal action is completed in King's case.

The jurist suspended payment of the fine until the appeal is heard by higher courts. The appeal eventually could go to the U.S. Supreme Court.

$1,000 BOND

Defense attorneys prepared to post a $1,000 appeal bond. They had previously stated they would carry the case "all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court" in the event of a conviction.

As King and his wife left the courthouse, they encountered a lively demonstration on the sidewalk. Television cameramen and news photographers fired away as a crowd of about 300 clapped and waved their hands.

They chanted, "Long Live King," or "Long Live The King" and "We Ain't Gonna Ride the Buses No More."

No demonstrations occurred in the courtroom.

Judge Carter announced he had been satisfied about the guilt of King in violating the anti-boycott law. But he added that he was levying a fine lower than the maximum because the minister apparently had "discouraged violence" in the bus boycott movement.

MOTION DENIED

Earlier a motion to dismiss the evidence entered by the state and rule a verdict for the defendant was denied by Judge Carter.

In his summary arguments, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford argued that the state had proved King had engaged in a conspiracy to hinder and prevent the operation of the bus company without "just or legal cause."

Defense attorneys Arthur Shores of Birmingham and Fred Gray of Montgomery, in their summary said that the state had failed to prove King had been a party to any conspiracy or agreement to hinder the bus company's business and that if such a conspiracy existed it existed with "just cause." Shores said King was merely a spokesman for the Negroes who selected him for their leader.

Shores, one of the six Negro attorneys defending King, said that the Baptist minister "didn't volunteer to be a rabble-rousing crusader, as the state attorneys have presented him."

Interpretations of the anti-boycott law took up most of the arguments. Thetford charged a group of 16 to 18 Negro leaders carried out the boycott "to gain personal power and influence." He added the boycott resulted from "hysteria built up at mass meetings" promoted by King and others. He pointed to violence in the firing on city buses and charged that King was directly responsible for boycott activity.

Advertiser

Thetford said the Montgomery Improvement Assn. had spent $30,000 for the sole purpose of keeping the bus boycott alive.

King himself was called as the final defense witness. P. 2-A

The state put him through a fairly brief but vigorous examination during which the young minister denied that he had ever urged Negroes to refrain from riding buses.

He said his "emphasis" has been "let your conscience be your guide."

Another witness, the Rev. Robert S. Graetz, pastor of the all-Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, had earlier testified that on the "several occasions" he heard King speak, the Negro leader never openly advocated that bus patrons remain off the buses.

Graetz said he had heard "two or three compromise proposals" for ending the boycott discussed at meetings of the executive board of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., and had submitted such a plan himself.

He said the board had been "interested" in the compromises but none was ever "completely acceptable."

King was asked if he ever advocated violence on the part of protesting Negroes. He replied that his stand had been the "very antithesis of that," that he had urged non-violence.

He described the improvement association, of which he is president, as a group formed on the day the boycott began to improve race relations and "uplift the general tenor of the community."

NO SALARY

He said he is paid no salary but that seven office workers receive money for their services.

Thetford tried to show that the resolution adopted at the first mass meeting (Dec. 5 at Holt Street Baptist Church) was actually prepared during the preceding afternoon by a committee headed by King.

King admitted he was a member of a committee but said he did not recall helping draft the resolutions. He said his impression was that the resolutions were planned during the afternoon and actually drawn up that night.

Thetford referred to another portion of the minutes of the afternoon session which referred to an agreement to continue the boycott indefinitely, and asked King if such an agreement was reached.

"That's true according to the minutes," he said. "I just don't remember the discussion."

'SPONTANEOUS'

Thetford directed his questioning at trying to show that the boycott did not develop spontaneously" on the night of Dec. 5, as some Negro leaders have maintained, but was planned hours before by a group of 20 persons at the Mt. Zion AME Church.

Did the executive committee of the association agree during the afternoon to set up finance and transportation committees, as mentioned in the minutes of the meeting?

King's reply: "I don't remember."

Thetford tried to show that there were, as he phrased it, "two boycotts"—the first one planned for one day only (Dec. 5) and the second, which developed later, planned for indefinite duration.

"Did you have anything to do with the first boycott?" asked Thetford.

"No, I didn't," said King.

"Do you know anyone who did?"

"No, I don't," King replied. "It was a spontaneous beginning."

ONE-DAY BOYCOTT

Did the Montgomery Improvement Assn. take what started out to be a one-day boycott and, with its money and planning, extend the boycott indefinitely, Thetford asked.

"No, I wouldn't say that," the minister answered.

Thetford again referred to the minutes of the Dec. 5 afternoon session which referred to certain "recommendations" of the executive board being given to that night's mass meeting.

The solicitor wanted to know what the recommendations were.

King said he didn't know.

Was an agenda for the night's program drawn up at the afternoon meeting, Thetford asked.

"I imagine so," replied King.

Did the executive board draw up the three items the Negroes are said to demand as the price for ending the boycott — that is, a different seating arrangemnt, courteous treatment and the hiring of some Negro bus drivers?

"I don't remember," said King. He testified he "couldn't say" who formulated the demands or where or when they were drawn up.

"DIDN'T REMEMBER"

But he added, "I think they were done at the Holt Street Church (at the first mass meeting). I really don't remember." In any event, he said, the demands reflected the wishes of the "4,000 Negroes" present at the Dec. 5 mass meeting.

He confirmed that the weekly budget of the improvement association is $3,200 — "approximately that."

Thetford asked if all of the approximately $30,000 donated to the improvement association had been spent for the boycott.

King admitted "most of it" had. He said the money came from "free-will" offerings.

Asked how many white persons are members of the improvement group, King said he didn't know because "we don't keep records on the basis of race."

SOME OTHERS

He said he did know that Graetz was a member.

Thetford asked if there were any others.

"I know we have some others," said King.

"Who are they?"

"I don't know," said King.

King, pastor of the Dexter Avenu. Baptist Church, testified he came to Montgomery in 1954.

Thetford asked how many times he had ridden the city buses?

"Only Once," King replied.

Graetz preceded King on the witness stand.

He said, though, he couldn't remember having heard King urge Negroes to refrain from riding buses, he did "recall that there were times when they referred to people not wanting to ride."

The defense put on seven other witness before resting the case. All of them testified that as bus passengers they were abused and referred to in derisive terms.

REBUTTAL GIVEN

In rebuttal to the passengers' testimony, the state called bus drivers J. B. Saddler, O. T. Rainwater, C. H. Williams, W. H. Mills, C. E. Moseley, and O. O. Martin.

Each of them testified he had driven buses for several years on predominantly Negro lines and denied the use of abusive language or discourtesy.

They said—and Manager J. H. Bagley confirmed—that the seating arrangement now in existence on buses reserves an equal number of seats for whites and Negroes.

That, they explained, means the rear 10 setas are held for Negroes, the front 10 for whites, with the middle section seated on a first come, first served basis.

The Negroes have demanded the end of reserved sections for either race.

Bagley, superintendent of the bus company since it began business in Montgomery 20 years ago, testified there were 93 or 94 bus drivers employed on Dec. 5, the day the boycott began. None of them, he said, was a Negro.

Asked if he would hire a Negro driver, Bagley said, "It's never been the custom to hire Negro drivers."

Anyway, he answered: "I've never had an application."

Writ To Halt Bus Segregation In Montgomery Waits Appeal

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 19 (AP)—A three-judge panel issued an injunction today to stop enforcement of bus segregation laws in Montgomery, but suspended it for 10 days to allow time for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The panel which two weeks ago ruled city and state segregation laws unconstitutional issued the injunction to carry out that decison.

But the formal order was suspended for 10 days to allow city and state attorneys to appeal the original desegregation ruling to the higher court.

If the appeal is filed within the 10 days, the panel said the suspension will remain in effect until a new order can be written to continue the stay of execution pending the appeal.

The injunction order was signed by Judge Richard T. Rives of the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., of the U.S. District Court for the middle district of Alabama.

They were the two judges who signed the majority opinion in the 2-1 June 5 decision holding that city and state laws requiring separate seating for white and Negro passengers violate the federal constitution.

U.S. district Judge Seybourn Lynne of the northern district of Alabama, who dissented from the integration ruling, also disagreed with the decision to issue the injunction.

Although the panel announced its desegregation ruling 14 days ago, it delayed putting it into effect until opposing attorneys could file written recommendations on what form the formal decree should take.

City attorneys, in otheir response, urged the court to refrain from issuing an immediate desegregation order and to confine its decree instead to a mere declaratory judgement interpreting the laws.

The city also asked the court to suspend any injunction it might issue pending an appeal to the Supreme Court. State's attorneys joined the city in that request.

In another request, the state requested the judges to exempt the Alabama Public Service Commission from the order and thus to make it apply only to the city of Montgomery. The commission administers state laws requiring separate seating of white and Negro passengers in public transportation.

But Negro lawyers who won the first integration skirmish on June 5 insisted on an immediate injunction against continued racial separation on the buses.

Negroes contesting the segregation laws asked for a declaratory judgment holdnig them invalid and also an injunction to stop the city and state from enforcing them.

Constitution

Today they petitioned the court to issue the injunction without delay and to keep it in effect pending a promised Supreme Court appeal from the anti-segregation decision itself.

P. 6

City attorneys on the other hand asked the court to refrain from granting an injunction altogether and to confine its order to a declaratory judgment. That would amount to outlawing segregation without telling the city and state specifically to stop enforcing it.

It would have been up to the Negroes in that event to go back to court requesting a formal injunctive order or to file a civil rights suit if the segregation laws were still enforced.

Segregation Held Illegal

Montgomery Plans Bus Ruling Appeal

Wed. 6-6-56

Miami Fla.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (AP) — Splitting 2-1, a three-judge panel in Federal Court ruled Tuesday that racial segregation on city buses in Montgomery violates the federal Constitution.

But the court took no immediate action to issue an injunction against enforcement of city and state segregation laws. That will come later.

City and state officials are expected to appeal direct to the Supreme Court in what may become the first clear-cut decision by that court on city bus segregation.

The panel, anticipating that, gave opposing lawyers two weeks to submit written suggestions on how the formal anti-segregation order should be entered, and whether a stay should be granted pending an appeal.

Judge Richard T. Rives of the U. S. Fifth Circuit of Appeals and District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., of the Middle District of Alabama signed the majority opinion holding bus segregation contrary to the 14th amendment to the federal Constitution.

Judge Seybourn Lynne of the Northern District of Alabama dissented, insisting that separate but equal seating facilities for white and Negro passengers are permissible.

Pending a formal order to carry out the panel's findings, no injunction was issued. When it comes, Johnson said it will affect only buses in Montgomery even though state laws were held unconstitutional.

The boycott which led to the suit in Federal Court started last Dec. 5, the day a Negro seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was fined $14 in City Court for refusing to move to the colored section of bus.

Since then the city buses which once carried 30,000 to 40,000 Negro passengers a day now transports only 300 or 400, company officials say.

Boycott Funds Misused, Says Negro Pastor

Post + Times Herald Wed. 6-13-56 Washington, D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 12 (AP)—A Baptist preacher last night said leaders of the Negro protest against bus segregation here have been playing fast and loose with boycott funds.

The Rev. U. J. Fields did not specify any individual members of the Montgomery Improvement Association, set up to coordinate the boycott for the city's 50,000 Negroes, but declared in resigning his post as recording secretary:

"All the money coming in here for transportation is not being used for that."

Officials of the Association quickly denied any financial misconduct.

"No money received by this Association has been misappropriated," said Dr. Moses, second vice president.

"Definitely false," said the Rev. R. J. Glasco in referring to Fields' accusations. Glasco is chairman of the finance committee.

Fields, one of the Association founders, also said "I no longer can identify myself with a movement in which the few are exploiting the many."

The 25-year-old Negro minister said boycott leaders "have become egotistical and interested in perpetuating themselves."

"Individuals who are handling" money contributed throughout the Nation to support the boycott "are using it for selfish purposes," he said.

Association officials termed Fields' criticism "simply another attack designed to hinder our protest movement."

Fields said his position as recording secretary had given him knowledge of funds contributed to support the boycott. He estimated that an amount "up in the thousands of dollars" had been diverted from the announced purpose of providing private transportation for boycotting Negroes.

The Association has been paying about $3000 a week to provide car-pool transportation for the boycotters. The boycott began Dec. 5, after Rosa Parks, Negro seamstress, was fined $14 for violating bus segregation laws. The Association president is the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who is out of town.

JUDGES ORDER STOP OF BUS SEGREGATION

But Montgomery Defendants Get 10-Day Delay

Wed. 6-20-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 19.—(AP)—A panel of three Federal judges issued an injunction Tuesday to stop enforcement of bus segregation laws in Montgomery but suspended it for 10 days to allow time for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The panel which two weeks ago ruled city and state segregation laws unconstitutional issued the injunction to carry out that decision.

But the formal order was suspended for 10 days to allow city and state attorneys to appeal the original desegregation ruling to the higher court.

If the appeal is filed within the 10 days, the panel said the suspension will remain in effect until a new order can be written to continue the stay of execution pending the appeal.

Although the panel announced its desegregation ruling 14 days ago, it delayed putting it into effect until opposing attorneys could file written recommendations on what form the formel decree should take.

City attorneys, in their response, urged the court to refrain from issuing an immediate desegregation order and to confine its decree instead to a mere declaratory judgment interpreting the laws.

The city also asked the court to suspend any injunction it might issue pending an appeal to the Supreme Court. State's attorneys joined the city in that request.

In another request, the state requested the judges to exempt the Alabama Public Service Commission from the order and thus to make it apply only to the City of Montgomery. The commission administers state laws requiring separate seating of white and Negro passengers in public transportation.

State officials declared when the original finding was handed down June 5 that they would appeal.

Attorneys for Negroes who brought the action asked the court to order an immediate end to segregation and stop its practice while the issues involved were being decided by the Supreme Court.

Virtually all of Montgomery's 45,000 Negro residents have refused to ride city buses since last Dec 5, when a Negro woman was arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus. The protest will continue, leaders said, until a final determination by the courts.

The mayor declared:

"There is no doubt that an end of segregated seating arrangements on public conveyances in the City of Montgomery will effect a drastic change in the habits of the people.

"This change, which would alter customs which have been in existence since before the city was founded, would have an obviously serve impact upon its citizens.

"The commission is of the opinion that every step possible should be taken to prevent such a change. We are therefore instructing our legal department to effect an appeal within the 10 days period set out by the court in its judgment."

Bus Death Knell To Get Appeal

Daily World Fri. 6-22-56 Atlanta Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Mayor W. A. Gayle ordered an appeal yesterday to the U. S. Supreme Court from a three judge federal ruling that outlaws bus segregation in Montgomery.

He made the order after a unanimous vote of the City Council.

The federal court last Tuesday ordered an end of bus segregation, but gave the city ten days to file and appeal.

The jurists ordered that segregation — previously held to be violative of the federal constitution — be ended in ten days. If the city or state appeals this ruling to the Supreme Court, effectiveness of the order will be held up, the court said.

Boycotters On Trial-Unafraid

Informer P. 1 Sat. 3-24-56 Houston, Tex.

By CHAS H. LOEB
NNPA Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala — The trials of those indicted for refusing to ride Montgomery's segregated buses opened Monday morning. I found Montgomery's Negro citizens and their leaders, both literally and figuratively, "ready for trial". Your reporter has yet to find a single Negro here who looked toward Monday with misgivings and doubts.

"If they find them guilty, we'll appeal. And while we're appealing, we'll keep on walking" correctly summarizes Montgomery's Negro attitude. Meanwhile, during a three hour walking tour of the Negro area and the nearby downtown business section not a single frowning face, white or Negro was to be seen.

Negroes in Montgomery are walking, and almost all of its white folks, except the Citizens Council zealots, are smiling-and a lot of them are walking too.

If there is fear, anxiety, tension, or an imminent explosion in Montgomery, I have thus far failed to uncover it...or to feel it. Perhaps Monday's trial will change things. Except for two mass meetings to be held at widely-separated churches Sunday, and these are billed only as prayer meetings, Montgomery's Negroes are ready for whatever the courts may do.

Your correspondent spent most of Saturday getting down to Montgomery from Cleveland, Ohio, via American and Delta Airlines. Enroute a careful eye was peeled for signs of racial unrest and mounting tension. It simply wasn't there, though the vestiges of segregation were very evident.

The first brush with Jim-Crow came as we left the plane at Atlanta, and even here it was not the vigorous, vindicitive, snarling Jim Crow of old. In the beautiful Atlanta municipal air port the ICC ruling against segregation of interstate travelers is ALMOST complied with. There was no segregation on the planes, at ticket counters (not even an attempt to deny Negro passengers their proper turn in line at ticket and reservation windows), but Jim Crow's old reliable "COLORED MEN" and "COLORED WOMEN" set in raised letters above companion doors at the East Gate, reminded Negro travelers from the north and midwest that he had flown on swift wings back into a section of the nation where white men are reluctant to surrender an already dead concept.

The Atlanta airport boasts a "Dobbs House", a very fine restaurant, as well as a sparkling lunch counter. Negro passengers are served promptly and cheerfully at the lunch counter, but may not eat in the Dobbs House. According to one of the airport porters, the airport authorities defend this paradox by claiming that the restaurant is leased to the Dobbs House and therefore is a private rather than municipal operation.

Colored passenger may use the airport limousines at the Atlanta airport, but just outside the entrance stood a single, rather forlorn, "iLncoln Cab" at its segregated stand, placed there exclusively for the use of Negro passengers.

"Sometime it stands there all day without moving" my porter-mentor commented.

This porter, incidentally, was openly criticial of the conduct of Negro air passengers whom he claimed "blow into the airport looking so important, and forget to tip the porter who carries their bags". He later amended his criticism by recalling that NAACP lawyers and officials who seem to constantly shuttle back and forth through Atlanta, do tip handsomely.

"The Negro in Atlanta is watching and cheering the Negroes in Montgomery" he confided. "I hope these people keep on walking until they get what they want."

Porters, maids, cleaning women, and the waiters and bus boys in the "off-limits" Dobbs House-restaurant were Negroes, and outside the Dobbs House door, opening and closing it for guests, sat a character who was a dead ringer for the fabulous Uucle Remus. Indeed, my inquiries elicited the information that not only was this aged gent called Uncle Remus, but he was actually paid a salary to give southern authenticity to the Dobbs House. Lest you scoff too quickly, the Murial cigar box before him on a battered table was rapidly filling up with nickles, dimes and quarters as he signalled the departure of guests by ringing an ancient, tinkling bell.

A spot check of buses in the downtown section, taken at the peak of Saturday's heavy shopping rush, between 4:00 and 6:00 p m found no Negro riders. Most of the buses are running with three to seven passengers seated. Negroes, however, were downtown shopping; hundreds of them. Some, laden with packages, were headed in a steady stream toward Monroe street, where at the private parking lot of E L Posey, corner McDonald and Monroe, they were sure they would find a car-pool-driver going their way. Posey estimated that some 2000 persons per day are transported from his lot. Nobody is permitted to pay for a ride. All contributions go directly into the car pool which is estimated to cost about $3000 per week to operate. Here is where most of the contributions flowing into Montgomery from across the nation are used.

Negroes Say Mistreatment Fired Boycott

Constitution Thurs. 3-22-56 Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 21 (AP)—Negroes defended their boycott of segregated city buses today with testimony designed to show a pattern of mistreatment at the hands of bus drivers.

Through that, they hoped to show the existence of "a just cause or legal excuse" for the mass refusal of Negroes to ride Montgomery City Lines buses for the past 17 weeks. P. 1

The state's antiboycott law which was used to indict 90 Negro leaders prohibits any conspiracy or agreement to hinder the operation of a lawful business "without just cause or legal excuse."

State's attorneys rested their case this morning against the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., first of the Negroes called to trial, and Negro defense lawyers immediately sought to throw out all of the prosecution testimony on the grounds it was insufficient to prove any unlawful act.

But Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who at the conclusion of the trial will decide the minister's guilt or innocence in the absence of a jury, overruled the defense motion.

Negro attorney Fred D. Gray, arguing in support of his motion, said the law requires the state to prove both that the defendant entered into an agreement to hinder operation of the bus company, and that it was done "without just cause or legal excuse."

Gray insisted the prosecution had failed to show that King or anyone associated with him in the Montgomery Improvement Assn., had committed any unlawful act or had done anything to prevent the bus company from operating its business. Constitution

The Negro lawyer argued, too, that the prosecution failed to prove King was a party to any conspiracy or agreement. P. 15

But even if they had, Gray continued, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford and his two deputies still failed to prove that the Negroes didn't have a just cause for refusing to patronize the bus company.

The defense attorney also contended the antiboycott law itself is unconstitutional, that it violates the 27-year-old Negro minister's rights of free speech, freedom of assembly and freedom to petition for redress for wrongs done him.

Judge Carter dismissed that argument with the reminder that the State Supreme Court has upheld the law and that the U.S. Supreme Court has refused to review it.

One Negro defense witness, Mrs. Gladys Moore of Montgomery, testified she stopped riding city buses generally in protest against years of mistreatment of herself and other members of her race.

But under cross-examination by the state and the judge, she admitted she chose Dec. 5 as the day to stop riding because Negroes as a group picked that date.

The mass refusal to ride the buses began that day after a Negro seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was arrested for refusing to move to the colored section of a bus. She was tried in city court Dec. 5 and fined $14.

Negroes stayed off the buses that day and ultimately continued their protest indefinitely.

Mrs. Moore said, "We all decided, 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery decided, we wouldn't ride the buses any more. We all did it after that thing happened to Mrs. Parks. She was treated so bad. We didn't think she was treated justly."

Other Negroes also related instances of cruelty and humiliation by drivers who, they said, habitually referred to their race as "niggers" and occasionally as "you ugly black apes." They also said they made numerous complaints to the bus company and the city commission about segregated seating facilities and about Negroes being forced to stand while seats remained empty in white sections of the buses.

Buses Attacked, 4 Drivers Tell Boycott Trial

Inquirer P. 3 Philadelphia Pa. Wed. 3-21-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 20 (UP).—Four bus drivers testified today they were shot at, about the time Negroes began boycotting this city's transit system. A fifth said a brick was thrown through the rear window of his bus.

Testimony of the five was admitted over the objections of defense attorneys for 90 Negroes, on trial one by one, charged with conspiring to bankrupt the public bus line by boycott.

FIRED ON 6 TIMES

The first driver to testify, George Henderson, said he was fired on six times the day the boycott started last Dec. 6. The others testified to incidents that allegedly happened between Dec. 5 and Dec. 8. Those who said they had been shot at were M. O. Beasley, L. S. Johnson, and J. B. Gardner. C. A. Bedso said a brick crashed through the rear window of his bus.

Defense attorneys objected to the testimony of each bus driver as "irrelevant, immaterial, incompetent and not having any connection with the trial." They were overruled.

A GHOST LINE

The State had attempted to prove earlier that organized Negroes had spent $30,000 for private transport to work and turned the segregated city bus line into a ghost line.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter ruled Henderson's statements part of the "overall picture" of the dispute and the alleged conspiracy.

Henderson testified against the Rev. M. L. King, 27, the first defendant called and head of the Montgomery Improvement Association, Negro group blamed by the State for putting across the boycott.

"If I have an enemy, I don't know who he is," testified the 13-year veteran of the transit company.

RANTER EJECTED

Just before Henderson testified, the 100 spectators, mostly Negroes, were thrown into commotion when a white man in a gray suit and red vest strode up to the front and began ranting. Bailiffs ejected him.

The Negroes are being prosecuted under an old 1921 law designed to eliminate boycotts in labor disputes. If it could prove the Negroes schemed to paralyze the bus company economically, the State hoped to convict the first defendant and set up a precedent verdict. The trials are not being heard by jury.

The first State witness on the second day of Mr. King's trial was Stuart Patton, assistant cashier of the Alabama National Bank of Montgomery, identified as a depository of the Improvement Association. Some $30,000 in expenses for the group was identified by Patton from photostats of depositors and checks.

K. W. Jones, city detective, testified he stopped two Negro drivers on Jan. 11 and that they told him they hauled passengers with gasoline paid for by the association.

Show 'Just Cause' For Conducting Bus Boycott

Kansas City Mo. Call 3-30-56

By CHARLES H. LOEB
NNPA Correspondent

"Git back nigger."
"Git up nigger."
"Git out nigger."
"Go to the back nigger."
"Let that white man sit down, nigger. You black ape."

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The shocking chant went on, and on and on, throughout Tuesday afternoon, March 20, and into the evening, as a procession of Negro defense witnesses "wrote into the record" the shameful and long-endured abuses and humiliations Montgomery's Negro passengers have suffered at the hands and from the lips of the majority of bus drivers employed by the Montgomery City Lines, now estimated to be losing some $3500 per day because on December 5, 1955, Montgomery's Negroes abruptly stopped using the buses.

The defense was showing "just cause" for what the state of Alabama alleges is an illegal conspiracy in restraint of business, but with little apparent success in proving it so through its harassed corps of city solicitors. The tired trio, after a day and one-half of wrestling with witnesses who were either uncooperative or who had little of value to tell, wearily rested its case.

Signal For Defense

This almost weary capitulation was the signal for the defense to swing into action. Its first move was for a directed verdict that would exclude all of the state's testimony and halt the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., with a verdict of acquittal.

Presented by Fred D. Gray of Montgomery, selected for the assignment by his colleagues in a brilliant battery of seven Negro lawyers here defending Rev. King and 89 others, it was an eloquent, scholarly, but futile plea.

Judge Eugene Carter promptly denied it.

But those of us who sat in the Montgomery circuit court will not soon forget it. Through Gray, the Negroes of Montgomery — and of the nation—were calling upon a court of law in deepest Dixie to forget the skin color of the petitioner before the bar and embrace, with cold and uninhibited logic the basic constitutional precepts that have made the nation great, despite divisions and inequities.

Kansas City Mo. 3-31-56

Gray argued that:

1. No criminal conspiracy had been proven.

2. That there had been no showing that the defendant, Rev. King has taken any part in an illegal action.

3. The state had not proven even a prima facia case.

4. The statute under which Rev King and others are being tried though questionable in its constitutionality, provides that the alleged conspiracy must not only be illegal, but must also be committed without just cause. The state, Gray contended, had proven neither.

The statute requires proof of both.

5. Any conviction of the defendant would be illegal and void, as he is an American citizen, and as such is entitled to the freedom of speech, of assembly, of petition, and of due process of law.

Gray covered, point by point, the accusations of the state, the evidence presented through its witnesses, and labeled it "insufficient to convict."

He said that whatever action the Negroes of Montgomery took in refusing to ride in segregated buses was taken voluntarily, and pointed out that throughout the three long, sometimes tension-filled months, Negroes made no effort to prevent the bus company from operating their buses, whenever or wherever they pleased.

The sole testimony that company property had been shot at and stoned had been given by bus drivers who admittedly did not see who shot at or stoned the vehicles, did not know whether the originators of the attacks were whites or Negroes.

To the contrary, he argued, a white witness for the state, a competent city editor who had thoroughly covered most of the big mass meeting held in various Montgomery Negro churches, had given testimony that the accused Rev. King had indeed calmed down a group of angry Negroes who gathered around his freshly-bombed home, and dispersed them with a warning against violence or physical retaliation of any kind.

In Defiance of Logic and Law

Call 3-30-56

The now-celebrated Montgomery bus strike is developing ramifications that may well make it one of the most significant events in the field of civil rights actions. The conviction of the Rev. Martin Luther King on Alabama's anti-boycott law and subsequent fining of $500 brought the inevitable appeal to a higher court. The entire defense argument was designed to challenge the constitutionality of the law under which the courageous young minister was convicted.

Involved in the question are such constitutional guarantees as freedom of speech, freedom of peaceful assembly and by inference, freedom of religion and of the press. If the Alabama law is sustained, such action by a state could conceivably be stretched to include inhibition of basic civil liberties guaranteed by the Bill of Rights.

Kansas City, Mo.

If spontaneous public indignation cannot be registered against impositions or abridgements of rights, the whole structure of the Constitution is threatened. Built upon the theory that the individual must always be guaranteed protection against the excesses or the incompetence of the state, the U. S. Constitution has historically envisioned that there may be times when public opinion may be the only available recourse for redress of wrongs.

March 3-30-56

Based upon the flimsiest of evidence, the conviction of Rev. King is handed down in direct contradiction to the wording of the law under which he is convicted. The law states that conviction may be possible for participation in a boycott "without just cause."

The state of Alabama contends that refusal to accept personal indignities and unreasonable inconvenience is not "just cause." It may not be, according to Alabama's interpretation of what constitutes a "just cause." We should be very shocked if a responsible court were to agree with that finding, however.

A public transportation company, operating under a franchise which gives it exclusive right to service a community occupies an entirely different positon from a private business being conducted in a competitive economy. Patrons of such a franchised operation have no redress or protection except that of public protest. When protest is ignored the only other recourse is refusal to accept the service provided. This, the first, citizens of Montgomery did—and for this 90 of their leaders are under criminal indictment. Surely this is a curious perversion of law.

States have public utilities commissions set up for the purpose of protecting their citizens from exploitation by businesses which are given exclusive privilege in providing certain service. These commissions establish rates and set the terms upon which franchises are awarded with the thought that such conditions shall always be in the public interest. Implicit in such regulations is the theory that equality of service and treatment becomes a state-guaranteed assurance.

Even under the outmoded "separate but equal" concept still clasped to the bosom of the South the treatment of Negro bus patrons in Montgomery ignores any pretense at equality. The requests of citizens of Montgomery sought no change in the state's segregation laws.

They simply sought relief from intolerably unequal treatment. By the same theory, electric light companies and gas companies might decide to refuse service to Negro customers to three hours a day, no protest possible. Or telephone companies might be permitted to give party line service to Negro customers while charging straight line rates.

Application of an anti-boycott statute in this manner simply defies logic and law.

EERS FOR REV. KING.—The Rev. Ralph Abernathy, left, is shaking hands with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. as a big crowd cheers for the Rev. Montgomerians Relate Wrongs-from Way Back

Tell How Bus Drivers Kept Saying 'N-----'

By CHARLES H. LOEB
NNPA Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, Ala.— The defense was having its day. The state had rested its case in the first of the Montgomery boycott trials Tuesday, March 20. Judge Eugene Carter had forced them to call the first of 37 witnesses by overruling a defense motion that it throw out the state's evidence as insufficient to convict the Rev. Martin Luther King.

From midday until after 5 p.m., 20 defense witnesses had been called to the stand, school teacher, washerwoman, minister, school children, store clerks, widows, employed and unemployed, polished of speech and inarticulate, placid and angry, resentful and tolerant. Negro Montgomery, at last, got a chance to "testify" to the wrongs it has suffered — from way, way back.

There'll be more on Wednesday. All with two things in common. They're Montgomery citizens and all have "experienced unpleasant incidents" while riding the buses of the Montgomery City Lines.

And something else, too.

All of them have stopped riding on the buses.

Smartly-attired Thelma Glass, member of the Women's Politic Council, had been on numerous committees which had called on City Fathers and on bus company officials for more courtesy from bus drivers.

"Officials were polite. Bus drivers kept on calling Negro women "n——s."

Mrs. Sadie Brooks, 21 years a resident, a respected member of the City Federation: also met with officials as a member of various committees — city commissioners, bus officials, in 1952. Again in 1954.

"Officials listened politely. Bus drivers still kept passing up Negroes, cold weather or warm. She once saw a driver pull his pistol and order a Negro passenger off the bus. No cross-examination.

Rufus Lewis, president of the Citizens Club and originally a state's witness. He's now encouraging Negroes to register and vote. He met with officials, too, made the usual complaints, begged for improvement.

Negro bus riders still "black apes." Negro women, "cows."

Mrs. Georgia Theresa Gilmore, citizen of Montgomery since 1920. Couldn't wait for any boycott, stopped riding in October, 1955. Tired of hearing "Come out, nigger, and go into the back. Saw too many others insulted, standing over empty seats and not permitted to sit in them.

"I told that bus driver when the company gets it all together, they can't tell Negro money from white money."

"That red headed, freckled-faced bus driver on the S. Jackson line is a "very nasty bus driver.

The nastiest I've ever seen."

Richard Jordan, 26 years in Montgomery, riding buses, taking insults. Bad experiences? "Too many to recall them all. Remembers how they made his pregnant wife get up on trips to doctor "her time was close," to give up seat to whites.

Della Perkins, 14 years or residence, and eager to testify. She was called an "ugly black ape." She's still mad about it. Asked if she had talked with anybody about the case.

"Yes, Attorney Gray.

Three solicitors straightened up (this is it)

Q. "What did he tell you?

A. "He told me to tell the truth."

No further questions.

Gladys Moore, in Montgomery since 1942. Very familiar with the "code of seating" on the Montgomery City Lines.

Whites enter through the front First ten seats reserved for whites.

Negroes enter from the back. Last ten seats reserved for colored.

In white neighborhoods, only daring Negroes sit in "middle seats" bus drivers will make them move, under threat of arrest, regardless of whether or not all seats in "colored reserve" are taken.

"Git up nigger. Git back" is the stockcommand.

Compliance means peace. Resistance means arrest.

In predominantly Negro neighborhoods, company relaxes the rigidity of its rule on "middle seats." Since these buses are jam packed with colored passengers going downtown, these seats may be used, but at the risk of having to give them up if white passengers board the bus and all white "reserved" are filled.

The story is becoming monotonous already. State has stopped making objections. Judge seems bored, finally he takes a hand in the proceedings.

"For my own information" he purrs, "why did you stop riding the buses on December 5."

Mrs. Moore: Because I didn't like the way they treated Mrs. Parks, it wasn't fair, Judge.

Judge: Did you attend any of those mass meetings?

Mrs. Moore: Yes, several of them.

Judge: Was Rev. King there?

Mrs. Moore: Yes he was, almost every minister in town was there.

Judge: Who said stop riding the buses?

Mrs. Moore: 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery.

Shouts, applause, laughter were quickly quelled.

Judge Carter says those in contempt of court go to jail.

But, now the judge knows.

A CROSS SECTION of the 90 defendants in the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott who still await trial (pending appeal of the Rev. Martin L. King's conviction and fine) includes these same members of the Montgomery Improvement Association. Standing on the courthouse steps are: Levi Hamilton, driver; Marcus Johns, office worker at Citizens Club headquarters; Matthew Kenney, driver; Miss Ida Caldwell, executive board, MIA; J. N. King, executive board. Top row: James Mitchell, NAACP member; Rev. H. H. Hubbard, pastor, Bethel Baptist Church and executive board member; Rev. H. J. Palmer, Caanan Baptist Church, also executive board member, and Wiley Nelson, pool driver.

CHIEF DISPATCHER—Dr. Rich Harris of Dean's Drug Store is the key man in the car pool dispatching for the bus protest. Here he wears the ear phones which keep him constantly in touch with would-be riders and enables him to dispatch pool cars when needed. Store is located at Monroe and Jefferson Sts.

Negro Woman Withdraws Action On Segregation

Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 2-3-54

A Negro woman who joined in a federal suit attacking segregated travel in Alabama said yesterday she was withdrawing from the action because she "didn't know" what she was signing.

Jeannette Reese, one of five Negro women who filed the complaint Wednesday, told Mayor W. A. Gayle she was surprised to see her name listed as one of the plaintiffs.

"You know I don't want nothing to do with that mess," she told the Mayor.

Several hours after the action was filed, the second bomb to be tossed within two days at the home of Negro leaders in the bus boycott exploded harmlessly Wednesday night in the front yard of E. D. Nixon, former state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The 64-year-old housemaid said her husband received an anonymous telephone call Wednesday night warning her to get out of town.

She said her employer told her when she came to work yesterday that "she was surprised" at seeing the Reese woman's name among those signing the suit.

She issued her statement in the mayor's office in the presence of a newspaper reporter.

But Negro Atty. Fred Gray, one of the lawyers filing suit in behalf of the women, said the Reese woman's statement was "far from the truth. He said she knew what she was signing.

The woman said she never heard the word "suit" mentioned when she was in Gray's office.

Mayor Gayle meanwhile, speaking for the City Commission, charged that filing of the suit is "proof beyond any doubt that Negroes never wanted better bus service as they were claiming, but complete integration."

The mayor pointed out he had made the charge two weeks ago when it was announced that the City Commission was breaking off negotiations with boycott leaders, who he said had rejected all "reasonable" plans for a compromise.

He said city attorneys will study and contest the suit in federal court, adding:

"As the city commission, we do not intend to be deprived of any phase of our southern way of life without doing all in our power in a legal way to prevent it."

NEGRO MAID TAKES HER NAME OFF SUIT

Commercial Appeal

Says Husband, Ex-Employer Persuaded Her

Memphis, Tenn.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 2.—(UP)—A 64-year-old Negro house maid said Thursday her husband and a former employer persuaded her to have her name taken from a suit asking that state and city bus segregation laws be ruled unconstitutional.

Jeaneatta Reese said she knew what she was signing when she put her signature to the suit which was filed in United States District Court Wednesday by Negro attorney Fred Gray.

However, she said that after receiving several threatening telephone calls Wednesday night she called a detective she knew and he advised her to contact her former employer and discuss the matter with him.

She said the one-time employer told her "the best thing I could do was take my name off that petition."

The woman said her husband became "irritated" when he learned she had signed the petition without his knowledge. She said after her husband received a telephone call Thursday telling him to get his wife out of town by midnight, he demanded she go to Mayor W. A. Gayle and have her name stricken.

She said she went to attorney Gray's office earlier Thursday about another matter, but told him "she wanted to go on" with the petition.

Gray said Thursday he would comply with the woman's wishes in withdrawing her name.

Why Three Judges Will Hear The Bus Case

Advertiser

Some readers have asked why a three-member court will be empanelled to hear the suit brought by Montgomery Negroes against city and state laws governing segregated transportation.

Thurs. 2-2-56

A federal statute requires that when the constitutionality of a state statute is attacked, a three-judge court must hear the case. One of the judges must be a member of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; one a judge of the district court in which the cases was filed (in this case, Judge Frank Johnson); the third may be either a district or circuit judge.

Montgomery, Ala.

There's no way in the world of knowing how long it will take to get a final answer in the case. (A district court has already ruled, however, that Columbia, South Carolina, may not segregate passengers on city buses.)

A federal statute requires that cases involving an attack on the constitutionality of a state statute shall be heard as soon as "practicable" after filing. In other words, such cases are given a priority, but "practicable" is subject to a variety of interpretations.

In the appeal of the Negro admissions case, the University of Alabama unsuccessfully argued that the original hearing should have been held before a three-judge court. However, this motion was denied, presumably because no state statute specifically forbids the University from admitting Negroes, and thus constitutionality was not at issue.

The legal maneuvers on both sides are almost without end in a case such as the bus challenge, but we understand that it is unlikely it will drag on as long as the University of Alabama case, which dates back to 1952.

Negro Asks Name Be Withdrawn From Suit

Fri. 2-3-56 P.1

Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 2 (U.P.)—A 64-year-old Negro housemaid, one of five Negro women who filed suit asking that state and city bus segregation laws be ruled unconstitutional, said today she did not know what she was signing and asked that her name be withdrawn from the suit.

Jeaneatta Reese said she went to Negro Atty. Fred Gray's office to "take some insurance papers." She said she agreed to sign some papers after Gray asked her if she had been treated unfairly on city buses, but "he didn't say anything about a suit."

Gray issued an immediate denial and charged in turn that "pressure" had been brought to bear on the woman. "I know she had worked for some prominent people in town and I imagine they brought a lot of pressure against her," he said.

"She understood throughly what she was doing," the attorney said. "At the time there were four or five other persons in my office and we discussed the suit in detail."

Gray said he would comply with the woman's wishes in withdrawing her name, but he said he had not been contacted directly by her yet.

Withdrawal of one plaintiff from the suit, filed yesterday in Federal District Court, would not affect the validity of the action, according to legal authorities.

The suit asked for temporary injunctions against the City Commission, the chief of police and the Montgomery bus lines while the constitutionality of the laws is being determined and permanent injunctions upon final disposition of the case.

Post-Herald

The defendants in the suit were served with notice of the action today. They have 20 days in which to file and answer.

The Negro women asked a three-member court to rule that the defendants "in conspiring among themselves and with others to compel" Negroes to use City Bus facilities and in seeking to enforce "said unconstitutional statutes and ordinances" have violated the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

The City Bus Lines has been boycotted by Negroes here for more than two months in a dispute over segregated seating.

Other plaintiffs in the case are Aurelia S. Browder, Susie McDonald, Claudette Colvin and Mary Louise Smith.

Gray said Jeaneatta Reese told him today that she received some threatening telephone calls last night, and he said she was "disturbed a little." P.2

"I asked her if she wanted her name withdrawn and she said she wanted to go on," Gray said.

The woman announced her intention of withdrawing from the suit after a conference with Mayor W. A. Gayle.

Meanwhile, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, one of the defendants in the segregation suit, reported that his officers had turned up no leads in the bombing last night at the home of a Negro boycott leader.

A "mild blast" damaged a fence and blew a small hole in the lawn of the home of E. D. Nixon, former state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

It was the second bombing in two days. A dynamite charge was set off at the home of the Rev. M. L. King, a boycott spokesman, Monday night. No one was injured in either blast.

Judge Orders Bus Line To Abandon Integration

A Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Thurs. 5-10-

Jones Cites Laws Barring Race Mixing

P.1

Holding that the Supreme Court hasn't outlawed bus segregation yet, Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones, in Circuit Court directed Montgomery City Lines yesterday to abandon its new integration policy.

He ruled that nothing in the U.S. Constitution gives the federal government the right to prohibit the states from segregating bus passengers in intrastate transportation.

With that conclusion, he held Montgomery city and Alabama state segregation laws consitutional and ordered the bus company here to "comply with and abide" with them.

Reynolds C. Mills, assistant superintendet of Montgomery City Lines, said the company will comply with Judge Jones' order.

Mills said officials of National City Lines, Inc., Chicago, parent company of the local bus lines, will make the decision on whether the circuit court order is appealed.

Jones' decision granting an injunction against further compliance with the bus company's recent integration order came at the request of the City of Montgomery, whose officials and attorneys predicted roiting and other violence if the segregation laws are broken down.

The judge took note of that threat and observed in his written order yesterday:

TENSION, UNREST

"A situation of tension and unrest has been created in the City of Montgomery, which is likely to explode into violence at any time, if not restrained."

Most Montgomery Negroes have boycotted city buses for nearly six months even despite the company's instructions to its drivers to refrain from enforcing the segregation laws. Negro leaders voted a mass meeting recently to continue the boycott until city and state officials recognize integration.

There have been no reports of actual integration aboard the buses even though the company abandoned segregation as a policy. Negroes who have continued to patronize the buses have remained in the rear, where they always sat.

HEARING FRIDAY

Jones' decision came only two days ahead of a scheduled federal court hearing on a suit challenging constitutionality of city and state segregation laws.

A three-judge panel will try the suit here Friday. The complaint bears the names of six Negroes and was filed as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

What will happen to Jones' injuntive order if the federal court rules the segregation laws unconstitutional couldn't immediately be determined. The courts and opposing attorneys declined to speculate.

Without elaborating, Jones wrote in his decision that "There is no straight out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a state or city may not require the separation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

A Supreme Court ruling on April 23 was interpreted as outlawing segregation on city buses, but some lawyers contended it didn't settle the issue.

Advertiser

The decision dismissed an appeal from a ruling of the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals which, in turn, has held bus segregation in Columbia, S.C. unconstitutional and had sent the case back to the original trial court to determine the question of damages.

P. 6 A

Whether the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal on the grounds that segregation is invalid or because the case was still pending in the lower courts wasn't made clear.

Jones questioned validity of the Federal Court of Appeals' ruling, holding it "Is not well reasoned, is not sound law" and "At best it is simply the guess of the Fourth Circuit Court of what the Supreme Court will hold."

Basing his conclusion on the 10th amendment to the U.S. Constitution which says powers not delegated to the federal government by the organic law or prohibited to the states are reserved for the states or the people, Jones asked:

"Where in the United States Constitution is there any delegation of power to the United States Government to say that a state cannot make reasonable regulations for the carriage of passengers on public conveyances wholly within the state?

"Where in the federal constitution is there one word, one sentence, or one paragraph, saying that the sovereign states of this union, the states which created the federal government—and many of whose constitutions antedate the federal constitution — are prohibited from making. . . reasonable rules for the separation of the races. . ?"

Continuing, he said the power claimed for the federal government by the court of appeals in the South Carolina bus case "does not exist and never has existed. It is a power reserved to the states and their people."

"This court will not be a party to filching the power from the state," he declared.

Montgomery, Ala., March 21.—Negroes testified today that white drivers abused "all 50,000" of their race here—including the pregnant and the blind—and for that reason they stopped riding city buses.

Witness after witness testified as to mistreatment by drivers as the defense presented its case in the trial of the Rev. M. L. King, one of 90 Negroes charged with conspiring to boycott the bus line.

Six defense lawyers tried to show by such testimony that the 15-week-old boycott actually was a spontaneous protest demonstration rather than a calculated scheme to put the transit system on the rocks financially, as the State contends. The State rested this morning.

Spectators Applaud

An Alabama law of 1921 banning such a conspiracy against a business provided the basis for the prosecution in a 100-year-old courtroom, where spectators, most of them defendants, broke into applause at one point in the defense testimony.

That was when witness Ella Perkins said none of the city's 50,000 Negro population was spared arrogant treatment from the bus drivers.

A later witness, Martha Kate Walker, said that once last year she was taking her blind husband, who lost his sight in Germany in an accident after World War II, home on the bus.

Says Complaint Ignored

As they left the bus, she said, "my husband had his left foot on the ground but his right foot still on the step" when the bus started off suddenly.

"I screamed and a white lady on the bus told the driver to wait a minute, but he kept on going," the witness said. She said her husband skinned his ankle in getting clear of the bus. She waited until the driver came around again, she said, and told him about the incident, but he told her he didn't know anything about it.

Mrs. Walker said she complained later to the manager of the bus company, but never heard anything further from him.

Tells of Name Calling

Another witness, Pullman porter Richard S. Jordan, testified that several years ago a bus driver brusquely ordered his pregnant wife to give up her seat to a white passenger.

"I'm a man, and I'm supposed to protect her, but I just looked out the window," Jordan said bitterly.

He said the driver called him "boy," and that the common designation for their race by drivers was "boy, girl, or nigger."

Mrs. Perkins said she and other Negro women had been called "ugly black apes" by the white drivers. Once, she said, she told an arrogant driver she wanted her fare back, but he put her off without it.

More Witnesses Due

The defense had indicated earlier it might finish today, but a number of witnesses were still to be heard at the end of the third day of the trial.

Conviction under the old anti-boycott law carries six months in prison and/or a $1,000 fine.

Mrs. Perkins testified she stopped riding the buses December 5, the day the boycott is alleged to have started, but she did not give a specific reason until Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who will give the verdict in the juryless trial, pressed her.

Then she said it was because "we were all mistreated on the buses."

'Who Is "We All?"'

"Who is 'we all?'" the judge asked.

"All of us, 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery," she replied.

When applause broke out, Judge Carter warned that if it occurred again, "I'll make you all stand and go outside, or take you to jail."

The State rested after 2½ days of testimony designed to show that the Negroes formed an organization, collected funds and set up motor pools to compete with the public transit system and wreck it economically.

Alabama Law Rules Buses, Judge Holds

Constitution

Thurs. 5-10-56

Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 9 (AP)—Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones today ordered Montgomery City Lines to rescind its recent policy of racial integration on city buses.

P.1

Granting an injunction requested by the city of Montgomery, Jones directed the bus company and its employes "to comply with and abide by all the provisions of the ordinances of the city of Montgomery and the statutes of Alabama relating to the seating of white and Negro passengers."

City and state laws require segregation in all public transportation.

Jones, in a written order, said "There is no straight-out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a city or state may not require the separation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

He mentioned the recent Supreme Court decision which dismissed an appeal from South Carolina, which at first was interpreted as outlawing segregation but which later was described by some attorneys as merely dismissing the appeal because the South Carolina case was still pending in lower courts on a question of damages.

Some Testimony Admitted About Bus-Boycott Threat

Courier-Journal P.5
Wed. 3-21-56 Louisville, Ky.

Montgomery, Ala., March 20 (AP)—State's attorneys sought to show today that Negroes have been threatened for riding buses during the segregation boycott in Montgomery, but only part of the testimony along that line was allowed.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, presiding at the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., one of 90 Negroes indicted on boycotting charges, threw out the entire testimony of one Negro witness who said his life had been threatened.

But the judge permitted two other Negroes to testify about threats they said they had received.

At the same time, defense attorneys brought from one prosecution witness a statement that Negro ministers he had heard speak at mass meetings during the boycott had made a point of appealing to their race to shun violence. That witness was Joe Azbell, city editor of The Montgomery Advertiser.

The hearing recessed until tomorrow morning. The State indicated it may finish presenting its case then.

Janitor's Story Admitted

Carter excluded the testimony of Willie Carter, a young Negro who testified that another member of his race he had never seen before picked him up in his car and warned him against violence if he continued to ride buses to and from work.

But the court refused to rule out the story told by a Negro Courthouse janitor, Ernest Smith, who said an unidentified Negro tried to pull him off a bus. Smith said he knocked the other man down and continued his trip.

A Negro woman, Beatrice Jackson, testified that a Negro man whose name she said she didn't know beat her and cut her with a knife because she insisted on riding buses to work.

The state in two days of testimony has attempted to link King to what the prosecution calls a conspiracy to boycott the racially segregated Montgomery city lines buses.

Despite defense objections, the prosecution got into the record testimony today from seven bus drivers about incidents of violence against the bus line early in the boycott.

A Negro leader told how a smooth-running motor pool provides transportation for the boycotting Negroes.

Other witnesses testified that the Montgomery Improvement Association, which was formed the day the boycott started, arranged the pool and has paid for gasoline and other expenses.

Jury to Probe Legality Of Alabama Bus Boycott

Post + Times Herald P.22
Tues. 2-14-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 13 (AP)—A county grand jury composed of 17 white men and one Negro was told by Circuit Judge Eugene Carter today to determine whether the 10-week-old Negro boycott of City Lines buses here is illegal.

If it is illegal, the judge declared, the boycott must be stopped. Washington, D.C.

E. T. Sinclair, a waiter, was the Negro seated on the grand jury.

Judge Carter also told the grand jury "no court, whether it be Federal court, state court or city court, can interfere with your investigation. You are the supreme inquisitorial body."

Judge Carter declared "the doctrine of hate has no place here, and particularly has no place in the churches." He said Montgomery "has been a city that both races have had pleasure living in. I say to both black and white, let's continue to live as neighbors."

In directing the jury to determine the legality or illegality of the organized refusal of Negroes to ride Montgomery City Lines buses, the court declared:

"It is recognized under the Constitution, state and Federal, that a person's business is property and if lawfully conducted is entitled to protection from unlawful interference."

The boycott began Dec. 5 in protest against the arrest of a Negro woman who refused to move to the colored section of a bus. The woman, Rosa Parks, was fined $14 in city court. State and city laws require segregation on all public transportation.

AME Bishops Back Boycott

Chicago, Ill.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. — (ANP) — The African Methodist Episcopal Church's Council of Bishops called on Negroes last week to apply economic pressure in "the spirit of Montgomery" to those who oppose racial integration.

In a three-page resolution, the council commended Montgomery, Ala., Negroes for their boycott of city buses because of segregated seating facilities. The boycott now in its 10th week, started after a Negro woman was fined for refusing to abide by Montgomery segregation laws.

"As followers of Christ, we are opposed to violence and mob action," said the resolution. "This latter must not be confused with mass action, a technique we must learn to employ in certain fields against those who would exploit us. . .The spirit of Montgomery must be applied wherever possible against individuals, corporations, both local and national, who fail to stand up and be counted."

The resolution was approved by 13 bishops and released by Bishop S. L. Greene of Atlanta, the council's president.

Others signing the document were Bishops G. W. Baber of Detroit, D. Ward Nichols of New York, F. D. Jordan of Los Angeles, F. M. Reid of Columbia, S. C., H. T. Primm of New Orleans, A. J. Allen of Columbus, Ohio, R. R. Wright of Philadelphia, J. Gomez of Waco, Texas; I. H. Bonner of Mobile, Ala., C. A. Gibbs of Jacksonville, Fla., E. C. Hatcher of Nashville, Tenn., and W. R. Judge Jones Delays Ruling On Race Laws

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. 4/

An attorney for the Montgomery City Lines Bus Co. declared yesterday that continued segregation on local buses would result in "greater danger of public disorder" and subject the bus company to repeated prosecution under civil rights laws. A.M. 3-4-56

Robert Thrun of New York asked Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones to deny an injunction asked by the city to compel the bus company to enforce city segregation laws on local buses.

Judge Jones, following a hearing which lasted only 45 minutes, took the motion for the injunction under advisement and announced that a decision would be rendered within a "few days."

CONTINUED LOSS

The bus company, threatened with continued loss of Negro patronage on one side and possible cancellation of their operating franchise on the other, now faces a possible court order to require the maintenance of separate seating facilities on city buses.

Attorney Thrun, defending the bus line's recent racial integration order, contended that city and state segregation laws no longer protect carriers from civil rights prosecution.

He declared that to continue segregated buses would result in "endless lawsuits" against the company and heavy expense in court litigation.

The attorney's remarks brought a charge from City Attorney Walter Knabe that the "bus company seems more interested in avoiding lawsuits than in public safety on the buses."

HEALTH, SAFETY

Commissioner of Public Affairs Clyde Sellers, called to the witness stand yesterday by City Attorney Walter Knabe, testified that "public health and safety" in Montgomery would be jeopardized and that the future existence of the bus transportation system here would be threatened if segregation barriers on buses were brokn down.

Citing acts of violence which have occurred during the bus boycott here, the police commissioner said that unless the injunction is granted requiring obedience to local bus segregation laws, "public riots, assaults and injuries" would result.

After pointing out that a "serious situation" now exists in local bus transportation, Knabe said that although Negroes are still taking seats in the rear of buses as in the past, "they may not continue to do so without a court order." "This could result in an outbreak of violence," he declared.

Thrun cited four federal court cases on segregation, including the recent South Carolina case (Flemming vs. South Carolina), and another suit filed by local Negro boycott leaders against the city and Montgomery City Lines, in asking that the injunction be dismissed. Advertiser

GREATER DANGER

Countering the city officials' charge that desegregation on buses would result in disorder and disturbances between the races, the New York attorney said the continued enforcement of segregation on buses would create a "greater danger of physical disturbances." P.2-A

He added that federal court decisions, principally the South Carolina case, bound the bus company to post notices that segregation of passengers no longer prevails. A.M. 3-4-56

The attorney said the bus company was put in a "very vulnerable position" by the Supreme Court decision which "left in full effect the decision of the district court."

Thrun said the bus company has already suffered heavy losses through the five-month bus boycott and that if segregation on local buses is continued the company would face numerous federal suits under civil rights laws. This would mean an "unbearable cost" through court litigation, he added.

The attorney said the decision of the National City Lines, Inc. to order desegregation on their buses came after careful consideration of city laws and customs."

He pointed out that other southern cities operating as subsidiaries of National City Lines, Inc. have ordered discontinuance of segregation on buses in line with the national firm's regulation.

Alabama Atty.-Gen. John Patterson and Asst. Atty. Gen. Gordon Madison observed the proceedings yesterday "strictly as spectators."

Others present were Reynolds C. Mills, assistant superintendent of trasnportation, Montgomry City Lines, and B. W. Franklin, manager of National City Lines, Inc.

J. H. Bagley, superintendent of transportation for the local bus line, is recuperating from a heart attack suffered last week and was unable to attend the proceedings.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 27.—With the Southland split into camps of black skins and white skins and with every American choosing sides, fear is the only daily dish shared here by all—fear of law turning into lynch, of ancient customs trampled.

New York, N.Y.

In such a clouded time the reporter seeks, too often in vain, a leader whose only motive is peaceful progress and who believes harmony yet possible in this house divided.

I think I have found one such leader and it is fitting that he is a man of white skin and a minister "doing the work of the Lord."

He is the Rev. Robert Graetz and you could see him today leaving his small, tidy Montgomery home at dawn, a 27-year-old with a younger, laughing face and fine features and blond hair. He moves to his car with the easy, muscular gait of a college athlete and drives downtown picking up Negroes and taking them to work.

"Good morning, Reverend, how's the 'chauffeur' today?"

"Hello, Reverend. God bless you today."

He makes seven or eight round trips, clocking 50 miles in city traffic, because his passengers refuse to ride the public buses on which other passengers get the best seats —Jim Crow.

This young man is no radical. Visiting him in the Trinity Lutheran Church, I sensed an inner calm like the eye of a hurricane. And indeed a hurricane of hate seethes outside, for he is the white pastor of an all-black congregation.

He is no radical because what he stands for is basically similar to the words of intelligent Southern white leaders. Neither he nor they doubt that the Negro will "in God's good time" graduate to full membership in the human race. Neither he nor they think it will come overnight—presto—as if some magic wand could erase centuries of perjudice from the brain of man.

When a Northern radical, no matter how well meaning, calls for federal troops to impose with bayonet the desegregation order of the U.S. Supreme Court, Mr. Graetz shudders. Continue peaceful progress, yes. Step-by-step to equality, yes. But force? No, never.

As a boy in Charleston, West Virginia, Bob Graetz was influenced by his paternal grandfather, a Lutheran minister. As a high school student—no isolated bookworm but a friendly extrovert and a cross-country runner—he made his decision.

At the Lutheran Seminary in Columbus, Ohio, he first studied race relations and was deeply troubled by statistics that showed the "equal but separate" educational facilities for Negroes to be thin and false phrases.

Salary, $1100.

Ordained last summer, he seized the opening at Trinity Church here, one rich with danger and poor with profit. His salary: $1100 a year.

His boyishness suprised the black elders. Negro extremists were shocked when he stated simply his dream: "I'm not interested in starting a revolution. If we raise the standard of the Negro, integration will come automatically."

What does he gamble? His life—and the life of his pretty brunette wife and three small children. Since he supported the bus boycott, his phone jingles maybe 20 times daily and he is abused in gutter terms by anonymous callers.

Night riders have slashed two tires on his parked car and poured sugar into the gasoline tank. Friends came to him and offered pistols but he refused. "I wouldn't kill anything . . ."

If a Mob Comes . . .

His friends have placed strong lamps around his home and the approaches are floodlighted like a ball park. Negro neighbors carefully watch every white man's car that slows nearby.

"What," I asked him, "would happen if a mob marches into this black belt?"

"They better not," he said, his brow a relief map of worry. "There are guns in every Negro home and men ready to use them."

Bus Segregation Decision Delayed

Times-Picayune
Fri. 5-4-56 P.5

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 3 (AP) — Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones Thursday declined to rule immediately on a request by the city of Montgomery for an injunction to prevent racial integration on city buses.

New Orleans, La.

He said he would announce his decision in "two or three days."

Montgomery City Lines, which has abandoned segreation despite city and state laws, contended at a hearing that it can no longer afford to enforce city and state segration laws in view of federal court decisions against them.

City attorneys argued that Montgomery and Alabama laws are still in effect regardless of federal court decisions in other states.

The US supreme court april 23 dismissed an appeal from the fourth circuit court of appeals and left standing an earlier ruling by the circuit court knocking out bus segregation in South Carolina.

Montgomery Bus Boycott Brings Arrests But The 'Passive Resistance' Continues—Site For City's Steam Plant Is Chosen

By LOUIS SILVER

THE RACIAL segregation story, a best seller for almost two years among Southern readers, held its top headline position last week with indictments in Montgomery, Ala., against Negroes boycotting the city bus system.

In Memphis, civic-minded residents formed a new organization aimed at retaining harmony between white and Negro. Called the "Greater Memphis Race Relations Committee," the organization will invite Negroes to serve on both its board of directors and executive committee.

Plans for the organization were devised by a special committee composed of George W. Grider, W. W. 'Bill' Scott and Herbert Jordan. The group pointedly stressed its awareness that "Southern custom and tradition of long standing" have been upset by anti-segregation rulings.

Louis Silver

A grand jury at Montgomery indicted about 115 Negroes for violating a state anti-boycott law. For 11 weeks they have boycotted the city buses in protest to the fining of a Negro woman, Rosa Parks, for refusing to move to a Negro section of a bus.

About 3,000 Negroes attended a mass meeting in Montgomery where ministers urged them to use "passive resistance" in continuing the boycott.

Plant Site Chosen

These events also made Mid-South headlines last week:

City and county officials picked a 300-acre tract on the south side of McKellar Lake opposite Presidents Island as the site of the proposed municipal electric power plant. Work is expected to begin on the site as soon as the land in Ensley Bottoms can be acquired.

The City Commission approved more than 15 miles of new curb parking restrictions recommended recently by Mayor Orgill's Transit Study Committee. They call for no standing, stopping or parking along curb lanes of affected streets during hours of restrictions. Commissioner Claude Armour said the new bans probably will go into effect within a month, or just as soon as signs can be painted and erected.

Floods sent rain-soaked residents in the southern section of Dyersburg, Tenn., for higher ground for the second time within a month. Plans were announced to help Dyer County's flood problem with a drainage program along the Forked Deer and Obion Rivers and completion of a levee system.

FBI Bill Vetoed

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi vetoed a bill passed at the current legislative session at his suggestion and designed to prevent FBI agents from making civil rights investigations in that state. The Governor said at Jackson his action was no indication of his "unrelenting determination to preserve that which we know to be right," but based on "a material change in the conditions which existed" when he recommended the legislation last year.

A new legal threat against the West Memphis dog racing track was raised in Little Rock by the Good Citizens League of Crittenden County. W. H. Dillahunty of West Memphis, attorney for the league, filed a petition asking that the State Racing Commission be enjoined from issuing a racing permit and also that Chancery Court declare the 1935 Dog Racing Law invalid because it violates the State Constitution.

Bus Ruling Is Defied In Alabama

Herald Tribune

New York, N.Y.

Lines Comply, Officials Balk

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Apr. 24 (AP).—An order to stop segregation on city buses brought angry threats of reprisal today from city and state officials who insisted that Alabama's segregation laws are still in effect despite the decision of the United States Supreme Court yesterday in a South Carolina case that all bus segregation is unconstitutional.

P. 17

Overruling a decision of Montgomery City Lines, Inc., to abandon its policy of separate seating of white and Negro passengers in compliance with the Supreme Court, a city official said any bus driver who permitted mixed seating and any passengers involved would face arrest.

There were no reports of actual mixed seating on the first day. An "Alabama Journal" reporter who spot-checked the buses said all the Negro riders he saw were seated in the rear, the part reserved for members of that race under the traditional segregation pattern.

Boycott Still On

Neither was there any indication that the bus company's readiness to discontinue enforcing city and state segregation laws would bring an immediate end to the five-month-old boycott by Negroes who have refused to patronize the segregated buses since Dec. 5.

Boycott May Bring Clear-Cut Ruling

Post-Herald

MONTGOMERY, May 7 (AP)—The lengthening Negro boycott of city buses in Montgomery may produce the first clear-cut decision from the Supreme Court on bus segregation.

Birmingham, Ala.

A suit challenging constitutionality of Montgomery city and Alabama state segregation laws will be heard by three-judge panel in Federal Court here Friday.

P. 2

The complaint, bearing the names of six Negroes and filed as an outgrowth of the mass boycott now in its sixth month, seeks a declaratory judgment holding the anti-racemixing laws invalid, and an injunction to stop the city and state from enforcing them.

Montgomery City Lines, a privately owned carrier which operates the city's only bus service, already has abandoned segregation for its part. Its drivers have been ordered to refrain from separating white and Negro passengers.

The City of Montgomery has asked Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in State Court for an injunction to compel the bus company to rescind the integration order. Jones may announce his ruling tomorrow.

City attorneys contended at a hearing last Thursday that the continued existence of the non-segregation policy has created serious tension in Montgomery

If the three-judge federal panel sitting here Friday takes jurisdiction and rules on the legality of the segregation laws as requested, the outcome either way is certain to be appealed direct to the Supreme Court.

City and state attorneys have questioned the panel's jurisdiction, arguing that the attorney general's office, although made a defendant, doesn't exercise jurisdiction over city buses in Montgomery.

The Negroes contend the panel does have jurisdiction and are asking for an injunction to prevent either the city or state from enforcing bus segregation laws in Montgomery.

If the panel's decision goes direct to the Supreme Court, it probably will get there ahead of the case from South Carolina on which the high court acted April 23, since that case must be tried again on a question of damages violating Alabama's anti-boycott law, issued a statement saying: "There will be no change in our position immediately." He did not elaborate. Mr. King's statement was issued through Negro attorney Fred Gray during a meeting of the executive board of the Montgomery Improvement Association, an organization formed in December to support the bus protest. Mr. King said, however, that a mass meeting is scheduled for Thursday night and that some action might be taken then. Mr. King is president of the association.

Court May Rule Soon

The ruling of the Supreme Court yesterday applied directly only to South Carolina, and Alabama officials contended segregation laws here will remain intact until a court order is directed specifically at them.

That could come May 11, the date set for hearing on an anti-segratgation suit already on file attacking the constitutionality of Montgomery city and Alabama state laws. The suit was filed as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

Until the city and state laws are knocked down, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and other city officials and Jack Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, declared that segregation will be rigidly maintained.

The city commission, all three of those members belong to the Whtie Citizens Council, issued a statement saying it "does not consider that the Suprem Court decision construes Alabama laws or city ordinances by which we are governed."

The council is an organization dedicated to the preservation of racial segregation.

"We, therefore, expect the bus company and all other persons to abide by all existing laws and ordinances," the statement added.

Commissioner Sellers said he would order the arrest of any passenger or bus driver who permits or indulges in desegregation.

"I'll be responsible for any arrests and I'll give the direct orders for those arrests," he said. "As far as I'm concerned, this damn thing (the Supreme Court ruling) applies only to South Carolina. Until they tell us in this suit filed here that it applies to us, I'm going to enforce all city laws to maintain segregation."

Wire to Chicago

Mr. Owen sent a telegram to Roy Fitzerald, president of National City Lines in Chicago, the parent company of Montgomery City Lines, demanding that the integration order be withdrawn.

The P. S. C. president also directed all other carriers operating in Alabama to "strictly adhere to all present existing segregation laws in our state or suffer the consequences."

Without replying directly to Mr. Owen, one National City Lines spokesman in Chicago said: "We're not going to enforce segregation."

"This company has no choice but to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court," vice-president B. W. Franklin told The Associated Press. "For that reason we are not going to attempt to enforce segregation.

"We always comply with laws in effect. Now the Supreme Court says the secregation laws no longer are Constitutional—no longer in effect. "We're not going to enforce segregation."

The company also operates bus lines in Mobile, Ala.; Jackson, Miss.; Tampa, Fla.; Tulsa, Okla. and Beaumont, Wichita Falls and El Paso, Tex.

Officials at Tampa and Jackson said segregation would be continued on buses operating there despite the company statement in Chicago.

A few Negroes rode the buses today despite the announced end of segregation. R. C. Mills, assistant manager of Montgomery City Lines, said the number was about the same that continued to use the buses throughout the long boycott.

Commission Ready to Void License

Montgomery, Ala., April 25 (AP)—The city commission declared today that Montgomery City lines, which has abandoned racial segregation, will have to change its stand if it continues to operate here.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said all three members of the commission are "100 per cent together" in their determination to enforce city and state segregation laws despite the recent Supreme court decision.

The commissioners are all members of the pro-segregation Montgomery County Citizens council. One commission member, Frank Parks, said "they [the bus company] have a contract and will have to abide by it or be subject to court action."

Revocation Threatened

Altho there is no segregation provision in the recently renewed 10 year franchise, Gayle said the contract can be revoked if the company is violating the law. The commission insists that city and state segregation statutes are still in effect.

Gayle said city officials and officers of the bus company will confer late today or tomorrow. Earlier today, a bus company official promised to back up any driver arrested for permitting integration.

The statement from B. W. Franklin, vice president of National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago came at a news conference. Montgomery City Lines, Inc., which operates the city's only bus service, is a subsidiary of the Chicago firm.

Still Segregate Selves

There was still no indication of actual integration on the buses despite the company's order to its drivers to stop enforcing segregation. Reporters who watched the buses for the second day said the Negroes they saw rode in the rear as usual.

Franklin, with an attorney at his side, made his statement in answer to a threat from Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers to arrest any driver who permits mixing of passengers and any passenger who violates city and state segregation laws.

Daily Tribune

"We don't want any controversy with local authorities," Franklin told reporters. "We try to avoid controversy with anyone. But if our drivers are obeying our instructions—certainly we'll help them."

Line Won't Change Order

The bus company official said National City lines doesn't intend to change its order for desegregation in Montgomery and other southern cities where it operates bus lines.

"We informed our operators that they no longer had to enforce segregation and that it would be in violation of the Supreme court if we did," he explained.

Meanwhile, the five month long boycott of the buses by Montgomery Negroes continued despite the integration order.

Judge Orders Bus Line To Abandon Integration

Advertiser

Thurs. 5-10-56

Jones Cites Laws Barring Race Mixing

Montgomery, Ala.

Holding that the Supreme Court hasn't outlawed bus segregation yet, Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones, in Circuit Court directed Montgomery City Lines yesterday to abandon its new integration policy.

He ruled that nothing in the U.S. Constitution gives the federal government the right to prohibit the states from segregating bus passengers in intrastate transportation.

With that conclusion, he held Montgomery city and Alabama state segregation laws consitutional and ordered the bus company here to "comply with and abide" with them.

Reynolds C. Mills, assistant superintendet of Montgomery City Lines, said the company will comply with Judge Jones' order.

Mills said officials of National City Lines, Inc., Chicago, parent company of the local bus lines, will make the decision on whether the circuit court order is appealed.

Jones' decision granting an injunction against further compliance with the bus company's recent integration order came at the request of the City of Montgomery, whose officials and attorneys predicted roiting and other violence if the segregation laws are broken down.

The judge took note of that threat and observed in his written order yesterday:

TENSION, UNREST

"A situation of tension and unrest has been created in the City of Montgomery, which is likely to explode into violence at any time, if not restrained."

Most Montgomery Negroes have boycotted city buses for nearly six months even despite the company's instructions to its drivers to refrain from enforcing the segregation laws. Negro leaders voted a mass meeting recently to continue the boycott until city and state officials recognize integration.

There have been no reports of actual integration aboard the buses even though the company abandoned segregation as a policy. Negroes who have continued to patronize the buses have remained in the rear, where they always sat.

HEARING FRIDAY

Jones' decision came only two days ahead of a scheduled federal court hearing on a suit challenging constitutionality of city and state segregation laws.

A three-judge panel will try the suit here Friday. The complaint bears the names of six Negroes and was filed as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

What will happen to Jones' injuntive order if the federal court rules the segregation laws unconstitutional couldn't immediately be determined. The courts and opposing attorneys declined to speculate.

Without elaborating, Jones wrote in his decision that "There is no straight out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a state or city may not require the separation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

Advertiser

A Supreme Court ruling on April 23 was interpreted as outlawing segregation on city buses, but some lawyers contended it didn't settle the issue.

Advertiser

The decision dismissed an appeal from a ruling of the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals which, in turn, has held bus segregation in Columbia, S.C. unconstitutional and had sent the case back to the original trial court to determine the question of damages.

P. 6-A

Whether the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal on the grounds that segregation is invalid or because the case was still pending in the lower courts wasn't made clear.

Jones questioned validity of the Federal Court of Appeals' ruling, holding it "Is not well reasoned, is not sound law" and "At best it is simply the guess of the Fourth Circuit Court of what the Supreme Court will hold."

Basing his conclusion on the 10th amendment to the U.S. Constitution which says powers not delegated to the federal government by the organic law or prohibited to the states are reserved for the states or the people, Jones asked:

"Where in the United States Constitution is there any delegation of power to the United States Government to say that a state cannot make reasonable regulations for the carriage of passengers on public conveyances wholly within the state?

"Where in the federal constitution is there one word, one sentence, or one paragraph, saying that the sovereign states of this union, the states which created the federal government—and many of whose constitutions antedate the federal constitution — are prohibited from making. . . reasonable rules for the separation of the races. . ?"

Continuing, he said the power claimed for the federal government by the court of appeals in the South Carolina bus case "does not exist and never has existed. It is a power reserved to the states and their people."

"This court will not be a party to filching the power from the state," he declared.

The Communist Party's official newspaper, The Daily Worker, has been printing articles under the byline of a Montgomerian on the bus boycott here.

The articles were written by Alfred Maund, 3 Hazel Hedge Lane. The married, 32-year-old writer is the father of one child.

A recent article under Maund's byline in the Worker was entitled: "How The Present Day KKK Took Over Montgomery."

His wife, Dorothy, has the contract for the publication of the newspaper for Craig Air Force Base. The publication The Craig Courier has its news furnished by military personnel and the advertisements and business end are handled by Mrs. Maund.

Maund, interviewed at the Southern Farmer where he has his offices as the makeup and copy editor of The Nation, a liberal magazine often under attack for its views, said the article appeared in the Communist organ without his knowledge.

Although the article appeared in thousands of copies of the Communist newspaper, Maund said he did not know anything of the insertions until shown a photostat by an Advertiser reporter.

The tall, slender blond said that he had not seen a copy of the Communist newspaper in five years.

Advertiser

"This is all news to me that they are printing my articles," he said, "I didn't know about it."

Maund said he wrote the articles for the Federated Press, which is a news syndicate subscribed to by labor and civil rights publications and that "apparently The Worker subscribes to the service."

"I think I will write them and find out about it," he said when questioned whether he would continue writing the articles. "Then I will decide what to do."

P. 6-A

He did not show any signs of particular concern that he was featured in the Communist newspaper but calmly said when shown the photostats:

ALFRED MAUND
Byline From Montgomery

"That is bad."

Maund said his articles were written on a volunteer basis and "I receive only a pittance for my work."

"It's nothing like what you get for Time or the New York Times. It's just a token payment," he said.

Asked what type of material the Federated Press expected to receive from him, he replied: "Labor news and civil rights and that sort of thing."

The articles in the communist newspaper mentioned several Montgomerians. One paragraph from Maund's article states:

"Police, accompanied by WCC members, have been touring the 'pickup lots,' 'shaking down' drivers in insulting fashion. At least half a dozen drivers were arrested, seemingly at random, for alleged disorderly conduct. The typical interviewing technique has been: 'Take off your hat, n——r, when you speak to me!"

Discussing at random his views on the boycott, Maund said he had not "taken too much part in it because I have a full job out here." The Nation is printed by the Southern Farmer but has no connection other than a printing contract with the firm or Aubrey Williams, the head of the firm. It is edited in New York.

Maund said he had attended two mass meetings of the Negro boycotters and the arraignment proceedings in Circuit Court.

Asked if he had any affiliation with The Daily Worker, Maund replied: "No, I have not seen a copy of it in five years. I am not a member of the Communist Party."

Asked for the names of the White Citizens Council members who he said in the Worker story accompanied the police Maund brushed off the question: "Oh, I have the names."

Then queried on the interviewing technique of "Take off your hat, n——r, when you speak to me," he said ne had information to substantiate his remark but declined to give the instances or names.

Maund with his wife, Dorothy, was present at the courthouse during the arraignment proceedings of the indicted boycott leaders. His wife had a camera with which she apparently was taking pictures. She conversed with reporters and with a Negro correspondent for some foreign publications as she remained on a bench outside the courtroom. She said her husband was a correspondent for the Federated Press which was a "mail service for labor publications," and she was helping him.

Maund, a native of Jennings, La., formerly was employed by The New Orleans Item, New Orleans Picayune and The Louisville Courier-Journal. He has been living in Montgomery for 14 months and said he had been a correspondent for the Federated Press during that period.

Discussing The Nation magazine for whom he works, Maund said that there had been a "besmearing article about the editor (Carey McWilliams) in Time when he took over." McWilliams has been mentioned in investigating committees. He said others who had been connected with The Nation also had been "besmeared."

Checking his wife's connection with the Craig Field Courier, spokesmen at the Public Information Office there said that she received the contract "strictly on a business basis." The spokesman said that she handles the advertisements but the editorial end is handled by military personnel. Craig is a training base for the Air Training Command.

Maund last night said he had called the Federated Press and inqured of their subscribers. He said publications using their material besides the Daily Worker included the Post in New York, Statistical Survy, UMW Journal, Union Engineer, and publications of the Packinghouse Workers and two Auto Workers Union locals.

Maund said he could not be expected to account for the "editorial policies of the newspapers that carried the articles from the Federated Press any more than an AP or UP writer could be expected to account for the editorial policies of the newspapers who receive its services."

Little Effect Seen From Leader's Conviction

Memphis Tenn.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 23.—(AP)—Negroes still refused to ride segregated city buses Friday despite the conviction of one of their leaders in the first of Montgomery's boycott trials.

A spokesman for Montgomery City Lines, Inc., said, however, "There might have been a few more" patronizing the bus line than there have been in recent days and weeks.

Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, was fined $500 Thursday after a four-day trial on charges of conspiring to boycott the bus[illegible]

Sat. 3-24-56

His fine was suspended and trials of 89 other defendants also indicted under Alabama's anti-boycott law were postponed after Rev. King filed notice of appeal. He has said he will fight to the United States Supreme Court if necessary.

Sat. 3-24-56

The protest began last Dec. 5 after a Negro woman, Rosa Parks, was arrested for refusing to move to another seat on a bus on orders from the driver. City and state laws require segregation in public transportation.

Educator refuses to talk for record

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 7—A school official cut short his speech on Montgomery's bus boycott and walked out of a meeting Friday when he learned that his remarks would be published.

William S. Garrett, assistant city-county school superintendent, was addressing the Montgomery County Parent-Teacher Assn.

He had spoken about three minutes, urging white teachers and parents to ride buses boycotted by Negroes.

Garrett paused and asked, "There's not a member of the press here, is there?"

A reporter for The Alabama Journal identified himself. Garrett asked that his remarks about the boycott be withheld from publication.

THE NEWSMAN said he couldn't agree to such "off the record" statements made at a public meeting, and the school official concluded his speech and left.

Garrett told the PTA members he had been advised by three representatives of Montgomery City Lines, Inc., that the bus company lost some $1000 a day in the first 90 days of the boycott.

The remainder of the PTA meeting was closed to the press after Garrett's talk.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The full text of the resolution adopted by the Montgomery Improvement Association Thursday night in continuing the bus boycott until the city of Montgomery decline to enforce the segregation laws is as follows:

Baltimore, Md.

WHEREAS, A majority of the Colored citizens of Montgomery, Alabama have refrained from riding city buses since Dec. 5, 1955 because of mistreatments and because of the unconstitutional seating arrangment, and

"Whereas, it was reported that on Monday, April 23, 1956, the U.S. Supreme Court held that city ordinances and state statutes requiring segregation on public conveyances for hire intra-state are unconstitutional, and

"Whereas, National City Lines, Inc.) parent of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc.) has issued a statement and instructed its drivers to cease and/or desist from enforcing city and state laws requiring segregation on city buses, and

* * *

"WHEREAS, it has been reported through reliable sources that several southern cities, including Richmond, Va.; Little Rock, Ark.; Dallas, Texas, and others ahve ended segregation on city buses; and white and colored passengers rode together on front seats without incidents, mishaps or disturbances, and of the City of Montgomery, and

"Whereas, The public officials the State of Alabama have indicated, both orally and in writing, that they intend to and will use all means available

"Including the arrest of the bus drivers and passengers who refuse to abide by and obey the segregation laws of the City of Montgomery and State of Alabama requiring segregaton of the races on City and State buses, and

"WHEREAS, It is unanimously agreed that the conditions heretofore existing remain the same because of the position taken by our public officials.

"BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED THAT: We, the colored Citizens of Montgomery, Ala., do now and will continue to carry on our mass protest until such time as the matters stated above are clairfied

"And we hereby authorize and direct the officers and Board of Directors of the Montgomery Improvement Association to do any and all acts that it deems necessary to perfect our desires."

Montgomery's Move

Afro-American

Montgomery's 50,000 colored citizens, fortified by a new sense of their own economic power, have announced plans to shift their fight for justice and equality to a new field. P. 4

Wisely led by the Montgomery Improvement Association, which has successfully conducted a 20-week-old bus boycott, they propose now to launch an all-out attack on Alabama's restrictive registration practices. Sat. 4-7-56

Just how effective these restrictions have been is told in the number of voters on Montgomery's books.

There are 125,000 people in the 'cradle of the Confederacy' with colored people comprising a whopping 42 per cent.

But of this total, only 23,500 are registered to vote. And of this 23,000 only 1,900 or approximately eight per cent are colored. Montgomery, Ala.

The Supreme Court four years ago declared unconstitutional the Boswell Amendment which compelled prospective voters to "understand and explain" the U.S. Constitution.

The Alabama Legislature promptly adopted a new law which requires applicants not only to submit to a written examination, but satisfy registration officials that they are "of good character."

As administered in Montgomery, white applicants are promptly registered without question. But prospective colored voters are told "they will be notified" if they have qualified.

In most instances, the notice never comes. The applicant is compelled to make countless trips to city hall before he is finally given a certificate, if ever.

If the Boswell Amendment was unconstitutional, certainly this dodge is too. And the discriminatory manner in which it is administered is prima facie violation of the 14th Amendment.

The Montgomery Improvement Association is displaying good judgement in attacking this flagrant denial of the ballot.

Here too is an area that Attorney General Brownell and his Department of Justice can no longer claim they lack Federal law under which to act.

Alabama Boycott

News & Observer

Down in Alabama the Governor has signed "reluctantly" a bill requiring merchants in that State to label all Japanese textiles goods they sell and to put signs in their stores saying, "Japanese textiles sold here." The bill is, of course, as the Governor said, "an economic force bill." It is also an improper State action with regard to foreign trade. Tariffs and trade barriers are serious problems involving this country's relations with all other countries. They should be so handled by the Congress. And when a State undertakes to incite boycott of the goods of any nation, it is using a weapon which may dangerously serve all other states and the nation as a whole.

Certainly it is a strange spectacle for the Legislature in Montgomery, Alabama, where Negroes are being tried for inciting a boycott of a bus company, to pass legislation designed to inspire a boycott of the goods of a friendly nation.

If higher tariffs, embargoes or any other things are needed to protect textile mills in Alabama or any other state, the action should be taken by the nation. Alabama's local invocation of the boycott in international trade relations or any other field is a strange and dangerous business.

Homeless Little Theatre

P.4-A

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—In the recent accounts of the fire demolishing the Grand Theater building, we of the Montgomery Little Theater, Inc., noted with concern that your reporters and the general public are not aware of the fact that for the past several years, the third floor of the front section of that building has been used as the work shop and rehearsal hall for our productions.

Montgomery Ala.

At the present time we are in the fourth week of rehearsals for our current show which will open Feb. 22. Two weeks of these rehearsals were held at the Grand—without heat. As a result of the discomfort, one of our cast members suffered a relapse of a chronic condition—enforcing her to drop from the cast and to be hospitalized. Were it not for the generosity of the Alabama Power Company in the use of their auditorium, we would have been rehearsing at the Grand at the time of the fire. Had the front section burned, all of our equipment would have been lost, the current production would not have gone on—in fact, it could have meant the end of the Montgomery Little Theater.

Now, we need a home, a place that is safe, where we are not endangering our lives to bring the theater to our audiences. We need help from our followers, for a rehearsal space and a theater of our own. We are not paid for our hours of work—all proceeds go toward a building fund and general expenses. Rent for the city auditorium alone runs $1,500 for the season. The productions that an individual pays $1.25 to see, cost from $1,200 to $1,500 to produce.

Our audiences tell us they enjoy our work and that we contribute much to Montgomery's cultural life. We are in this time-consuming hobby for the love of it. We need the help and support of our audience now, or the Montgomery Little Theater may be in its last season.

The Politicians Are Silent

Editor, The Advertiser:

The cause of the fingers of scorn now being pointed at the University of Alabama and her students over the ill-famed case of Arthurine Lucy and the much publicized resulting episodes dates back much further than most people realize.

When the name Eleanor first became associated with the White House and headlines began to appear telling of her determined sponsorship of racial unhappiness, Alabama had two U.S. senators who easily could have nipped all of this in its first bud. But, where were they?

Alabama's two senators were too busy paving (what they thought) their own personal political future by "yessing" everything in order to promote federal handouts to various mediums of Alabama's economy.

Alabamians today realize more than ever that a dolar's worth of instructions come with every dime coming back from Washington, and are turning against such means of mortgaging our future.

Certainly we are not proud of the current behavior of our young people at the University in their handling of the Lucy case, but we are proud of their displaying fortitude and love for their Southland. In this respect, our two U.S. senators evidently are touring overseas theaters because neither has chirped as yet on the matter of segregation or integration.

They are still busy attempting to mortgage the future of these same young students who are not likely to forget this fact when they go to the polls to cast their first vote for our future political leaders.

These first voters are also likely to be reminded by their parents that neither of Alabama's congressmen nor her "illustrious" governor have yet chirped about this matter even though it is today's most important issue.

Too bad Alabama's youth is having to do what our politicians haven't. Particularly when we're struggling to pay the politicians.

Agreeing With Mr. McGhee

Editor, The Advertiser:

You are so right, Abner McGhee about closing stores on Sunday. I am sure you grocery store owners who spend that time in church gain more than you lose.

Besides being in close communion with God, it helps to ease the tension of the past week and fortifies one for the next. It can become an enjoyable habit and one we should all cultivate.

Is The Will Of God Violated?

Editor, The Advertiser:

I sure am glad I had an opportunity to attend the meeting at the Capitol Monday afternoon.

My grocery store has never been open seven days a week. I observe the seventh day, Sabbath, in obedience to the last part of that Commandment which that preacher quoted the first part of.

In spite of the imposition that the enforcement of closing the little independent grocery stores on Sunday (which go by the name of grocery stores) had placed upon me I have still obeyed.

I believe I have an idea just about how the Pilgrims who first settled in America felt, realizing their persecution was by far greater than mine. Things are beginning to look pretty dark to me since the grocery store is the only source of income, not only for my husband and I, but also for my aged parents who are wholly dependent upon me for their support.

I wouldn't dare ask permission be granted me to keep my grocery store open on Sunday due to the fact I am closed on Saturday.

I would like the privilege of being allowed to stay open on Sunday, but if any person can prove to me that being open on Sunday is not in harmony with the will of God, I will yield.

Decision Indicated In Case Brought On Bus Segregation

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 6-1-56

The Advertiser yesterday received information indicating that an opinion has been handed down in the bus segregation case heard here last May 11.

No indication as to the result of the decision was revealed.

In a query to Judge Richard T. Rives of the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, senior judge on the three-judge panel which heard a suit here to declare transportation segregation laws unconstitutional in Alabama, The Advertiser asked if the panel was any closer to reaching a decision.

The query was brought about by confirmation that Rives, Judge Frank M. Johnson of the Middle District of Alabama and Judge Seybourn H. Lynne of the state's Northern District were meeting together in New Orleans.

Rives replied by wire saying, "Regret no information on bus segregation case can be given until opinion is delivered to Clerk of District Court in Montgomery and released by him."

Informed sources in New Orleans were also of the opinion that a decision had been made but could give no indication to the outcome of the decision.

The suit was brought by four Negro women against city officials, state officials and Montgomery City Lines Inc., the local bus company, charging that Negroes had been intimidated by city officials for not riding the city buses since last Dec. 5. It further charged that segregation laws on buses in Montgomery and in Alabama are unconstitutional.

Rives, Johnson and Lynne were in New Orleans for a meeting of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, of which all three are members.

Montgomery bus boycott started six-months ago, still going on

Fri. 6-1-56 Birm, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 1—(AP)—Today is the half-year anniversary of an event that resulted—as a United Nations official said recently—in Montgomery's becoming known around the world.

On Dec. 1, 1955, a Negro seamstress was arrested for violating a city ordinance requiring bus segregation. Four days later when Mrs. Rosa Parks was fined $14, the approximately 50,000 Negroes in this Southern capital of 125,000 began a boycott of city buses.

In the early days of the protest against bus segregation a few shots were fired at buses and a bomb was tossed at a Negro leader's home, all without harming anyone.

SINCE THEN the boycott has continued with no sign of an end while urgings by Negro leaders for peaceful opposition to bus segregation laws are heeded.

Right now a federal court test of those laws, both city and state, is pending. A special three-judge panel heard the case May 1 and a decision is expected soon. It will probably be appealed directly to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Montgomery Negroes have established a system of private cars to replace bus transportation. Asst. Manager R. C. Mills of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., says the boycott dropped Negro passengers from 30,000 or 40,000 a day to only 300 or 400 a day.

INSTEAD, a car pool is carrying Negroes free. The original collection of private vehicles has been partially replaced with 14 new station wagons registered in the names of Negro churches, which have provided both leadership and coherence for the boycott.

The private transportation system is costing about $3000 a week, according to the treasurer of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., an organization formed to coordinate the boycott.

An unreported amount of contributions have come into Montgomery from churches, labor unions and other groups across the nation. At twice-weekly church meetings here funds are collected to support the car pool at the same time continued Negro solidarity in the boycott is urged by leaders.

THE TREASURER'S cost report was given during the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., young Baptist minister tried first among 90 persons indicted for violating an Alabama anti-boycott law. He was convicted and fined $500 and costs. The case is now on appeal and the other 89 cases are awaiting that outcome.

This oak-shaded Southern city, long known as the "Cradle of the Confederacy," has become known as the home of the boycott, Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, American Negro who is undersecretary of the United Nations, declared in a recent speech here.

NEGROES BEGIN ATTACK ON BUS SEGREGATION

Daily Pilot Chicago, Ill. Sat. 5-12-56

U. S. Court Hears Suit After Mass Boycott

Montgomery, Ala., May 11 (AP)—City attorneys resisted an attack on Alabama's segregation laws today with a persistent effort to show that complaining Negroes were willing to live under the laws until recent weeks.

385

But the four Negro women who filed a suit in federal court contesting the racial barriers on city buses as unconstitutional insisted they are opposed to segregation in any form and always have been. Negroes here have been boycotting city buses for nearly six months.

One of the plaintiffs, Claudette Colvin, explained that "some of us didn't have the guts to stand up" before.

A three judge panel heard three hours of testimony during the morning and then called for arguments from opposing lawyers after a recess. Testimony was completed shortly after noon.

No Immediate Decision

Another issue given prominent attention was whether city officials and Montgomery City Lines, Inc., are enforcing state as well as municipal segregation laws. The judges hearing the suit had announced earlier that there would be no immediate decision on the segregation issue or the question of jurisdiction.

Judge Richard T. Rives of the 5th United States Circuit Court of Appeals said, "This is an important case and will be studied and deliberated."

In their suit, the Negroes are asking for an injunction to prohibit continued enforcement of segregation laws and a declaratory judgement holding them unconstitutional.

The decision on application of state laws will be a determining factor in the panel's ruling on whether it has jurisdiction to judge the segregation issue on its merits, or whether the suit must start again in another court.

Seek High Court Appeal

If the three judges rule on the segregation issue, their decision can be appealed directly to the Supreme court. But the enforcement of a state law must be involved before a panel such as the one presiding today can take jurisdiction.

The city contends that only municipal ordinances have been in force, altho Negro attorneys brought out during the hearing that some members of their race arrested for violating segregation ordinances have been charged also with state offenses.

The four Negro women who filed the suit all testified they were forced to give up their seats on city buses so white passengers could sit down. They all said they stopped riding buses last Dec. 5, the day the mass Negro bus boycott began, but that they would ride them again if segregation is abolished.

Montgomery city lines abandoned segregation on April 24, but Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in state court two days ago ordered the integration policy rescinded. He held that city and state laws are still in effect despite a recent United States Supreme Court decision.

Woman Seized, Handcuffed

An unidentified Negro woman in the courtroom screamed and was led sobbing from the room this morning when Miss Colvin, 16, told of being arrested and taken to jail handcuffed on March 2, 1955, for refusing to give up her seat on a bus.

Another witness, Mrs. Susie McDonald, 77, testified she was forced by a bus driver to give her seat to a white passenger. Similar testimony came also from the other two plaintiffs, Mrs. Aurelia Browder and Mary Louise Smith.

City Atty. Walter Knabe tried to show thru cross-examination that the Negroes made no attack on the segregation laws until after the bus boycott started.

Two New Developments Mark Bus Strike Row

Birmingham Ala. News P. 1

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Two new developments in the 14-week-old bus protest came to light here.

Atty. Fred D. Gray, counsel for the 100 indicted bus protest leaders has amended a complaint filed Feb. 2 challenging the validity of the city and state travel laws.

1. Dropping the name of Mrs. Jeanetta Reese, a plaintiff and adding as defendants in the suit C. C. Owen, Jimmy Hitchcock and Miss Sybil, members of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

Previously Mrs. Reeves allegedly charged that Atty. Gray included her name in the complaint without her request. But Atty. Gray denied this charge.

But, a Montgomery Grand Jury indicted him on the charge, which was subsequently dismssed on a motion by the state. The state said the charge allegedly took place in a federal building where there was no local jurisdiction.

Meantime the Montgomery City Lines was granted a request by the Montgomery City Commission to suspend Sunday service on 14 lines because of a loss of patronage.

Trials of the indicted protest leaders are scheduled for Monday, Mar. 19.

Text of the demurrers filed to the complaints are as follows:

"1. Allegations to the indictments are so vague and indefinite as not to apprise these defendants of what they are called on to defend.

"2. That the statute under which the indictments were brought and as applied to these defendants, violates Sect. 25. Art. I of the Constitution of Alabama.

"3. That Section 55, Title 14, Alabama Code of 1940, the statute under which the mass indictments was brought, constitutes an abridgement of freedom of speech, violative of rights and liberties secured to all persons by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the U. S. Constitution.

"4. That said statute, as applied to defendants, constitutes an abridgement of the right of people peaceably to assemble, violative of rights secured to all persons by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the U. S. Constitution.

"5. That the statute is unconstitutional on its face in that it is so vague as to constitute a deprivation of liberty without due process of law contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment.

"6. As applied the statute (state boycott law) violates the 'due process' clause of the U. S. Constitution.

"7. Violates 'privileges and immunities' of citizens of the United States in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

"8. In its application the statute denies and abridges 'equal protection of the law' guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment.

"9. The state statute requiring the enforcement of laws requiring segregation of passengers in intra-state transportation 'denies equal protection of the law.'

"10. The statute as applied constitutes prohibition against free exercise of religion violative of rights secured to all persons by the First and Fourteenth Amendments."

Ala. boycotters to 'keep on walking'

Afro-American P. 1

Sat. 6-30-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "We'll keep on walking. We want a definite decision before we take action."

Baltimore Md.

That was the reaction of Montgomery's bus boycotters Thursday after city officials ordered an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court from a three-judge Federal court ruling outlawing segregation on city buses.

In the light of the appeal, attorneys for the boycotters could ask the Supreme Court to set aside the 10-day suspension of the injunction issued against the city until the case is decided on its merits by the highest court.

None of the lawyers for the boycotters was available for comment on such a move, but if it is made the request would go to Justice Hugo L. Black, former Alabama senator and one of the liberals on the Supreme Court bench.

WERE THE SUSPENSION invalidated by Justice Black, the injunction issued by the three-judge Federal court ending segregation on city buses would go into effect immediately.

That would thwart plans of the city officials who are appealing the decision primarily to delay enforcement of the Federal court's order ending segregation on buses in the city.

After the city commission voted unanimously Thursday to appeal the decision, Mayor W. A. Gayle issued the following statement: Afro American P. 8

"There is no doubt that an end of segregation seating arrangements on public conveyances in the City of Montgomery will effect a drastic change in the habits of the people.

"THIS CHANGE, which would alter customs which have been in existence since before the city was founded, would have an obviously severe impact upon its citizens.

"The commission is of the opinion that every step possible should be taken to prevent such a change. We are therefore instructing our legal department to effect an appeal within the 10-day period set out by the court in its judgement.

The city and the State of Alabama, whose bus segregation statutes also were outlawed June 5 by a three-judge Federal court panel, have until June 29 to appeal.

WHILE THE CITY has decided upon appeal, no decision has been reached by the state. If the state does not appeal by that time, the judges' injunction issued Tuesday against enforcement of the segregation laws will go into effect automatically.

The Federal judges on June 19 issued a permanent injunction against enforcement of city and state bus segregation laws in Montgomery, but suspended the injunction for 10 days to allow time for an appeal.

Under Tuesday's order, the suspension of the injunction would continue until the appeal is settled by a decision in the case. That is unless the Supreme Court sets aside the suspension on request of attorneys for the boycotters.

COMMISSIONER FRANK W PARKS said Wednesday that in his opinion an appeal is "the only thing we can do." He and the other commissioners are all directors of the White Citizens Council in Montgomery.

"We'll keep the thing in the courts for another six or eight months," Parks declared, pointing out that an appeal to the Supreme Court could not be acted on until after the court ends its summer recess in October.

The bus company still considers itself bound by a state injunction to enforce segregation, but a spokesman for National City Lines, owner of the bus system, said a Federal injunction would be obeyed when it takes effect.

Alabama Orders Bus Company To Replace Color Bars Or "Suffer"

MONTGOMERY, Ala. --(INS)-- Montgomery City Bus Lines, Inc., was ordered by the State of Alabama Tuesday to replace the color bars it dropped Tuesday morning, or "suffer the consequences."

The demand came from the president of Alabama's Public Service Commission, as the Capital City's buses began rolling under a new policy of no segregated seating.

It was a paper policy because the few Negroes riding today moved to the rear of the vehicles of their own accord. City officials vowed to arrest anyone attempting to integrate the races on buses, including drivers.

Most Negroes in the Alabama city stayed off the vehicles as they have done since their boycott began on Dec. 5, but their leaders were meeting to consider their next steps in the long protest.

The bus company adopted its new policy after the Supreme Court held Monday that segregation on Columbia, S. C., buses is unlawful.

Tuesday, C. C. (Jack) Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, filed a telegram to the bus company ownership, with copies to all other transit firms in the state, saying:

DEFIANT STAND

"All public carriers are hereby directed to strictly adhere to all present existing segregation laws in our state or suffer the consequences."

Owen would not elaborate on the consequences. His telegram was addressed to Roy Fitzgerald, president of National City Lines of Chicago which owns the Montgomery firm. It declared:

"As president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, elected by the people of Alabama, sworn to uphold the segregation laws of this state which include all forms of public transportation, I hereby defy a ruling handed down by the U. S. Supreme Court ordering desegregation on public carriers. Alabama State law requiring segregation of races on buses still stands.

HALT ORDERED

"I demand that you withdraw your order, approving integration on buses in Montgomery."

Mayor W. A. Gayle released a statement after a City Commission meeting Tuesday morning, saying, "The City Commission does not consider that the (Supreme Court) decision did construe the Alabama laws or city ordinances by which we are governed. We therefore expect the bus company and all other persons to abide by all existing laws and ordinances."

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said, "Anybody trying to race-mix will be arrested, including bus drivers who permit it." Sellers said the court suit attacking Alabama's transportation - segregation laws will be heard in Montgomery on May 11.

Meanwhile, the 25-man executive committee of the Montgomery Improvement Association, which has led the bus boycott, met to draw recommendations. The Rev. M. L. King, Jr., Association president, said the recommendations will be put before a mass meeting of Negroes Thursday night. He said:

"There is still the question of Negro bus drivers. There will have to be some solution to that before we end this. The protest is still continuing about 95 per cent effective."

State Decides To File Appeal On Bus Ruling

State authorities announced yesterday that they, too, will ask the Supreme Court to overrule a lower court order holding city bus segregation in Montgomery unconstitutional.

City officials had already decided they would appeal from a decision handed down June 5 by a three-judge panel in U.S. District Court. They have until Friday to file notice of the appeal.

The announcement from the Public Service Commission which administers state laws requiring separate seating of white and Negro passengers came following a conference with Atty. Gen. John Patterson.

PSC President Jack Owen and Associate Commissioners Jimmy Hitchcock and Sibyl Pool said the notice will be filed before the deadline.

Carrying out the intent of its June 5 ruling, the federal court panel issued an injunction last Tuesday against continued enforcement of city ad state segregation laws on the city buses.

But the injunction was suspended for 10 days to give the city and state time to prepare an appeal, and if an appeal is filed, the suspension will remain in effect indefinitely until the Supreme Court rules whether bus segregation is legal or unconstitutional.

Negro attorneys, however, can ask the higher court to set the suspension aside and put the injunction into effect immediately while the appeal is pending. They said they will decide on their next course after the deadline for filing the appeal.

King Proposal Would Boycott Dixie Schools

SAN FRANCISCO, June 26 (AP)—A Negro boycott of segregaed Southern schools to force compliance with the Supreme Court's nonsegregation ruling was suggested here today by a leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

The Rev. Martin Luther King made the suggestion at a press conference in advance of the formal opening tonight of the 47th annual convention of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. He said Negro action like the six-month-old Montgomery bus boycott "might become the pattern in many areas of the South."

PASSIVELY RESIST

He said he had not thought the idea through fully, and was not making it as a formal proposal. "But somehow we are going to laws" that defy federal court laws" the defy federal court rulings, he said.

Dr. King said a school boycott would likely lead to legal action similar to his own trial and conviction for his part in the bus boycott. But, he added, "it is interesting to have legal action from the other side."

Dr. King, who came to the convention prepared to advocate wider use of passive resistance in the fight against segregation, said "a willingness to go to jail for right or righteousness" is an essential part of his program.

He said other forms of action should be used simultaneously and indicated hope of more support from sympathetic Southern whites.

Judge Jones Delays Ruling On Race Laws

An attorney for the Montgomery City Lines Bus Co. declared yesterday that continued segregation on local buses would result in "greater danger of public disorder" and subject the bus company to repeated prosecution under civil rights laws.

Robert Thrun of New York asked Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones to deny an injunction asked by the city to compel the bus company to enforce city segregation laws on local buses.

Judge Jones, following a hearing which lasted only 45 minutes, took the motion for the injunction under advisement and announced that a decision would be rendered within a "few days."

CONTINUED LOSS

The bus company, threatened with continued loss of Negro patronage on one side and possible cancellation of their operating franchise on the other, now faces a possible court order to require the maintenance of separate seating facilities on city buses.

Attorney Thrun, defending the bus line's recent racial integration order, contended that city and state segregation laws no longer protect carriers from civil rights prosecution.

He declared that to continue segregated buses would result in "endless lawsuits" against the company and heavy expense in court litigation.

The attorney's remarks brought a charge from City Attorney Walter Knabe that the "bus company seems more interested in avoiding lawsuits than in public safety on the buses."

HEALTH, SAFETY

Commissioner of Public Affairs Clyde Sellers, called to the witness stand yesterday by City Attorney Walter Knabe, testified that "public health and safety" in Montgomery would be jeopardized and that the future existence of the bus transportation system here would be threatened if segregation barriers on buses were brokn down.

Citing acts of violence which have occurred during the bus boycott here, the police commissioner said that unless the injunction is granted requiring obedience to local bus segregation laws, "public riots, assaults and injuries" would result.

After pointing out that a "serious situation" now exists in local bus transportation, Knabe said that although Negroes are still taking seats in the rear of buses as in the past, "they may not continue to do so without a court order." "This could result in an outbreak of violence," he declared.

Thrun cited four federal court cases on segregation, including the recent South Carolina case (Flemming vs. South Carolina), and another suit filed by local Negro boycott leaders against the city and Montgomery City Lines, in asking that the injunction be dismissed.

GREATER DANGER

Countering the city officials' charge that desegregation on buses would result in disorder and disturbances between the races, the New York attorney said the continued enforcement of segregation on buses would create a "greater danger of physical disturbances."

He added that federal court decisions, principally the South Carolina case, bound the bus company to post notices that segregation of passengers no longer prevails.

The attorney said the bus company was put in a "very vulnerable position" by the Supreme Court decision which "left in full effect the decision of the district court."

Thrun said the bus company has already suffered heavy losses through the five-month bus boycott and that if segregation on local buses is continued the company would face numerous federal suits under civil rights laws. This would mean an "unbearable cost" through court litigation, he added.

The attorney said the decision of the National City Lines, Inc. to order desegregation on their buses came after careful consideration of city laws and customs."

He pointed out that other southern cities operating as subsidiaries of National City Lines, Inc. have ordered discontinuance of segregation on buses in line with the national firm's regulation.

Alabama Atty.-Gen. John Patterson and Asst. Atty. Gen. Gordon Madison observed the proceedings yesterday "strictly as spectators."

Others present were Reynolds C. Mills, assistant superintendent of trasnportation, Montgomry City Lines, and B. W. Franklin, manager of National City Lines, Inc.

J. H. Bagley, superintendent of transportation for the local bus line, is recuperating from a heart attack suffered last week and was unable to attend the proceedings.

Judge Holds State Laws Constitutional

Post-Herald P.1
Thurs. 5-10-56
Birmingham Ala.

MONTGOMERY, May 9 (AP)—Holding that the Supreme Court hasn't outlawed bus segregation yet, Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones, in state court, directed Montgomery City Lines today to abandon its new integration policy.

He ruled that nothing in the U. S. Constitution gave the federal government the right to prohibit the states from segregating bus passengers in intrastate transportation.

With that conclusion, he held Montgomery City and Alabama State segregation laws constitutional and ordered the bus company here to "comply with and abide" with them.

In Chicago, Benjamin W. Franklin, vice president of National City Lines, parent firm of Montgomery bus company, said, "we will obey the injunction, of course."

Franklin said no decision has been made on what, if any, future legal steps might be taken by the company.

Jones' decision granting an injunction against further compliance with the bus company's recent integration order came at the request of the City of Montgomery, whose officials and attorneys predicted rioting and other violence if the segregation laws are broken down.

The judge took note of that threat and observed in his written order today:

"A situation of tension and unrest has been created in the City of Montgomery, which is likely to explode into violence at any time, if not restrained."

Most Montgomery Negroes have boycotted city buses for nearly six months even despite the company's instructions to its drivers to refrain from enforcing the segregation laws. Negro leaders voted a mass meeting recently to continue the boycott until city and state officials recognize integration.

There have been no reports of actual integration aboard the buses even though the company abandoned segregation as a policy. Negroes who have continued to patronize the buses have remained in the rear where they have always sat.

Jones' decision came only two days ahead of a scheduled federal court hearing on a suit challenging constitutionality of city and state segregation laws.

A three-judge panel will try the suit here Friday. The complaint bears the names of six Negroes and was filed as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

What will happen to Jones' injunctive order if the federal court rules the segregation laws unconstitutional couldn't immediately be determined. The courts opposing attorneys declined to speculate.

Post-Herald

Without elaborating, Jones wrote in his decision that "there is no straight out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a state or city may not require the separation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

P. 2

A Supreme Court ruling on April 23 was interpreted as outlawing segregation on city buses, but some lawyers later contended it didn't settle the issue.

4:4 c. there are times when all

The decision dismissed an appeal from a ruling of the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals which, in turn, has held bus segregation in Columbia, S. C., unconstitutional and had sent the case back to the original trial court to determine the question of damages.

Whether the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal on the grounds that segregation is invalid or because the case was still pending in the lower courts wasn't made clear.

Jones questioned validity of the Federal Court of Appeals' ruling, holding it "is not well reasoned, is not sound law" and "at best it is simply the guess of the Fourth Circuit Court of what the Supreme Court will hold."

Basing his conclusion on the 10th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution which says powers not delegated to the federal government by the organic law or prohibited to the states are reserved for the states or the people, Jones asked:

"Where in the United States Constitution is there any delegation of power to the United States Government to say that a state cannot make reasonable regulations for the carriage of passengers on public conveyances wholly within the state?

"Where in the federal Constitution is there one word, one sentence, or one paragraph, saying that the sovereign states of this union, the states which created the federal government — and many of whose constitutions antedate the federal Constitution — are prohibited from making . . . reasonable rules for the separation of the races . . .?"

Continuing, he said the power claimed for the federal government by the court of appeals in the South Carolina Bus Case "does not exist and never has existed. It is a power reserved to the states and their people."

"This court will not be a party to filching the power from the state," he declared.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 11 (AP)—The three judge panel in federal court completed a one-day hearing on city bus segregation this afternoon and adjourned without announcing an decision.

It gave no indication when the decision will be announced.

Four Negro women had brought suit contesting racial barriess on the buses.

Two of the three judges agreed in observations from the bench, however, that there has been no Supreme Court decision as yet on the constitutionality of city and state segregation laws on bus travel within a state.

Judge Richard T. Rives of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and Dist. Judge Seybourn Lynne of the Northern District of Alabama said they don't construe the April 23 Supreme Court ruling as a decision on the merits of bus segregation.

A three-judge panel, whose decision can be appealed directly to the U. S. Supreme Court, has been convened to hear a suit by four Negroes challenging the racial barriers responsible for a mass boycott of city buses in Montgomery.

The suit, filed as an outgrowth of the boycott now in its sixth month, seeks an injunction to stop city and state officials from enforcing the anti-race mixing laws, and a declaratory judgment holding the statutes unconstitutional.

Since some judicial officers, including Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in Montgomery and the Public Service Commission in South Carolina, contend the April 23 ruling of the Supreme Court did not decide the segregation issue, the trial here may produce the first clear-cut finding by the Supreme Court.

Negro pastor apologizes—

Charges of misconduct withdrawn on boycott

Birm. Ala.
Tues. 6-12-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 19—(AP)—Charges of misconduct by leaders of Montgomery's Negro bus boycott were withdrawn last night by the young Negro minister who was voted out of his pulpit after he made them.

The Rev. U. J. Fields said he had "no evidence" for charges made—and promptly denied—a week ago. The 25-year-old Baptist minister offered his apology to a Negro mass meeting for what he had said "in anger and passion."

The meeting resolved in a rousing voice vote to accept Field's apology.

THE PROPOSAL to accept it was made by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. that was set up to guide the boycott. Fields said he had not questioned King's leadership because "I feel that his integrity is beyond question."

Fields had charged that funds being contributed all across the nation to provide car pool transportation for boycotters were being misappropriated "for selfish purposes." He also said a week ago that MIA leaders had put personal interests before the anti-segregation movement by the city's 50,000 Negroes.

After denials by MIA leaders, Fields said he would substantiate the charges "at the proper time."

SUNDAY his Bell Street Baptist Church congregation voted 40-0 with abstentions to remove Fields from the pastorate. A church leader said Fields' charges against the MIA had touched off the action after long dissatisfaction with him.

Fields had no comment yesterday on the vote but read to the mass meeting a prepared statement saying his retraction was made without pressure being put on him.

Immediate End Or Stay For Appeal Looms

Tues. 6-19-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 18. — (UP) — Three Federal judges Tuesday will begin weighing recommendations made by opposing attorneys in a suit abolishing segregation on city buses in Montgomery.

P. 9

The three-judge panel, splitting two to one, June 5 ruled that city and state segregation laws violated the United States Constitution.

The panel gave attorneys representing four Negro women who brought the suit and attorneys for the defendants — the City Commission, the Public Service Commission, and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal — two weeks to file their recommendations on how the formal judgment should be entered.

Tuesday is the deadline for entering the suggestions.

Charles D. Langford, one of a battery of Negro attorneys representing the plantiffs, Monday filed an opinion which asked the Federal panel to permanently enjoin the city and state from enforcing the "Jim Crow" laws.

City and state attorneys said they would present the panel with their recommendations Tuesday.

The court must decide whether to order an end to segregation immediately or grant a temporary stay pending an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Either side can appeal the panel's action on the question of a stay of execution pending an appeal.

Negroes want bus injunction

Birm. Ala.
Tues. 6-19-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 19—(AP)—Negro attorneys asked a three-judge federal court panel today to enter an immediate order stopping enforcement of city and state bus segregation laws in Montgomery.

Lawyers for the city and state were expected, on the other hand, to petition the court to suspend its injunction order pending an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The panel in a 2-1 decision on June 5 ruled that city and state laws requiring separate seating of white and Negro bus passengers violate the federal constitution.

BUT THE COURT withheld its order carrying out the decision, giving opposing attorneys, instead, two weeks to submit written suggestions on what form the decree should take.

If the panel suspends the injunction order, the Negroes can ask the Supreme Court to set it aside even before the segregation issue itself is reviewed.

Boycotters refute fund charge

Atlanta American

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The resignation and subsequent verbal blast of the Rev. U. J. Fields, secretary of the Montgomery Improvement Association, was termed "deeply regrettable."

The expression was made in a press release issued by the board of directors of MIA Tuesday after the Rev. Mr. Fields announced that he had resigned from the association charging that the organization was misusing money sent from all over the nation.

The Rev. Mr. Fields, pastor of Bell Street Baptist Church, said some persons in the association were "irresponsible" with the organization's funds.

HE ESTIMATED the sum involved thousands of dollars.

"I can no longer identify myself with a movement in which the many are exploited by the few," the Rev. Mr. Fields said.

He concluded that the MIA "no longer represents what I stand for."

* * *

THE REV. M. L. KING, president of the MIA, was in California and could not be contacted for comment at press time.

Fred Gray, attorney for the association, said that the "charges were completely groundless.

"I can't understand why he did what he did."

THE ASSOCIATION issued the following statement:

It is deeply regrettable, the Rev. Mr. Eugene J. Fields has made a public statement which gives the impression that there is disharmony among the leaders of the Montgomery protest movement that accuses the Montgomery Improvement Association misusing funds provided by the people of America in support of our struggle for common decency and justice.

The president, the Rev. M. L. King Jr., has always insisted upon honesty, that all funds received be duly acknowledged and that a bimonthly financial statement be made to the board of directors.

No money received by this association has been misappropriated.

During the past six months we have encountered various attacks designed to hinder our protest movement, this simply is another similar attack.

Dr. Moses Jones, vice president of the MIA, signed the statement.

CEASE BUS BIAS, 2 JUDGES ORDER

MONTGOMERY GETS 10 DAYS TO APPEAL

Daily World Wed. 6-20-56 Atlanta Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) A federal court Tuesday ordered an end to segregation on buses in Montgomery, but withheld effectiveness of the ruling pending an appeal to the Supreme court.

Two of three federal judges who heard a suit attacking enforced racial segregation in transportation-troubled Montgomery turned aside arguments of city officials that violence would follow elimination of the color line in the city transit system.

END IN TEN DAYS

The jurists ordered that segregation — previously held to be violative of the federal constitution — be ended in ten days. If the city or state appeals this ruling to the Supreme court, effectiveness of the order will be held up, the court said.

State officials declared when the original finding was handed down June 5 that they would appeal.

Attorneys for Negroes who brought the action asked the court to order an immediate end to segregation, and stop its practice while the issues involved were being decided by the Supreme Court.

Virtually all of Montgomery's 45,000 Negro residents have refused to ride city buses since last Dec. 5, when a Negro woman was arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus. The protest will continue, leaders said, until a final determination by the courts.

Bus Integration Ruling Defied In Montgomery

Officials Threaten Arrests As Transit Segregation Ends

BY REX THOMAS
Associated Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, April 24—Racial barriers were lowered on city buses here today, but there were no reports of actual integration, and a Negro boycott in effect for nearly five months continued without interruption.

City and state officials meanwhile voiced anary threats of reprisal after Montgomery City Lines, Inc., abandoned the traditional separate seating of white and Negro passengers and told its drivers to stop enforcing segregation.

Advertiser-Journal reporters who rode the buses said all the Negro patrons they saw had taken seats in the rear, the part formerly reserved for them under the segregation pattern.

A leader of the bus boycott, the Rev. Martin Luther Kink Jr., issued a statement saying "there will be no change in our position immediately" and that the protest would go on for the time being.

King said some action may be taken, however, at a mass meeting called for Thursday night. He said the Montgomery Improvement Assn., of which he is president, probably would make a recommendation or at least "discuss alternatives" to ending the boycott.

The statement was issued following a meeting of the executive board of the improvement association which was formed to support the boycott.

King said the Negroes still were awaiting word from bus company manager J. H. Bagley on theid original demand for employment of Negro drivers on predominantly Negro routes, and added:

"If Mr. Bagley says that he will examine applications from Negroes with the same equanimity as he would an application from a white person, that might satisfy our people."

Whether that meant the Negroes might continue the boycott indefinitely without some concession on the h iring of Negro drivers, the minister said he couldn't speculate.

Bagley wasn't available for comment. In the past he has said the company had received no applications from Negroes for jobs as drivers.

Meanwhile, what effect the move to end segregation here might have on the $500 fine levied against King on his boycotting conviction wasn't immediately determined.

The Negro Baptist minister has appealed, saying he would go to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford, who prosecuted King, said abolition of the segregation laws wouldn't affect the conviction because, he explained, "segregation as such wasn't an issue" in his trial.

A comparatively few Negroes rode the buses today despite the announced end of segregation. R. C. Mills, assistant manager of Montgomery City Lines, said the number was about the same that continued to use the buses throughout the long boycott.

The bus company previously had estimated that at about 5 to 15 per cent of the normal Negro passenger load.

Whether other Negroes were waiting word from the boycott leaders before patronizing the busline again could not be determined.

City and state officials meanwhile insisted that Alabama's segregation laws still are in effect despite the U. S. Supreme Court decision yesterday which said all bus segregation is unconsitutional.

The ruling applied directly only to South Carolina. nad Alabama officials contended that segregation laws here will remain intact until a court order is directed specifically at them.

That could come May 11, the date set for hearing on an anti-segregation suit already on file attacking constitutionality of Montgomery city and Alabama state laws. The suit was miled as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

Until the city and state laws are knocked down, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and other city officials and President Jack Owen of the Alabama Public Service Commission declared that segregation will be rigidly maintained.

The City Commission, all three of whose members belong to the White Citizens Council, issued a statement saying it "does not consider that the Supreme Court decision construes Alabama laws or city ordinances by which we are governed."

Post-Herald

The council is an organization dedicated to the preservation of racial segregation.

We, therefore, expect the bus company and all other persons to abide by all existing laws nad ordinances," the statement added.

Sellers said he would order the arrest of any passenger or bus driver who permits or indulges in desgregation.

"I'll be responsible for any arrests and I'll give the direct orders for those arrests," Sellers said. "As far as I'm concerned, this damn thing (the Supreme Court ruling) applies only to South Carolina. Until they tell us, i nthis suit filed here that it applies to us, I'm going to enforce all city laws to maintain segregation."

Owen sent a telegram to President Roy Fitzgerald of National City Lines in Chicago, the parent company of Montgomery City Lines, demanding that the integration order be withdrawn.

The PSC president also directed all other carriers operating in Alabama to "strictly adhere to all present existing segregation laws in our state or suffer the consequences."

Without replying directly to Owen, one National City Lines spokesman in Chicago said "we're not going to enforce segregation."

"This company has no choice but to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court," Vice President B. W. Franklin told United Press. "For that reason we are not going to enforce segregation.

"We always comply with laws in effect. Now the Supreme Court says the segregation laws no longer are constitutional—no longer in effect.

"We're not going to enforce there despite the company's continued operating buses on segregation.

The company also operates bus lines in Mobile, Jackson, Miss., Tampa, Fla., Tulsa, Okla., Beaumont, Wichita Falls and El Paso, Tex.

Officials at Tampa and Jackson said segregation would be continued on buses operating in Tampa and Jackson.

Vindication in Montgomery

THE decision of the three-judge panel of the Federal Court in Alabama outlawing racial segregation on city buses of Montgomery is a great victory for justice and fair play and a vindication of the colored citizenry of that community who valiantly and unanimously fought for six months against the vicious practice of jim-crowism.

When, on Dec. 6, 1955, the fateful decision was made to boycott the Montgomery buses, following the insult and arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks, there were many Americans of goodwill but faint heart who were apprehensive about the possible outcome of this action.

They knew the tremendous odds against the boycotters, and the fearful pull of tradition and racial prejudice which conspired to make the outcome dubious; but now, they can be at ease and rejoice with the rest of us.

This six-month boycott has been a time to try the souls of all those who had been in any way dedicated to the proposition that jim-crow must go regardless of all discouragement and obstacles, and it is with a keen feeling of exaltation that people in all parts of the United States join in the silent celebration of this great victory, which is not an ending but in reality only a beginning.

We salute the Federal judges who bowed to the decree of the United States Supreme Court and rendered the decision, but we hail even more loudly the brave men and women of Montgomery who, withstanding every threat, held fast to their ideals and determination.

This victory should inspire all friends of freedom everywhere to make even a greater effort than they have, to make freedom and equality a reality everywhere under the Stars and Stripes.

Injunction Is Issued To Halt Montgomery Bus Segregation

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.
Wed. 6-20-56

Montgomery, Ala., June 19 (AP)—A three-judge Federal Court panel issued an injunction today to stop enforcement of bus-segregation laws in Montgomery, but suspended it for 10 days to all ow time for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The panel, which two weeks ago ruled City and State segregation laws unconstitutional, issued the injunction to carry out that decision.

Formal Order Suspended

But the formal order was suspended for 10 days to allow City and State attorneys to appeal the original desegregation ruling to the higher court.

If the appeal is filed within the 10 days, the panel said, the suspension will remain in effect until a new order can be written to continue the stay of execution pending the appeal.

The injunction order was signed by Judge Richard T. Rives of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., of the U. S. District Court for the Middle District of Alabama.

Same Judges Signed Opinion

They were the two judges who signed the majority opinion in the 2-to-1 decision on June 5 that held that City and State laws requiring separate seating for white and Negro passengers violate the Federal Constitution.

U. S. District Judge Seybourn Lynn of the Northern District of Alabama, who dissented from the integration ruling, also disagreed with the decision to issue the injunction.

City Fights To Keep Seating On Buses Segregated

Memphis, Tenn.

MONTGOMERY, June 21.—(UP)—The city commission said Thursday it would appeal a Federal District Court's ruling banning segregation on Montgomery city buses.

Fri. 6-22-56

The commission, in a briefly prepared statement, said it reached the decision to appeal the case because "there is no doubt an end of segregated seating arrangements on public conveyances in the city of Montgomery will effect a drastic change in the habits of the people of the city."

Continuing, the statement said "This change which would alter customs which have been in existence since before the city was founded would have an obviously severe impact upon its citizens.

"The commission is of the opinion that every step possible should be taken to prevent such a change. We therefore are instructing our legal department to effect an appeal within the 10-day period set by the court in its judgment."

Three Federal judges, in a 2-1 opinion, enjoined the city from operating its buses on a segregated basis Tuesday, but set aside the order for 10 days to allow for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The defendants—the city and the State Public Service Commission—have until June 29 to file the appeal with the high court.

U.S. Court Rules Segregation On Montgomery Buses Illegal

World-Telegram + Sun Tues. 6-5-56

New York, N.Y.

By the Associated Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 5.—A three-judge federal court panel in a 2-1 vote today ruled racial segregation unconstitutional on Montgomery city buses.

The panel ruled that both the city and state segregation laws requiring separate seating facilities for white and Negro passengers violate the federal Constitution.

Judge Richard T. Rives of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. of Alabama's U.S. Middle District Court signed the majority opinion.

U.S. District Judge Seybourn Lynne of Alabama's Northern U.S. District Court, Birmingham, wrote a dissenting opinion saying separate but equal facilities are constitutional.

Judgment Awaited.

The ruling will become effective when a formal judgment is entered. Attorneys were asked to submit within two week their views on the form of a judgment and whether a stay should be granted pending an appeal.

The decision came on the sixth-month anniversary of Montgomery's Negro bus boycott which started Dec. 5 in protest against segregated facilities. The suit which led to today's decision was filed by four Negro women who testified May 11 that they have refused to ride city buses since the mass protest began.

Today's ruling can be appealed direct to the U.S. Supreme Court and may provide the first clear-cut test of city bus segregation.

Columbia Case.

The Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond, Va., had previously ruled bus segregation unconstitutional in Columbia, S. C., but sent the case back to the trial court for a determination of damages.

The Supreme Court on April 23 dismissed an appeal from this ruling, but two of the judges sitting on the panel here commented at the hearing last month that in their opinion the Supreme Court hadn't passed on the segregation issue itself, but rather dismissed the appeal because the case was still pending in the lower courts.

Bus Service Halted In Florida Boycott

By the Associated Press.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 5.—Bus service in Negro communities here has been shut off as a result of an 8-day-old boycott.

The city commission yesterday authorized the Cities Transit Bus Co. to discontinue the runs after the transit firm reported they had become unprofitable.

The city commission rejected a demand by the Negro Inter-Civic Council that full integration on city buses be permitted as a condition for calling off the boycott.

Continuing, the statement said "this change, which would alter customs which have been in existence since before the city was founded, would have an obviously severe impact upon its citizens.

"The commission is of the opinion that every step possible should be taken to prevent such a change. We, therefore, are instructing our legal department to effect an appeal within the 10-day period set by the court in its judgment."

Three federal judges, in a 2-1 opinion, enjoined the city from operating its buses on a segregated basis Tuesday, but set aside the order for 10 days to allow for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The defendants—the city and the state Public Service Commission—have until Friday of next week to file the appeal with the high court.

PSC President C. C. (Jack) Owen said his department and Atty. Gen. John Patterson would meet Tuesday to "decide on a course of action."

The district court's injunctive order put into effect a June 5 decision by the three-judge panel that ruled unconstitutional state and city segregation laws.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 6—It could be that yesterday's 2-to-1 decision by the three-judge Federal Court tribunal outlawing segregation on buses in intrastate service here may turn out to be an entirely unexpected boomerang.

That is, a boomerang against the four Negro women who filed the suit which resulted in yesterday's ruling and, more particularly, against the agitators who stand behind them in an effort to destroy long established Southern customs.

SPARROW

U. S. Appellate Judge Richard T. Rives and U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson, who signed the majority opinion, indicated an injunction eventually would be granted after preliminaries such as written arguments by opposing attorneys as to how the decree should be entered are out of the way.

Such an injunction would prohibit the defendants—Montgomery city commissioners and police authorities, the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., Alabama Public Service Commission members and two specifically named bus operators — from segregating passengers according to races.

The judges, however, indicated that if the defendants plan an appeal, which would be direct to the U. S. Supreme Court and not to the appellate court, a stay would be granted suspending execution of the order until after the high court has ruled.

Probably the real backers of the court action — reportedly the controversial NAACP — would like nothing better than for the currently rebuffed defendants to try an appeal.

But that is the very thing that may not be done in the present case, apparently for very good reasons.

The right of appeal does not rest with the Negroes who won yesterday's decision. It is up to the defendants—and to no one else—whether the case shall be taken higher.

JUST WHAT will happen if and when the defendants should say the do not want to take an appeal?

Judges Rives and Johnson probably would issue a court order directing the defendants not to segregate passengers on buses operating in the Montgomery area. (The injunction could not extend to Birmingham, Mobile or other areas in Alabama having buslines since it is a case specifically relating to Montgomery's long harried buslines.)

But in that case a federal court injunction would apply in direct opposition to an injunction already granted by a very able Alabama circuit judge.

Judge Walter B. Jones, in a decision which was handed down exactly two days before the federal jurists began consideration of the Negro case, ruled that state and local segregation laws are constitutional.

Furthermore, he held in a ruling which attracted widespread attention throughout the South that the Montgomery City Lines Inc. shall not seek to do away with segregation on buses.

THE CASE ruled on by Judge Jones was one in which Montgomery city commissioners filed application for an injunction restraining the Montgomery bus company from carrying out its announced policy of abandoning segregation of passengers on buses.

The bus company had announced the new policy in April immediately after early reports indicated the U. S. Supreme Court had outlawed segregation on buses engaged in intrastate service in a case originating in South Carolina. Although later reports indicated the high court had not actually banned bus segregation the city bus company did not change its policy.

Not only did Judge Jones order the bus company to restore the signs used to denote seating arrangements on buses for white and Negro passengers but he directed the company to make certain that all state and local segregation laws are fully observed.

NOW IT IS LIKELY that the Montgomery City Lines and two specifically named bus operators will be enjoined by a lower federal court to do precisely what Judge Jones had ordered them not to do.

What action shall they take? If they seek to obey Judge Jones' order, on one hand, and are brought into Federal Court for disobeying the federal injunction on the other, what decision would be reached by the federal judge?

Certainly it is unlikely that federal judges would try to call an Alabama circuit judge into court and order him to go counter to his decision, reached well in advance of the federal decision.

The situation which now appears to be rapidly developing is unprecedented, lawyers say. Never before has there been a case in which a state judge and a federal judge in the same city have issued conflicting injunctions on the same subject.

In the opinion of some lawyers who have been closely following proceedings in both cases, Montgomery could very well become the battle ground for a historic battle over states' rights.

JUDGE JONES could not be reached for a statement yesterday afternoon. His secretary told callers that he was "out of the city." It could be that Judge Jones does not want to discuss the situation which could bring him point blank in opposition to Federal Court authorities.

Atty. Gen. John Patterson, who represented the Alabama Public Service Commission in the case, said he was "very much surprised" by the court ruling. He said he probably would have more to say later.

The Montgomery City Commission members, too, postponed a statement until they had been given more time to study the decision and the effects it will have.

Lawyers here said there is much more at stake in yesterday's decision than the outlawing of racial segregation on buses. It could be the opening wedge, they say, for more NAACP-inspired litigation to open to Negroes hotels, restaurants, theaters, apartments, etc., now reserved for white people.

But most important of all, according to one lawyer, it strikes a paralyzing blow at the police powers of state and local governments.

SHOULD THE federal decision prevail and segregation be banned on buses here, it would not be long before segregation would be banned on all public transportation.

But it is said there is nothing to prevent cities from abolishing public transportation and letting responsible individuals contract to carry white passengers, or for others to contract to provide transportation for Negroes.

That would not be segregation, within the meaning of the action which two of the three federal judges sought to decide in their opinion yesterday.

SHORTLY after the decision was announced, the APSC issued a statement indicating that an appeal from the decision probably would be taken.

Overnight, however, it was reported that the APSC would not take that step if in so doing it would play into the hands of those who are out to abolish all forms of segregation.

REACTION to the ruling in Montgomery was sharp and critical.

During the hearing before the three judges three weeks ago, two of the three—Judge Rives and Birmingham's Judge Seybourn Lynne—indicated by their statements from the bench they did not believe the U. S. Supreme Court has held bus segregation unconstitutional.

State, Negroes Weigh Action On Bus Ruling

State attorneys were still undecided yesterday whether they would join Montgomery city lawyers in appealing a federal court ruling banning racial segregation on Montgomery buses.

McDonald Gallion, chief assistant to Alabama's attorney general, said an announcement of state action will probably be released early next week.

Meanwhile, Negro attorneys gave no public indication they would ask the high court to set aside the suspension of the injunction issued Tuesday while appeal is pending.

In San Francisco, Robert Carter, an attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said his organization would decide later whether to ask the Supreme Court to interfere.

Carter was one of the attorneys representing four Montgomery Negroes in the Federal Court suit which led to the June 5 anti-segregation ruling.

Negro Attorneys Report No Plans On Counter-Plea

P.1

By AL McCONAGHA

The Montgomery City Commission announced yesterday a decision to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court a federal court injunction against segregation of city buses.

Local Negro attorneys were indefinite about their next move. Atty. Charles Langford said yesterday no plans have been made to attempt to set aside the court suspension which would legally terminate segregation on Montgomery transportation vehicles.

In their announcement the commission said:

"There is no doubt that an end of segregated seating arrangements on public conveyances in the city of Montgomery will effect a drastic change in the habits of the people.

'SEVERE IMPACT'

"This change, which would alter customs which have been in existence since before the city was founded, would have an obviously severe impact upon its citizens.

"The commission is of the opinion that every step possible should be taken to prevent such a change. We are therefore instructing our legal department to effect an appeal within the 10-day period set out by the court in its judgment."

A federal three-judge panel issued a permanent injunction Tuesday ordering the city to abolish segregation laws on Montgomery transportation vehicles. The order was suspended 10 days to allow appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

LAW PREVAIL

Thus, unless the suspension is lifted, the laws requiring separate seating of white and Negro passengers will prevail until the high court rules.

Negro attorneys who challenged legality of the laws can ask the Supreme Court to set the suspension aside and put the injunction into effect immediately.

They did that when U S. District Judge Hobart Grooms in Birmingham ordered Autherine Lucy admitted to the University of Alabama and then suspended his order for four months pending an appeal. The Supreme Court ordered the suspension lifted.

Although the Supreme Court is in summer recess, the Negroes can ask one justice to take action. Normally it would be Justice Hugo Black, whose circuit includes Alabama. Black himself is an Alabamian and is a former U.S. senator appointed to the Supreme Court by Franklin D. Roosevelt.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) - The most extensive open protest of white man's rule in modern southern history will be court-tested Monday when leaders of Montgomery's long bus boycott go to trial. Atlanta, Ga.

The first of 90 boycott leaders indicted by the Montgomery County Grand Jury under a 1929 law banning boycotts are scheduled for trial before circuit Judge Eugene Carter. All defendants have waived the right to jury trials.

100 PER CENT

They are accused in connection with a boycott that began Dec. 5, and which continues now as nearly 100 per cent complete.

The boycott, in protest of segregated seating rules, has brought curtailment of Montgomery City Bus Lines operations, has affected city revenue and has had economic effects on retail business, especially those with "choice" locations at certain bus stops.

Nowhere else in the South has there been such a long-sustained and complete, about 45,000 Negroes are involved, organized protest by Negroes against white supremacy.

The boycotters have been held together, despite the inconvenience of walking or joining car-pools, by a spiritual appeal. Their most outspoken leaders are ministers.

90 LEADERS

Twenty-five pastors are among the 90 leaders indicted on Feb. 21 for boycott violation that carries punishment of fines up to $1,000 or jail terms of six months.

There were 11 indictments returned, all carring the same charge, but listing different accused. Only those name in any one indictment will bebrought to trial at the same time, and solicitor William Thetford would not say which cases he expects to be first called.

If custom is followed in scheduling first the indictment with the lowest number, the first trial would involve four defendants.

POINT OF TENSION

They are the Rev. M. L. king, A Baptist minister whose home was bombed during one high point of tension in Montgomery; E. D. Nixon President of the Montgomery Progressive Democratic Association, whose home also was the target of a nocturnal dynamite blast; the Rev. L. R. Bennett, pastor of the Mt. Zion AME Church and President of The Interdenominational Alliance, who wanted to end the boycott in February; and the Rev E. N. French, pastor of the Hillard Chapel AME Church.

Fund To Get Boycotters Rides Is Told

Constitution Tues. 3-20-56 Atlanta, Ga.

By REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 19 (AP) — State's attorneys produced testimony today alleging that a newly formed Negro organization spent several thousand dollars to make automobile rides available to Negroes during the boycott against segregated city buses. P. 1

The evidence came during the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., first of 90 defendants called to answer for the mass Negro protest.

THREE CALLED

Only three prosecution witnesses were called the first day. Court recessed until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

King was identified as the president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., which was organized the same day the boycott started last Dec. 5, and the Baptist minister's signature was on numerous checks introduced as evidence.

HELP NEGROES

Another clergyman, the Rev. A. W. Wilson, a member of the association's executive committee, said the purpose of the new organization was to improve the "general status of the colored people in Montgomery."

Another witness, Mrs. Erna Dungee, financial secretary of the association, identified bank deposit slips totaling approximately $30,000. Constitution

She also identified photostatic copies of checks signed by herself and King and one other officer, totaling approximately $4,800 for payment for gasoline. P. 15

Mrs. Dungee said the gasoline was "used to ride colored people, people who wanted to ride."

She also testified that Negroes received regular weekly salaries of $24 as drivers in a motor pool which has provided transportation for the boycotting members of her race.

At one point during the opening day of the first of a series of trials, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter observed that the state had presented sufficient testimony to show that a conspiracy could have existed to boycott Montgomery City Lines, Inc.

The state law under which the mass indictments were returned prohibits a conspiracy or any other agreement to hinder the operation of a lawful business unless there is "just cause or legal excuse" for the agreement.

The grand jury indictments withstood their first court test earlier today when Carter overruled a defense petition attacking them as unconstitutional.

King was called to trial as the first defendant after the Negroes asked for separate trials. They also waived the right to jury trials.

King, 27, whose home was bombed in the early weeks of the mass Negro protest against segregated city bus facilities, was singled out by Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford as a boycott leader.

But Thetford ran into difficulty at the outset of the trial in trying to link the pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church to a "conspiracy" to hinder operations of Montgomery City Lines buses.

Carter allowed the first witness, bus company manager J. H. Bagley, to identify King as one of several Negroes with whom he conferred at the start of the boycott in December, but he sustained defense objections to other questions.

Carter upheld defense objections when Thetford asked Bagley what caused a "falling off" of his company's business since Dec. 5. The bus line official said 90 to 95 per cent of the Negroes who formerly rode city buses have stopped.

Defense attorney,s led by Arthur. D. Shores of Birmingham, said they would contest Judge Carter's decision in overruling demurrers which contended the defendants have committed no unlawful act and therefore can't legally be brought to trial.

Shores, arguing for the demurrers which covered all 90 defendants, said the indictments, under a rarely used state law which prohibits organized boycotting, violated the Negroes' rights of free speech, freedom of worship and peaceful assembly.

The Negro attorney, who represented Autherine Lucy in her successful court battle for admittance to the University of Alabama before she was expelled for insubordination, said courts have upheld the right of people to refuse to patronize business places.

Specifically, he said, they have granted Negroes the right to withhold patronage from businesses which refuse to hire Negro employes.

Bus Boycott Group Denies Charge Of Misusing Funds

'SELFISH PURPOSES'

Advertiser Wed. 6-13-56 P. 1 Montgomery, Ala.

A flat denial that funds for transportation of Negroes who are boycotting Montgomery buses are being misappropriated was issued yesterday by the Montgomery Improvement Assn.

The MIA, organized to coordinate the boycott when it began six months ago, issued the denial in reply to charges by the Rev. U. J. Fields, who resigned as MIA recording secretary.

Files said Monday boycott leaders have put personal interests before the protest movement and money being contributed across the country to sustain the protest is being used "for selfish purposes."

Dr. Moses W. Jones, second vice president of the MIA, issued a statement calling Fields' charges "deeply regrettable." He said they were "simply another attack designed to hinder our protest movement."

"No money received by this association has been misappropriated," the statement said. "The president, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., has always insisted upon honesty, that all funds received be duly acknowledged and that a bimonthly financial statement be made to the board of directors."

King was out of town yesterday.

U. S. Judges Deliberate Bus Segregation Fate

Race Hearing In Court Here Ends Session

Montgomery Ala.

By STEVE LESHER

A legal war against Montgomery and Alabama segregation laws in U.S. District Court here ended shortly after 3 p.m. yesterday, but the three-judge panel hearing the case said they "can't say when a decision will be rendered."

All testimony was heard by noon yesterday. Arguments began at 1:30 p.m. and the court adjourned sine die less than two hours later.

Negro attorneys, headed by Fred D. Gray of Montgomery and Robert L. Carter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in New York, received testimony from the plaintiffs, four Negro women, that the six-month-old bus boycott resulted directly from segregation. Further testimony revealed that Negroes would be willing to ride the buses in the city if racial barriers are torn down.

Each of the plaintiffs said they were "mistreated" on buses and at various times had been forced to relinquish their seats so that white persons might sit down. Two of the women, Mary Louise Smith, 19, Rt. 1, Box 201 and Claudette Colvin, 16, 622 E. Dixie Dr., testified they had been arrested for violating city segregation laws.

Crux of the legal battle centered on whether the three-judge panel, U. S. District Judges Frank M. Johnson, Soybourn Lynn and U.S. Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives, had jurisdiction in the hearing While ordinances had never been employed in arestnig segregation law violators, Negro attorneys countered by showing that the Colvin girl had been tried in Juvenile Court under the state rather than the city laws.

Other plaintiffs were Aurelia Browder, about 40, 1012 Highland Ave. and Susie McDonald, 77, 1254 Cleveland Ave. Defendants were the three Montgomery city commissioners, chief of the Montgomery Police Department, Montgomery City Lines Inc., two of its drivers and the president and two members of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

If the court agrees that the issue does not concern state laws, federal court will not then have jurisdiction. If the court feels that state segregation laws are integral to similar city ordinances, federal court will then have jurisdiction.

Supporting the testimony by Mayor W. A. Gayle and City Commissioner Clyde Sellers that "if segregation barriers are lifted, violence will be the order of the day," Asst. Atty. Gen. Gordon Madison, representing the PSC, argued that it would be dangerous to rule in favor of desegregation. Judge Rives, spokesman for the panel, replied, "Can you command one man to surrender his constitutional rights, if they are his constitutional rights, to prevent another man from committing a crime?"

Carter opened the angments by averring that "in view of the Supreme Court's . . . other segregation decisions . . . the Supreme Court may well have dismissed the case of Fleming vs. South Carolina as frivolous." The case in point had been summarily dismissed by the high court on April 23 and originally was heralded as a decision against bus segregation.

PSC AUTHORITY

Atty. Gen. John Patterson countered by saying that "latest legislation clearly points out that the Public Service Commission has no jurisdiction over a transportation line operating completely within a municipality." Judge Rives had introduced a section from the General Acts of Alabama passed on July 6, 1945, which gave the PSC authority to oversee interstate or intrastate transportation.

Madison took the stand that the federal court should not act on this case until the Supreme Court made its position on the matter clear. Judge Johnson apparently scoffed at the stand of the assistant attorney general. Madison said it was not clear to him "just which Constitution" the judges were "sworn to uphold."

Walter Knabe, attorney for the City of Montgomery, argued that in all its actions against violators of segregation laws, the city had acted only within the bounds of city ordinances. Judge Rives said it followed that if the city ordinance was upheld it was logical to assume that the state statute also was being intensive study into the prob-

It was apparent that the court ha made intensive study into the problem at hand. The court was familiar with every case cited by attorneys on both sides. It also appeared that the court would seek to retain its jurisdiction in the case.

Montgomery City Lines Inc., represented by Atty. Robert Thrun of New York, placed one witness on the stand at the request of he court. Thrun said the company had not intended to place any witnesses on the stand. Reynolds C. Mills, assistant superintendent of Montgomery City Lines, explained in detail the segregated seating system on his company's buses. He also testified, at the request of the court, that since the boycott of buses began last Dec. 5, the company received "from 300 to 400 Negro fares each day." He said prior to Dec. 5 the company received "from 30,000 to 40,000 Negro fares each day." He intimated that the boycott had been 99 per cent effective. He added Negroes comprised 65 per cent of the company's business.

POINT STRESSED

One point stressed by the city wa that Negroes had not sought to erase segregation until recently. Knabe said that the orginal demands of Negro leaders shortly after start of the boycott did not include ripping away racial separations. "Instead," Knabe asserted, "they were explicit in saying that they were not seeking an end to segregation but a better seating arrangement for Negroes."

The federal suit was filed two months after the bus boycott began.

Plaintiffs reiterated their testimony that segregation was the cause of the bus boycott.

During course of the hearing, two of the three judges agreed in observations from the bench that there has been no Supreme Court decision as yet on the constitutionality on city and state segregation laws within a state.

Judge Rives and Judge Lynne said they didn't construe the April 23 ruling a final decision on the merits of bus segregation. Judge Johnson did not offer comment.

INJUNCTION

The comment by Rives and Lynn was the second judicial observation along that line in Alabama this week. Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in Circuit Court issued an injunction Wednesday ordering Montgomery City Lines to abandon its recent desegregation policy holding that the Supreme Court did not settle the issue.

At one point in the hearing during the Colvin girl's testimony, an unidentified Negro woman screamed and sobbed violently. The Colvin girl was telling how she had been 'pulled" out of a bus by policemen and 'handcuffed to the patrol car." The woman left the courtroom shortly after that.

City to Appeal Ruling on Bus Integration

Post & Times Herald P. 19 Fri. 6-22-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 21 (AP) — Montgomery officials today ordered an appeal to the United States Supreme Court from a Federal Court ruling outlawing segregation on city buses.

Washington D.C.

Mayor W. A. Gayle issued this statement after the city commission voted unanimously to appeal the decision:

"There is no doubt that an end of segregated arrangements on public conveyances in the City of Montgomery will effect a drastic change in the habits of the people.

"This change ,which would alter customs which have been in existence since before the City was founded, would have an obviously severe impact upon its citizens.

"The Commission is of the opinion that every step possible should be taken to prevent such a change. We are therefore instructing our legal department to effect an appeal within the 10 days period set by the court in its judgement."

The City and the State of Alabama, whose bus segregation statutes were also outlawed June 5 by a Federal Court panel, have until June 29 to appeal.

If they do not do so by then, the judges' injunction issued Tuesday against the segregation laws will go into effect automatically. Bus segregation would be legally halted in this Southern capital where Negroes have been boycotting buses for six and a half months in protest to the segregation laws.

The Federal judges Tuesday issued a permanent injunction against application of City and State bus segregation laws in Montgomery. They suspended the injunction for 10 days, however, to allow for a possible appeal to their June 5 decision against the laws.

The bus company still considers itself bound by a state injunction to inforce segregation, its parent organization in Chicago said yesterday. A spokesman for National City Lines, Inc., said the Federal injunction would be observed when it takes effect.

Judge Forbids Bus Integration In Montgomery

Enquirer Philadelphia Pa. P. 3

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 9 (AP).—Holding that the Supreme Court has not outlawed bus segregation yet, Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones today directed Montgomery City Lines to abandon its new integration policy.

The State Court jurist ruled that nothing in the U. S. Constitution gives the Federal Government the right to prohibit the States from segregating bus passengers in intrastate transportation.

He held Montgomery city and Alabama State segregation laws constitutional and ordered the bus company to "comply and abide" with them.

Times 5-10-56

RIOTING FEARED

Judge Jones' decision granting an injunction against further compliance with the bus company's recent integration order came at the request of the city of Montgomery, whose officials and attorneys predicted rioting and other violence if the segregation laws were broken down.

The judge took note of that threat and observed in his written order:

"A situation of tension and unrest has been created in the city of Montgomery, which is likely to explode at any time, if not restrained."

BUSES BOYCOTTED

Most Montgomery Negroes have boycotted city buses for nearly six months, even despite the company's instructions to its drivers to refrain from enforcing the segregation laws. Negro leaders voted at a mass meeting recently to continue the boycott until city and State officials recognize intergration.

There have been no reports of actual integration aboard the buses even though the company abandoned segregation as a policy.

HEARING SCHEDULED

Judge Jones' decision came two days ahead of a scheduled Federal court hearing on a suit challenging constitutionality of city and State segregation laws.

Judge Jones wrote in his decision that "there is no straight-out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a State or city may not require the separation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

A Supreme Court ruling April 23 was interpreted as outlawing segregation on city buses, but some lawyers later contended it did not settle the issue.

Four Women Wage Attack On Race Law

By STEVE LESHER

A federal court case to determine the constitutionality of Alabama and Montgomery segregation laws on its intrastate and city transportation buses will open today before a three-judge panel in U.S. District Court here.

The plaintiffs are four Negro women and the defendants are the three members of the Montgomery City Commission, the chief of the Montgomery Police Department, Montgomery City Lines Inc., two of its drivers, and the president and two members of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

On the bench will be Judge Frank M. Johnson of the Central District of Alabama, Judge Richard T. Rives of the Alabama Court of Appeals and Judge Seabourn H. Lynne of the Northern District of Alabama.

FILED FEB. 1

The suit was filed on Feb. 1 by two Negro attorneys, Fred D. Gray and Charles D. Langford, in behalf of Aurelia Browder, Susie McDonald, Claudette Colvin, Mary Louise Smith and Jeanetta Reese. The day after the suit was public the Reese refusing to use bus facilities. . . and . . . seeking to compel . . Negro citizens to use said facilities by force, threats, violence, intimidation and harassment . . ." This, the boldest accusation in the lengthy suit, was stricken on March 8 by the Negro attorneys along with the name of Jeaneatta Reese as plaintiff.

Advertiser P. 6-A

OBTAIN INFORMATION

Remaining in the suit, however, was the charge that the defendants harassed Negroes by stopping cars containing Negroes who participated in the car pool and Negro taxi cabs "to obtain information for the purpose of bringing pressure upon employers to discharge Negro employes who are providing transportation to fellow Negro citizens and otherwise subject them to economic reprisals."

Fri. 5-11-56

The suit stated that "Negroes desire and intend to resume the use of buses . . . as soon as they can do so on a non-segregated basis without fear of arrest."

The plaintiffs, according to the suit, "bring this action . . for themselves and on behalf of all other Negro citizens" who "seek common relief based upon common questions of law and fact."

It was pointed out that the Colvin girl was arrested on March 2, 1955, and sentenced in Juvenile Court and placed on probation for violation of the segregation laws on a city bus. The Smith girl was fined $10 in Recorder's Court after her arrest of Oct. 21, 1955, for the same offense and Rosa Parks, Negro seamstress, was fined $14 in police court on Dec. 5, the day the Negro boycott of city buses, now in its sixth month, began.

TEMPORARY INJUNCTION

The plaintiffs are asking for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendants from enforcing the statutes concerning segregation on transportation media and a final judgment that will denounce the laws as unconstitutional.

After the suit was filed, the defendants filed their several answers. But all the answers were generally common, with the exception of Montgomery City lines Inc., which said they were merely obeying the law.

The others claimed that segregation "tends to prevent violence and possible bloodshed" and that the suit should first be argued in a state court. All filed motions to dismiss the suit, with the PSC saying they had nothing to do with the bus line operating in Montgomery.

The PSC members, C. C. (Jack) Owens, Sybil Pool and Jimmie Hitchcock, were added to the suit on March 8 when one answer pointed out that "indispensable parties" (the governor, attorney general and the PSC) "are not made parties to the suit."

While his controversy raged on toward May 11, the day of the hearing, the Supreme Court on April 23 refused to hear an appeal from a bus company in South Carolina when a lower court ruled against the company in a segregation suit.

CONFUSION AROSE

The move by the Supreme Court was interpreted immediately as outlawing segregation on transportation media. A great deal of confusion arose with announcement of the court's move—some believed it abolished all segregation on all transportation media, others believed it abolished segregation on transportation media only in South Carolina and still others believed the court made no decision on the question but merely returned the appeal to a lower court where it had apparently not been completed.

Montgomery City Lines Inc., subsidiary of National City Lines Inc., of Chicago, abolished its segregation practices on the night of April 23 when J. H. Bagley, local superintendent, posted orders to his drivers not to enforce segregation on the buses.

The city threatened arrest of passengers and bus drivers who did not comply with segregation laws. Negroes voted to continue their boycott in the face of possible arrest for desegregating themselves on buses. The city obtained an injunction from Circuit Court against the bus company to force the company to obey existing segregation laws. The company said it would comply.

integration on the buses and the hiring of Negro drivers. The demands were rejected by the city commission.

It was reported that only a few Negroes are riding the buses in Tallahassee. Others are walking and riding in car pools.

Bus segregation laws in Tennessee were challenged also when a suit was filed in federal court in Memphis asking that the statutes be declared in violation of the U. S. Constitution.

In the Alabama case, the judges did not issue an injunction, because of the probability the city and state will appeal the ruling.

The court gave opposing lawyers two weeks to submit written suggestion on how the formal order should be entered and whether a stay should be granted pending an appeal.

The majority decision was signed by Judge Richard T. Rives of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., of the middle district of Alabama.

Judge Seybourn Lynne of the northern district of Alabama dissented on the grounds that state laws calling for segregated seating on buses is not a violation of the Constitution.

Johnson said that when an injunction is issued it will affect only Montgomery. A separate order would be required to extend it to other cities.

Alabama officials expressed "shock" over the ruling and indicated they will seek a reversal.

The ruling has not changed the situation in Montgomery where the boycott of city buses has been in progress for six months. Boycott leaders said the protest will continue until all legal angles have been cleared up.

The 2-1 decision by the court was the highlight of week in which segregated bus seating was the main issue in the national civil rights picture.

Nine days left for appeal—

Injunction filed on bus segregation

News P. 7 Phila. 6-20-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 20—(AP)—City and state officials today had nine days in which to appeal a federal court decision against bus segregation laws in Montgomery or see enforcement of the laws stopped June 29.

On the same 2-1 vote by which they declared the Montgomery and Alabama laws unconstitutional June 5, a three-judge federal panel yesterday issued an injunction against them. But they suspended the injunction for 10 days to allow time for their decision to be appealed.

Officials said they would have to study the situation before deciding whether to appeal the case directly to the U. S. Supreme Court.

NEGRO ATTORNEYS who won the legal battle that came during Montgomery's half-year-old Negro bus boycott in protest to the laws also they were temporarily uncertain of their next move.

The federal judges said that a notice of appeal during the 10-day period would keep the injunction's suspension in effect until a new suspension can be written to last until the appeal is decided.

If no appeal is made by June 29, the injunction will automatically go into effect.

The order says city and state authorities are "permanently enjoined and restrained from enforcing statutes or ordinances requiring the segregation of white and Negro passengers in the operation of public motor bus transportation facilities in the city of Montgomery."

Judge Richard T. Rives of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, who presided at the May 11 hearing of the suit by four Negro women and who signed the majority opinion, said an appeal would be a preferred case when the Supreme Court reconvenes in October because of the suspended injunction.

RIVES SAID IF AN APPEAL takes the case to the high court "a decision will probably NOT be made before early next year at the earliest, I would think."

If the decision is appealed, Rives said, Negro attorneys could then ask the Supreme Court to set aside the suspension until the case is decided. Such a request would go to Justice Hugo Black, a former Alabama senator, in his capacity as federal circuit judge.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. that coordinates the boycott, said "the prevailing opinion" among MIA members is that most of the city's 50,000 Negroes would continue to shun city buses "until some definite action is taken" to end bus segregation.

City Atty. Walter Knabe said he would have something to say on an appeal after conferring with the city commission. Alabama Atty. Gen. John Patterson indicated the state would study the legal position before deciding whether to appeal.

Negro Atty. Charles Langford said he could NOT tell immediately what the next step would be. In New York, Robert Carter, attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People who helped argue the case here, said last night he had NOT yet received official word of the injunction and suspension.

In addition to Rives, yesterday's order—(like the June 5 decision)—was approved by Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. of the U. S. District Court for the middle district of Alabama, sitting in Montgomery. Dissenting from both actions was Judge Seybourn Lynne of the northern district of Alabama, who sits in Birmingham.

'Police trailing our cars,' bus boycotters complain

Afro-American P. 1 Sat. 5-26-56

By AL SWEENEY

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "The police have been trailing our new station wagons. They have made pictures of them.

Baltimore, Md.

"Something must be in the wind," Dr. Richard Harris, proprietor of Dean's Drug Store and one of the pioneer directors of Montgomery's car pool operation, reported to the AFRO.

"They have been stopping the drivers and questioning the riders. I guess they are about to do something to give us some more publicity," Dr. Harris speculated.

THE 13 SHINY, streamlined station wagons which are operating in the boycott car pool are inpressive. Each one has the name of a church on it and the sign of the cross, painted in gold, sparkles just above the middle of the windshield.

Currently directing the transportation system is the Rev. B. T. Simms, pastor of the Greater St. Mark's Baptist Church.

"The station wagons have done plenty to bolster the morale of our people," says the Rev. Mr. Simms.

"THEY ARE a symbol to our people. The riders rear back in their seats very proud as they are being transported about, while other citizens point them out as they pass as 'OUR station wagons.' "

The Rev. Mr. Simms estimates that the transportation system of the Montgomery Improvement Association, that includes over 200 cars, carries 10,000 to 20,000 persons each day.

"I am not aware of the cost of the operation, but I believe it is in excess of $1,000 a day," he says.

Afro-American

AS THE boycott is in its sixth month, the operation of the association has increased. The headquarters of the association is located in the building of the Bricklayers Local at 530 Union St.

P. 2

Originally, the MIA was quartered at the Citizens Club in West Montgomery; but pressure was put on the owner of the club and it was moved temporarily to the basement of the First Baptist Church, of which the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy is pastor.

There are seven full-time persons employed by the MIA.

While the station wagons have given a lift to the movement, they undoubtedly have incurred the envy of the association's antagonists.

"Last week," the Rev. Mr. Simms reports, "the insurance company suddenly canceled all of our policies. However, we got coverage through another firm."

* * *

THE STATION wagons have been purchased by the various churches associated with the protest.

Each has the name of the church and the pastor on its side.

They operate in the car pool from 6 a.m. until 7:30 p.m.

They operate along regular routes and pick up and dispatch riders along the way.

The churches with station wagons are:

Old Ship AMEZ, Mt. Gilliard Baptist, Oak Street AMEZ, Dexter Avenue Baptist, First Baptist;

Bryant Street Baptist, St. John AME, Hutchinson Street Baptist, Bethel Baptist, Holt Street Baptist, Maggie Street Baptist and First CME.

Other station wagons are on order.

Bus Boycott Talks Reach Dead End

World-Telegram & Sun P. 3 Sat. 4-28-56

By the United Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 28.—The city of Montgomery, determined to maintain segregation, appeared ready today to break off negotiations aimed at ending a bitter and costly 21-week-old Negro bus boycott.

New York

After the second fruitless meeting in a little more than 24 hours between the city and officials of the National City Bus Lines, a negotiator said "I think this is the last meeting the city and National City Lines will hold."

The city negotiator, who declined the use of his name, said "the city commission has advised the bus company that all laws and ordinances will be enforced and that the commission will require the company to follow to the letter all laws and ordinances."

National City Lines, operator of the city's transit system, ordered its drivers to stop enforcing the city's segregation law after the U.S. Supreme Court last Monday refused to consider a South Carolina segregation suit involving intrastate transportation.

City officials have threatened, however, to prosecute any person violating Montgomery's segregation laws.

Bus Parley Fails In Montgomery

Inquirer P. 1 Sat. 4-28-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 27 (AP).—Bus company and city officials met again today but were unable to break a stalemate in their talks on bus segregation.

Philadelphia

Mayor W. A. Gayle issued a statement afterward saying Montgomery City Lines would be "required" to obey city and state segregation laws. The company has announced it would no longer enforce segregation.

Negroes continued their fifth-month-old boycott of the buses. They agreed at a mass meeting last night to refrain from riding until public officials agree to accept desegregation.

Solving The Boycott

P. 4-A

The Opp News

It might solve the problem up at Montgomery if the bus people would operate buses strictly for the Negroes and let them ride inside, outside, on top or wherever they wanted. Or if they want the front of the bus, give them the front and give the whites the other end. It really doesn't matter which end of a bus a person rides on, but one end of it is theirs and you may lay to that.

Getting Worse

Montgomery Ala.

The Clarke County Democrat

U.S. News & World Report, the only magazine of national circulation which has shown any real inclination to present the segregation issue in true perspective, carries interviews in its Feb. 24 issue with editors from practically every Southern state. Alabama editors reporting were Grover C. Hall Jr., of The Montgomery Advertiser, and Buford Bone, of The Tuscaloosa News.

Almost without exception these editors are agreed, and this includes Percy Greene, Negro editor of the Jackson (Miss.) Advocate, that conditions between the two races are worse than they were when the Supreme Court handed down its decision two years ago. They likewise are in agreement that no integration of a general nature is likely in the deep South in the foreseeable future. They are further agreed that any attempt by the federal government to use force would have immediate and violent repercussions. Most of them report from their respective states that no provisions are being made to comply with the Supreme Court order.

'Wise, Calm, Friendly Men'

The Brewton Standard

Despite the shouts heard from either extreme, it would seem that a calmer voice is beginning to be heard, at least in Alabama, during the past few days.

In Monroeville, The Monroe Journal asks: "Why are rumors persisting that organization of a White Citizens Council is being strongly considered? Certainly there is no hint of any type racial problem in our county and the formation of such a group could possibly create such an unwanted situation."

In Grove Hill, Editor George Carleton [of The Clarke County Democrat] points out: "We suggested that well-meaning whites and Negroes of the South should form an organization for discussion and solution of problems which confront the two races. As matters now stand, agitators and trouble makers on both sides can do irreparable harm."

"It is far easier to recruit members for organizations such as the NAACP and the White Citizens Council—organizations which appeal to the prejudices, the emotions and the hatreds of each race—than for an organization such as we suggest, but a body which includes the wise, calm, friendly members of both races could do far more good than could either of the others."

The Lucy Case Up North

The Greenville Advocate

Recent issues of The Buffalo (NY) Evening News contain several stories and editorials on the Autherine Lucy affair, on the Montgomery bus boycott, the recent meeting of the White Citizens Council in Montgomery, when Sen. Eastland was the featured speaker.

This Buffalo newspaper has a column for letters to the editor, and in it letters giving readers' opinions are divided. Some readers write of the Southerners' "shameful" attitude; others see the Lucy case in a different light. One reader said: "I see that Sweden has offered Autherine Lucy, the Negro girl in Alabama, the opportunity to go there to college free. Someone should explain to Sweden that there are many colleges in the United States where she could have gone with no trouble, no fanfare or publicity. Evidently, trouble and publicity were desired so that a court case can be developed."

Another writer wonders if the girl's entry was a "plant." The letter follows:

"About the unfortunate riots in Alabama over this colored woman who enrolled at the university, before we take snap judgment I would like to ask this Negro association, wasn't this freshman (?) planted in that school to stir up trouble? Isn't it funny that a woman of 26 would suddenly become so interested in securing an education in one of the leading Southern schools when Alabama has one of the finest colleges for colored people in the world?"

Need For Reason And Good Will

The Birmingham News

The people of Alabama and other Southern states need all the powers of good will, wisdom and self-discipline they can bring to bear on current racial problems and tensions.

These problems and tensions involve intense feelings. It would be very unrealistic to expect that in present circumstances such feelings would not be aroused or could be eliminated altogether. But such realities themselves emphasize, of course, the urgency of the utmost efforts by our people, white and colored, to deal with these difficult conditions with reason, moderation and a spirit of fairness and consideration for all men.

The conditions and feelings that have been so apparent in recent days must have impressed upon thoughtful men the serious perils involved in uncontrolled emotionalism, in incitement of hatred and distrust and fear, in circulation of irresponsible rumors, in any kind of action that makes for extremist passions.

Northern Reformers

The Centreville Press

For many years the white and Negro races have been living in perfect peace and harmony in the South, and both races have made fine progress. The Negroes in many sections of the South have fine schools with other new schools being planned, they own businesses and have many fine churches. They have made much progress with the assistance of the white people, but all of this has been done on a segregated basis.

For the past twenty years Northern reformers, which includes Northern politicians, have made the South their target. It is their desire to completely remake the South for their own selfish benefit. The vast majority of the Northern people do not know the true conditions in the South, but yet they are constantly voicing their opinions as to what should be done about the South. They do not realize that we have some counties with 70% Negroes and 30% white.

Eyes On Alabama

Mack Ray Herring In The Geneva County Reaper

People all over the country will be looking at the University if Miss Lucy is readmitted. The demonstrations that caused her exclusion are said to have disgraced the name of the school. But they were actions taken when nothing else could be done, and many believe if there is no other way to protect segregation in the South, the demonstration must continue if Miss Lucy [illegible] demonstrations were not aimed directly at Miss Lucy but at the entire integration movement that is trying to be forced on the people of the South.

Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) called yesterday for "massive resistance" in the South to challenge the Supreme Court's order for racial integration in public schools.

Byrd emphasized he wasn't advocating or condoning violence but said he wanted Southern states to stand together in declaring the Court's opinion unconstitutional. The Senator said the South had a "perfectly legal means of appeal" from the Court in the doctrine of interposition.

Negro Racial Protest Organized, Effective

Sun. 2-26-56 P. 1

Washington, D.C.

By Robert E. Baker
Staff

Bulletin

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 25.—The Negroes of this bustling city have come up with the first organized—and apparently effective—protest by their race in the Deep South's gripping segregation problem.

They have completed 12 weeks of boycotting the public transit system here, the buses of Montgomery City Lines, Inc. They have adopted a Gandhi-like "passive resistance" as their weapon. Eighty-nine of their leaders, including 26 clergymen, have been arrested and face trial. Ten more leaders face arrest.

Negotiations between the city, the bus line and the Negroes have broken off. The Negroes "walk and pray." City officials wait and see. The end is not in sight.

There is considerable irritation, some tension, but no violence apparent. Since a 43-year-old Negroe seamstress boarded a bus 12 weeks ago, the eyes of Alabama, then the South, and now the Nation are on Montgomery.

For years, rumors and reports of economic reprisal by whites against Negroes have come from the South. The Montgomery Negroes have turned the tables. Here today they practice economic reprisal on the whites—passively.

Montgomery, then, is a test case by the Negroes of a new found weapon in the Deep South, a great but saddened part of the Nation, knotted today by racial emotions.

This is the story of how this unique Negro protest here came about:

This capital is an agricultural center, a sprawling vigerous city of a 125,000 persons, 46,000 of them Negroes—a percentage silimar to Washington, D. C. Two miles from Montgomery is Maxwell Air Force Base, with 8000 persons and a 50-million annual payroll. There is the huge Union Stockyards Co. with another whopping payroll.

"Between the bull and the brass, we are doing all right," said Mayor W. A. Gayle.

It is a city of wide, clean streets and plenty of parking spaces. It has a good transportation system Montgomery City Lines, a wholly owned subsidiary of National City Lines of Chicago.

Post + Times Herald

Last Dec. 1 was a Thursday. The Montgomery Fair, department store on North Court st., closed its doors as usual as 6 p. m. Rosa Louise Parks, 43 year-old Negro seamstress employed there, left to catch her usual Cleveland ave. route bus. She was on her way home, 634 Cleveland ct., in Washington Park, a Negro residential section.

P. 14-A

On Montgomery st. in front of the Empire Theater, she boarded her bus, paid her dime fare and sat down beside a Negro man on the third seat from the front. Two Negro men were sitting on the seat across the aisle. The rear of the bus was filled with Negroes.

At the next stop, the front seats filled with white riders. At the third stop, more white passengers boarded and had only standing room. The bus driver said the Negroes would have to vacate the third seats from the front, on each side of the aisle, to make way for the standing white passengers. The three Negro men stood and moved to the aisle. But Mrs. Parks refused. The bus driver said he would have to call police.

"Then just call them," said Mrs. Parks.

He did and two policemen took her to City Hall where she spent a brief time in the lock-up before she was freed on $100 bond.

She had broken the law. Chapter 6 of the city code requires segregation of the races.

Section 10 of Chapter 6 requires the bus company to provide equal but separate accommodations. It requires the driver to assign passengers so the races are separated. (It does permit the driver to assign Negro nursemaids, who are in charge of white children, to seats among white passengers).

Section 11 gives the bus driver the powers of a police officer in carrying out the bus segration law and makes it illegal for the passengers to refuse to obey the driver's seat assignment.

In Montgomery, and many Southern cities, there is no definite segregation line in the buses. It is up to the bus driver's discretion. For example, buses going out to a well-to-do section in the morning are filled to the front with Negroes who work as domestics. On the return trip downtown, the bus is filled to the rear with white passengers on their way to work.

This practice leads to the most galling objection of all to the Negroes: Having once boarded the bus and obtained a seat with other Negroes, they some times are forced to give the seat up to late-boarding white passengers.

Mrs. Parks is well known in the Negro community, highly respected and active in church work. She is a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, an organization feared and hated by many Southern whites.

The day following her arrest—Friday, Dec. 2, leaflets were circulated among Montgomery's Negroes, protesting the action as "unjust."

"The reaction spread like wildfire," said the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., 27-year-old Negro pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and an active NAACP member.

A mass meeting was held that Friday night. A second meeting on Monday night in the Holt Street Baptist Church was attended by an estimated 5000 persons. The Montgomery Improvement Assn. was formed, with King as president. The leaders asked Negroes to stay off the buses until these demands were met:

- More courtesy from the bus drivers. "They call us 'black cows' and 'black apes' sometimes," said King. "Often, they make us get on the bus by the back door."
- A first-come, first-serve bus segregation policy, with Negroes filling up seats from the back, white passengers filling seats from the front. "That is the way it is done in Mobile, Huntsville and Atlanta," said King, "and that is all we want."
- Negro bus drivers on predominantly Negro routes. "This would help overcome the discourtesy shown us now," said King.

The unsuccessful negotiations and successful boycott began. The speed with which the Negroes organized led many white persons to believe Mrs. Parks was a "plant"—that is, she boarded the bus with the intention of causing an incident and the test case.

"I had nothing further from my mind," said Mrs. Parks. "That just isn't true."

She added: "I have been asked to move before, but this time I just didn't."

Said Mayor Gayle: "I could not say if it was a put-up job or not. But this boycott was mighty well organized mighty quickly."

The negotiations involved the City Commissioners (councilmen), the Chamber of Commerce, the bus company, the Men of Montgomery—an organization of 37 prominent businessmen, the Alabama Council on Human Relations and the Montgomery Improvement Association. At least nine meetings were held, but to no avail.

The negotiations did not always run smoothly. An outgrowth was the suit filed in Federal court here which asked that Alabama racial segregation laws be declared unconstitutional. But the Montgomery Improvement Association struck to its original proposals so far as the bus boycott was concerned.

Meanwhile, the Negroes had to use some sort of transportation. At first, they used Negro-driven taxicabs, paying the regular 10-cent bus fare. The city ruled the taxis must charge taxi rates.

Then came the car pool. More than 300 cars joined in it. Forty-six pickup and dispatch stations were set up. The Negroes rode free, made contributions to their churches, which in turn donated funds for gas and oil to the car pool drivers. This got around the law which would have made the cars taxicabs if the passengers paid the drivers directly.

The system was hurting. The Mayor announced a "get-tough policy." Said he: "I am tired of pussyfooting around."

White employers of domestics were asked not to pick up their maids in their cars. A grand jury met, seized records of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., indicted 99 persons, including King and Mrs. Parks, who, by this time had appealed her case after conviction in Recorder's Court (police court) and Circuit Court.

The leaders were charged with violating Title 14, Section 54 of the state code which makes it illegal for "two or more persons who, without just cause or legal excuse . . . (to) enter into any combination, conspiracy . . . for the purpose of hindering, delaying or preventing any other persons, firms, corporations or association of persons from carrying on any lawful business."

Conviction carries a fine of from $100 to $1000 and up to six months' hard labor. The law was passed in 1921 and grew out of a labor boycott. It has been used in various cases since: many times in labor disputes and once by an insurance company to stop scandalous rumors.

"But it's the first time I know of that it has been used in racial cases," said William Thetford, Circuit Court Solicitor (prosecuting attorney).

Negroes claim 95 per cent of the bus company's Negro passengers no longer ride the buses. They say it costs the company an average of $3200 a day.

Alabama Indicts 115 Negroes Over Boycott of Buses

1921 Law Used In Montgomery

By Robert C. Bird

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 21—The Montgomery County Grand Jury returned criminal true bills here late today indicting 115 Negroes on misdemeanor charges in the Negroes including many of the leaders in the racial protest against the city buses.

Coming on top of a breakdown last night of efforts by city of Negro and other white leaders to effect a compromise settlement of the boycott, the result is that the biggest city of Alabama outside the Deep South has injected the racial issue into a bitter fight for a new segregation statute.

The boycott, recently joined by Negroes complaining about an increased fare but chiefly about practices and the attitude of segregation of authorities.

$250,000 Voted At Albany for City Inquiries

Senate Acts, Assembly to Follow In Widening 'Watchdog' Powers

By David Wise

ALBANY, Feb. 21—The Senate today voted a $250,000 subsidy appropriation and passed several measures to investigate city government including New York City. Democrats unanimously charged the move was a political maneuver designed to divert attention from Mayor Wagner's investigation Commissioner J. Lee Rankin.

Democrats charged that the measure introduced by Senate majority leader Walter J. Mahoney (Rep., Albany) was a Republican counter move to the Rankin investigation. The Republican move to follow the Rankin investigation with an inquiry into New York City's finances was regarded as equivalent to a threat to subpoena Mayor Wagner and other New York officials if they refused to cooperate with the Rankin probe.

Mayor Wagner announced yesterday he would cooperate with Rankin.

Democrats charged that the Republicans had rushed the Mahoney bill through the Senate without giving it the consideration given other measures because it was a political move designed to divert attention from the Rankin probe.

170 Seats Seen For Karamanlis

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "We are going to stage a block by block canvas of this city to encourage colored residents to register to vote in the coming election.

"It is an educative project because in order to qualify an applicant is required to take a written examination.

"For an educated person it is not too difficult. However, the questions can bother a person without certain advantages of education."

Baltimore, Md.

THE REV. MARTIN L. KING, president of the Montgomery Improvement Association made the statement to the AFRO, Friday, indicating that the "passive resistance" demonstrators were turning next to the ballot box.

Sat. 4-7-56

AS FOR THEIR primary goal, the change of the racial policies of the Montgomery Bus Lines, the Rev. Mr. King said that leaders of the association are mapping future strategy.

"The next two weeks will be among the most important in our movement," the Rev. Mr. King said.

"We are going to thoroughly examine the possibility of setting up a free-transportation system in Montgomery.

"FIRST, WE will resubmit a bid for a franchise to operate a transportation system in Montgomery.

"Without attempting to prejudge it, it is my belief that our request will undoubtedly be rejected. Our first offer was."

ASKED IF the movement was bogging down, the Rev. M. King replied:

"The people are just as determined as ever to walk until their demands are met.

"The demands remain: (1) More courtesy by the bus drivers; (2) seating on a first-come-first-served basis; and (3) the hiring of colored bus drivers."

IF THEY are met would the demonstration end? the minister was asked.

"That is what we have requested. At this point, I don't think the bus line officials can do anymore than grant the demands."

However, the Rev. Mr. King pointed out that a case attacking that state's segregation laws is pending in the U.S. District Court.

A three-judge panel has been appointed to hear the case that was filed by Fred Gray, 25-year-old attorney, on behalf of four Montgomery residents.

"The question of segregation will be left up to the courts," the Rev. Mr. King stated.

THE REV. MR. KING was fined $500 and costs by Montgomery County Circuit Court's Judge Eugene Carter on March 22.

The conviction was on a charge of leading a conspiracy to violate the state's 25-year-old boycott law. Judge Carter took seven seconds to rule after a four-day trial. P. 0

Ninety-two other leaders of the boycott movement were indicted on similar charges, however their cases were continued until the appeal of the minister's case is completed.

Sat. 4-7-56

WHILE THE legal staff of the association works feverishly to attack the bus situation from a legal angle, the association's voter registration committee is attempting to awaken the citienry to the power of the ballot.

Rufus Lewis, former football coach at Alabama State College and president of the Citizens Club, an organiation that is restricted to registered voters, is chtirman of the registration committee.

Baltimore, Md.

"COLORED PERSONS have been systematicly excluded from voting in Montgomery," Lewis told the AFRO.

"If we can't get some satisfaction by appealing to them, we might have to go into the courts," he indicated.

"But, we haven't gone far enough yet to tell just what we can do," he added.

IF THE Improvement Association decides to take its registration problems into the court, the attack will be aimed at Alabama's registration qualifications.

The qualifications were written into the State constitution as a substitute for the outlawed Boswell Amendment.

The Boswell Amendment, held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, required applicants to be able to "understand and explain" the Federal Constitution.

The current Alabama requirement calls for prospective votes to undergo a written examination and satisfy registration officials that they are of "good character."

LEWIS, explaining the complaints against the board here, stated that it "was a subtle sort of thing."

"When colored persons try to register, they are told they will be notified if they are qualified. But white people sometimes get their ceritficates right then and there.

"Sometimes, colored persons are never notified and they have to go back, some of them half a dozen times.

"If they finally do get registered, they have been delayed and delayed."

* * *

LEWIS SAID the difficulties have increased noticeably since the organization of the Montgomery White Citizens Council.

"We get even less results now," he said. "Fewer and fewer are registered.

At nearby Macon County, where Tuskegee Institute is located, colored residents have been thwarted in their drive to register by a non-functioning board of registrars.

TWO OF THE three board members have resigned. It is an old tactic to have vacancies on the board. For a period of 18 months in recent years, the county had no registration board.

It is significant that the State Senator from Macon County is Sam Englehardt, a leader of the White Citizens Councils.

Colored persons constitute about 84 percent of the population, yet only a handful vote.

Montgomery City Lines Inc. was reduced another 135 miles yesterday on request of the company granted by the City Commission. Information on how many miles the company has been reduced since the boycott of buses by Negroes began could not be obtained from company officials.

Montgomery, Ala.

The reduction was gained by merging the two buses which serve east Montgomery section. One bus formerly served that section until last Nov. 5 when they split the mission, J. H. Bagley, manager of the Montgomery City Lines, said that since the boycott on Dec. 5, 1955, the company had been operating 367 miles daily on the two routes "for a few white passengers." He said the revision will save 135 miles per day.

The bus will continue to serve the Veterans Administration Hospital and Gunter Air Force Base.

Negro Cleric Convicted In Bus Boycott, Appeals

Fri. 3-23-56 P. 1

New York, N.Y.

By The United Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar. 22.—A Circuit Court judge today found a young Negro minister guilty of conspiring to boycott segregated city buses and sentenced him to a $500 fine or 140 days at hard labor.

The trials of eighty-nine other Negroes on the same charge were continued until a higher court rules on the first case, that of the Rev. Martin Luther King jr., twenty-seven. Mr. King immediately appealed to the state Circuit Court of Appeals. Execution of his sentence also was held in abeyance pending appeal.

Judge Eugene Carter announced his verdict at 4:45 p. m. Immediately after the summations of the four-day trial were completed.

Mr. King, the jurist said, had "started a fire he couldn't stop" as president of a new Negro rights organization which, the state said, conceived, financed and executed the boycott.

The demonstration, now in its sixteenth week, had put the city bus line in a deep financial hole, since more than half of its normal passenger volume was Negro. Negroes have used private motor pools and in some cases walked to their jobs.

The alleged leaders of the boycott were prosecuted under a little-used 1921 law making it illegal to conspire to the detriment of a normal business operation. As a defense, the Negroes contended the boycott was a spontaneous protest against what they called abuse and arrogance from white bus drivers, which, they said, constituted a "just cause" for such a demonstration.

Herald Tribune

Mr. King, who said he had "somewhat expected" to be convicted, said the verdict would only serve "to make our people more determined." He could have received a maximum punishment of six months in jail, $1,000 fine or both under the statute. P. 6

Mr. King reaffirmed his stand taken earlier that his case was traveling under the "aegis of the United States Constitution" and that "we will continue our passive resistance boycott with love and non-violence."

As Mr. King walked from the courthouse, more than 100 Negroes crowded around him to wish him luck. The crowd was jubilant, apparently convinced the case would be appealed all the way to the United States Supreme Court. There were cries of "Long live the King" and as the large group posed for photographs, one Negro shouted: "You going to ride the buses?" and was answered by a chorus of "no."

Judge Carter first announced the $500 fine. But thirty-five minutes after the courtroom was cleared he had a bailiff call back Mr. King and his battery of Negro lawyers. The judge explained he had forgotten the alternative punishment of 140 days at hard labor in the event he was unable to pay the fine.

There was little reaction from the audience jammed into the courtroom.

In summing up the prosecution's case, Solicitor W. F. Thetford called Mr. King the "leader" of the Montgomery Improvement Association, the guilding force behind the boycott. Mr. Thetford said the M. I. A. was 'a selfish little group of men seeking' power in their own right." "If they were looking for publicity, they got it," he said.

Negro attorney Arthur Shores spoke twenty-five minutes in concluding the defense. He said: "The spark that set off the protest was spontaneous."

Mr. Shores said the association was born "to control the emotions" of Montgomery Negroes aroused by the arrest of Rosa Parks Dec. 5, the action which touched off the fifteen-week-old boycott.

He said that after the Negroes submitted their request for more courteous treatment, first-come, first-served seating, and Negro bus drivers, Mayor W. A. Gayle "instituted a get-tough policy and told his police force to crack down."

Another defense attorney, Fred Gray, charged that the state had "utterly failed to show any connection between King and a conspiracy."

Mr. King testified that he told his followers to let their consciences guide them in the boycott. He was the last of nearly forty defense witnesses

State Segregation Law Faces U. S. Test Today

Post-Herald Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, May 10 (U.P.)—A segregation suit growing out of the continuing Negro boycott of city buses will be heard here tomorrow by a three-judge panel in Federal Court.

The suit, filed on behalf of four Negro women Feb. 1, seeks to declare unconstitutional Alabama segregation laws and to enjoin the city and state from enforcing them.

Fri. 11-56

Named as defendants in the suit are the Montgomery City Commission, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, the State Public Service Commission, the Montgomery City Bus Lines and two bus drivers.

Sun. 5-11-56

State and city attorneys contend that the federal panel has no jurdisdiction in the matter, arguing that the case has not yet been through state courts, the accepted procedure.

Negro attorneys, however, argue that the panel is within its rights in hearing the suit.

If the federal judges take jurisdiction and rule tomorrow, the outcome either way probably will be appealed to the Supreme Court.

A battery of city and state lawyers, led by Atty. Gen. John Patterson, will represent the defendants. Atty. Fred Gray, 25-year-old boycott leader, heads up a group of Negro lawyers.

In another development yesterday, Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones ordered City Bus Lines to return to the practice of separating the races. The firm had on April 24 taken down the color bar after the Supreme Court upheld a South Carolina court's ruling banning segregation on intrastate buses.

Jones granted the city an injunction forcing the transit company to obey segregation ordinances.

Buses were operating today under Jones' order, but Negroes still continued their boycott, now in its sixth month.

day they would fight the case of a mild-mannered young Negro minister convicted of conspiring to boycott Montgomery city buses "all the way to the United States Supreme Court."

New York, N.Y.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter yesterday convicted the Rev. Martin Luther King, 27, of starting "a fire he couldn't stop" in leading a boycott that has crippled the City Transit Co. for more than 15 weeks.

Judge Carter ordered the accused leader of the boycott to pay $1000 in fines and court costs or serve 386 days at hard labor under a litttle-used Alabama law making it a misdemeanor to enter a conspiracy to boycott a business. Mr. King was freed and the fine suspended pending outcome of the appeal.

The defense announced it would appeal the decision and the cases of 89 other Negro defendants facing identical charges were ordered continued until final disposition of Mr. King's appeal.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, convicted in Montgomery, Ala., last night as a leader of the Negro bus boycott, is scheduled to address a church audience here Sunday, it was announced today.

Mr. King is scheduled to speak in Brooklyn's Concord Baptist Church, 833 Marcy Ave., at 3 p.m. on Palm Sunday at a meeting sponsored by the Brooklyn club of the National Assn. of Business and Professional Women.

City Turns To State Courts To Head Off Bus Integration

Wed. 5-2-56 P. 1

Montgomery

Montgomery city officials turned to the state courts yesterday to try to head off Montgomery City Lines' announced intentions to desegregate city buses.

In a suit filed in Montgomery Circuit Court, the city asked for a temporary injunction to restrain the bus company from putting its desegregation policy into effect.

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones has set a hearing on the city's petition at 10 a.m. Thursday.

A non - segregated seating arrangement on buses, said the city "threatens the public health and safety by creating a clear and present danger of race riots, disorderly conduct, assaults, affrays, bombings and other physical attacks."

The bus company announced an end to traditionally separate seating facilities for white and Negro passengers on April 23, following the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to review a South Carolina case concerning bus segregation.

Company attorneys immediately interpreted the court's action as a ruling against segregated travel facilities, and ordered the local bus firm to comply.

Subsequently, however, students of constitutional law determined that the court's refusal to reivew the South Carolina case was based on a technical legal point and did not affect segregation.

Bus Boycott Trial Hears Accusations

Defense Begins Case in Alabama

P. 10

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar 21 (UP).—A Negro woman testified bitterly today that members of her race stopped riding buses because white drivers abused "all of us 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery."

Applause broke out in the courtroom, filled mainly by ninety Negroes charged with conspiring to boycott the buses at this testimony of Mrs. Ella Perkins. Circuit Judge Eugene Carter rapped loudly for order saying "Here, here, we can't have any of this."

The scene came as the defense began its case in the nonjudy trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King jr., first of the ninety defendants to be brought to trial. The state had rested two hours earlier.

The defense indicated that it would try to show the Negroes stopped riding the buses in a big spontaneous demonstration protesting their mistreatment rather than by organized boycott. The defendants were charged under an old Alabama law against any conspiracy that interferes with the normal operation of a business. Conviction carries six months in prison and/or $1,000 fine.

The first defense witness, a Negro woman, said she stopped riding the segregated buses because of the way a "nasty" driver treated her. Another, a Pullman porter, said that several years ago a driver forced his pregnant wife to give up her seat to a white person.

But the most dramatic testimony came from Mrs. Perkins, the sixth to testify along the same line.

She said she stopped riding the buses Dec. 5, the day the boycott is alleged to have started, but she did not give a specific reason until Judge Carter pressed her. Then she said "because we were all mistreated" on the buses.

"Who is 'we all'?" the judge asked.

"All of us 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery," the woman replied.

The state rested after two and one-half days of testimony designed to show that the Negroes formed an organization, collected funds and set up motor pools to compete with the public transit system and wreck it economically. Normally the busloads here are 60 to 70 per cent Negro.

Date Set For Ala. Bus Case

Daily Worker Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. - (ANP) - A May 11 hearing has been set on a federal suit attacking the constitutionality of local and state laws requiring segregation of races on buses.

Wed. 4-11-56

Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr. informed attorneys last week that evidence in the case will be heard by a three-judge court.

The suit, filed by four Negro women on Feb. 1, charges that current city and state laws requiring racial segregation on public transportation violated rights guaranteed them under the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

Defendants named by the women include members of the Montgomery City Commission, the Alabama Public Service Commission, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, Montgomery City Lines Inc., and two bus drivers.

The federal suit is the second filed by Negroes in the South in an attempt to knock down existing transportation segregation laws. A similar suit against the South Carolina Electric and Gas Company, which operates city buses in Columbia and Charleston, is pending in the U. S. Supreme Court.

No Franchise If Integrated, Carrier Told

Phila. 4-26-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 25 (AP)—Montgomery City Lines faced the threat of court action to revoke its franchise today unless it backs away from its newly announced policy of racial integration.

The City Commission, whose three members all belong to the White Citizens' Council, declared that the bus company will have to abide by city and state segregation laws if it continues to do business here.

RACES APART

Meanwhile, there was still no report of race mixing on the buses despite the company's integration order. Most Negroes still were boycotting the bus line as they have for five months, and those who did ride took seats in the rear.

Hinting at a court suit to break the recently renewed 10-year bus franchise, Mayor W. A. Gayle said the contract can be canceled "if one party breaks the law."

COURT CASE

But it would take court action, the mayor said, since the franchise itself says nothing about segregation.

Said Police Commimssioner Clyde Sellers:

"If the bus company operates in Montgomery, it will have to operate under Montgomery and Alabama laws."

The commission contends city and state segregation statutes are still valid despite a federal court ruling in South Carolina and the Supreme Court's decision backing the federal court.

A spokesman for National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago, which owns the company here, said this morning that his company doesn't plan to change its orders for integration in Montgomery and other Southern cities where its buses operate.

The company operates bus lines in Mobile, Ala.; Jackson Miss.; Tampa, Fla.; Tulsa, Okla.; and Beaumont, Wichita Falls, and El Paso, Texas.

Officials at Tampa and Jackson said segregation would be continued on buses operating in those cities despite the company statement in Chicago.

Constitution

The Montgomery statement was made at a news conference before it was disclosed later in the day that government attorneys in Washington are divided in their opinion of the meaning of the Supreme Court's ruling Monday.

They said the court might have ruled all bus segregation invalid, the first interpretation given to the decision, or that it may have merely dismissed an appeal on the grounds that the case hadn't been finally determined in the lower courts.

Phila. 4-26-56

The Virginia Transit Co. announced it would discontinue segregation on its lines in Richmond and Norfolk today and said the Portsmouth, Va., Transit Co. also would adopt the new policy.

A few Virginia Transit Co. bus drivers permitted mixing of the races Tuesday. No incidents were reported.

In North Carolina, the Duke Power Co. said it was complying with the Supreme Court decision but did not expect any great change in its bus operations at Durham and Greensboro.

Several Louisiana and Mississippi officials said segregation on buses would be continued despite the Supreme Court ruling.

But in Florida, J. B. Osteen, traffic manager of Florida Greyhound Lines, said his company would obey the new court order as soon as interpretation and procedure have been worked out. A Florida Trailways Bus System spokesman said, however, that his company would operate under Florida law which calls for segregation on buses within the state.

Would Start Bus Line of Their Own, But Permission Denied Leaders In Montgomery

Tue. 4-6-56
Kansas City, Mo.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — Leaders of the Negro bus boycott in Montgomery have been denied permission to establish and operate an all-Negro bus company.

The city commissioners turned down the request on the grounds that the present Montgomery city lines "provided excellent bus service for the entire city."

They also stated that the city could not afford to support two bus lines.

The Negro leaders also discussed with the commissioners a proposal for a first-come, first-seated arrangement for Negroes on city buses and the hiring of Negro drivers on routes where most customers are Negroes.

Mayor W. A. Gayle advised the leaders to take up the issues of seating arrangements and Negro drivers with the bus company.

TO DRIVERS

Earlier Wednesday, Franklin pledged to back any driver who is arrested for violating segregation laws.

The parent firm ordered all its Southern companies to desegregate Monday after a U. S. Supreme Court decision which declared Jim Crow laws on all public transportation unconstitutional.

Montgomery Bus Mgr. Suffers Heart Attack

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga

BY PAUL BURTON

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — The Manager of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., operators of the boycotted buses, suffered what was described as a "severe heart attack" Tuesday night, it was disclosed.

J. H. Bagley, 58-year-old native of Montgomery, was stricken after weeks of severe pressure caused by the four and a half month old boycott.

Phila. 4-26-56

The attack, suffered late Tuesday night immediately after a conference with an executive of the parent firm of the Montgomery Bus Line, was not disclosed until Wednesday.

Bagley's duaghter, Mrs. Margaret Tillery, said his doctor predicted recovery. Babley was still in an oxygen tent in Jackson Hospital in Montgomery.

Mrs. Tillery said she was "positive" the pressure of the boycott caused the attack.

"He's been under pressure from all sides," she said. "He's been trying to satisfy the city, the state, the Negroes and the National City Lines (parent organization) of Chicago." She added, "He's been working night and day trying to find a solution to this thing."

Bagley suffered the attack immediately after the conference with B. W. Franklin, vice president of the parent firm, who came to Montgomery Tuesday night to try to settle the boycott.

Housewives At Montgomery Threatened By Phone

Wed. 10-17-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 16. —(AP)—T campaign of harrassment by anonymous phone calls and letters is being conducted against white housewives who drive their Negro maids to and from work, the Montgomery Advertiser said Tuesday night.

Negroes in Montgomery have been refusing to ride segregated city buses since last December. Bus boycott leaders operate a car pool that provides transportation for many of the Negroes.

Memphis, Tenn.

The Advertiser said male callers have threatened physical violence and used profanity in talking with housewives.

Most of the calls, received after midnight, were reported to have consisted of the single sentence:

"Isn't it about time you went to get your nigger maid?"

Letters reported received in several sections of South Montgomery last week end, about the time the calls began, said in full:

"Dear friend: Listed below are a few of the white people who are still hauling their Negro maids. This must be stopped. These people would appreciate a call from you, day or night. Let's let them know how we feel about them hauling Negroes."

A number of prominent Montgomery residents were listed.

Montgomery Negroes Firm as They Await Verdict on Segregation Appeal

Sun. 10-14-56

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Oct. 13 —After ten months, the Negro boycott of Montgomery City buses continues without let-up or official effort to end it.

New York

No further action, by either the boycott leaders, the City

Commission or the bus company, is expected until the United States Supreme Court acts on an appeal from a special panel of three Federal judges. They ruled in June that city and state transportation laws requiring segregation were unconstitutional.

The action was brought by several Montgomery Negroes after the boycott reached a stalemate. The ruling was appealed to the Supreme Court by attorneys for the Montgomery City Commission and the state. At the time of the decision, the City Commission issued the following statement, which is presumably still the official attitude:

"There is no doubt that an end of segregated seating arrangements on public conveyances in the city of Montgomery will effect a drastic change in the habits of the people.

"This change, which would alter customs which have been in existence since before the city was founded, would have an obviously severe impact upon its citizens. The commission is of the opinion that every step possible should be taken to prevent such change * * *."

Commissioners Join Council

All three City Commissioners —including Mayor W. A. Gayle —joined the Montgomery White Citizens Council soon after the boycott began. All are avowed proponents of continued segregation in all phases of community life.

The boycott began Dec. 5 after the arrest and conviction of a Negro seamstress, Mrs. Rosa Parks, for refusing to give up her seat and move to the rear of a city bus to make room for whites.

The Montgomery Improvement Association was formed by local Negroes, with the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. as spokesman. The boycott began that same day and has continued unabated since.

By the bus company's own estimate, some 95 per cent of the former Negro commuters have refuse dto ride buses. Before the boycott began, Negroes comprised about 70 per cent of the company's passengers.

In February, Dr. King and about ninety other Negroes, mostly ministers, were arrested for violation of a 1921 anti-boycott law. The indictments were aimed principally at the operation of a car pool that was organized soon after the boycott began.

Dr. King Convicted

In March, Dr. King, the first to be tried, was convicted and fined $500 plus $500 in costs. He appealed and the trials of the other defendants were continued, at the request of the prosecutor, pending the outcome of the case, which is still before the Alabama Court of Appeals.

Dr. King has been free on bond since, still serving actively as the boycott leader.

With local and out-of-state contributions, churches participating in the boycott bought a number of new station wagons—fourteen at last count—plus several older models that have been assigned to the car pool.

In addition to these, about two hundred privately owned automobiles are still in use in the car pool.

For the most part, the boycott has been without violence, though tensions and ill-will have resulted. Small charges of dynamite were set off at the homes of Dr. King and two other boycott leaders.

Birmingham Cops Defy U. S. Law

Enforce Railroad Station Jim Crow

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sept. 1-22-56

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—This city, through stern police methods and rigid enforcement of its jim-crow laws, is defying the ICC desegregation order.

Interstate travelers enjoy integrated facilities at the Terminal Station, and other similar spots, no longer than they can be advised of and escorted to separate waiting rooms.

According to Assistant Police Chief J. C. Lance, four out-of-towners among a delegation of some 104 en route through the city to their homes after attending the National Baptist Convention, Inc., in Denver, Col., somehow were found in the waiting room "reserved for white only" at Birmingham's Train Terminal Station around 6:50 A. M., Tuesday, Sept. 11.

DET. LIEUT. J. R. Davis said a Rev. Mr. Hall, from Montgomery, Ala.; his father, also a minister from Atlanta, Ga., and two other persons were the four who were asked to leave the "Reserved for White" room.

Police said that the four were not threatened in any way but were told that they would be placed under arrest on suspicion of "disorderly conduct" if they refused to leave.

By that time, the train arrived and the four boarded it for home without further incident.

Upon arriving at the station, for a brief lay-over, the other 100 persons immediately headed to the "colored waiting room," police said.

Other policemen on the scene were Sgt. M. E. Giles and Patrolmen A. B. Swindall, J. W. Allbritten, D. W. Hill and J. W. Pace.

It Will Take More Than A Court Ruling To Solve Montgomery's Problems

Courier-Journal

AN immediate aftermath of Supreme Court ruling against segregation in all public transportation pointed to two things in connection with the Negro boycott of buses in Montgomery, Ala., and a slightly less-immediate aftermath raised some questions.

Hardly had the news of the Supreme Court action broken on Monday when Montgomery City Lines, Inc., operating the Montgomery buses, announced it was abandoning segregation of Negro and white passengers on its buses.

This quick action indicates one thing clearly and another which apparently can be fairly inferred:

1. The bus boycott, now nearly five months old, has been giving the bus-line company fits in the pocketbook.

2. National City Lines, Inc., which is operated out of Chicago, and which is not essentially Southern-owned or Southern oriented, owns the Montgomery company. The inference, on the basis of Monday's quick action in scrapping segregation, seems to be that National City Lines was looking for some way to get off the hook without flying in the face of Southern laws—and found it in the Supreme Court ruling.

It isn't conjecture that the Montgomery City Lines had been hurting, and hurting severely, as a result of the boycott. Officials of the company—stoutly maintaining that they planned to continue segregation—told me in Montgomery early in March that the firm's income had declined at a rate of some $400,000 a year.

By SAM ADKINS,
Courier-Journal Staff Writer

And this in spite of the fact that bus fares had been increased 50 per cent—from 10 to 15 cents.

Non-Southern stockholders, it seems fair to say, might not be overjoyed at the prospect of continuing to see revenues dwindle for the sake of keeping Southern segregationists happy.

Hard To Believe

However, I find it difficult to believe National City Lines thought its notice that segregation was to end Tuesday morning would mean segregation actually would end then.

J. H. Bagley, manager of the Montgomery bus lines, is a Southerner. So are his aides. And they know about as well as anybody the depth and bitterness of the feeling among the white majority in Montgomery against integration of the races—on buses or anywhere else.

It was no surprise that Montgomery Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers threatened to have police arrest any person who mingled with the other race on a bus, or any driver who failed to enforce segregation. Not only Sellers, but the Mayor and all members of the City Commission of Montgomery are members of the (White) Citizens Councils movement, which has as its primary goal retention of racial segregation.

Meanwhile, the Montgomery Negroes have pending a suit attacking constitutionality of Montgomery and Alabama segregation laws, with a hearing scheduled in federal court on May 11.

Assuming the federal court will hold that the Supreme Court ruling invalidates any law which calls for segregation in public transportation—will that mean an end of the Montgomery boycott and other racial problems?

What About Minister?

And what about the Rev. M. L. King, Negro minister and boycott leader who was one of 90 indicted under an old and little-used State antiboycott law? Mr. King is the only one of the 90 tried so far. He was fined $500, and has appealed the verdict. How would invalidation of State segregation laws affect him and the rest of the 90?

About whether such a ruling would end racial troubles in connection with Montgomery's buses—who can tell? The bus company obviously is willing to end segregation now. But the City Administration is dead set against ending it. The question, then, seems to be: would the City officials dare possible contempt-of-court proceedings by ignoring any court decision and by police power continue to enforce segregation? Only they can supply the answer—if such an answer ever is required.

Having seen it in operation and talked with many of its participants, I don't believe the boycott will end until the Negroes are certain that integration is the policy of the City, as well as of the bus company.

It has been said the Negroes also are holding out for a demand that Negro bus drivers be hired for certain lines. I don't believe that is a hard-and-fast demand, rather, that it was inserted as something of a bargaining point.

About Mr. King and the others indicted under the antiboycott law:

The constitutionality of that law has been challenged; and actually a part of the original law has been declared unconstitutional. Nevertheless, it is not per se a segregation law. If the State law is ruled sound (and it may take an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court to get a final decision), it may be that setting aside the segregation laws would have no bearing upon the indictments.

The greatest danger in Montgomery, I believe, lies in the feelings, the temper, of the people of both races. It is going to take great wisdom and restraint on both sides to prevent trouble, no matter what the courts rule. Whether that wisdom and restraint will be forthcoming remains to be seen.

Voice Of The People

Give Honor Where Honor Is Deserved

The King Cole incident at the City Auditorium brings out a few facts which cannot, should not and must not be ignored by white Alabama citizens. Negroes are one section of "we the people" with the same rights, duties and responsibilities to our nation, state and community as any white citizen. A Negro with an outstanding talent in any worthwhile direction should be appreciated, admired and complimented by white as well as Negro citizens. Negro youths as well as white youths should have a common objective—the welfare of our U. S. A.

Playing down and ignoring superior qualities of a Negro is neither Americanism nor Christianity. Realistically it is not good sense. Wise parents do not praise some of their children while at the same time mortifying with criticism one or more of their other children. Why treat Negro children with less respect than white children?

W. G. KITTS,
1216 Woodland Avenue.

Why Not Blame Sponsors Of Cole?

You would think from the letters in this column condemning the men in the Cole incident that he was president of the U. S.

While I do not approve of violence, neither do I like unfairness and I do not think it fair to blame these men altogether and start calling them hoodlums without hearing their side of the story. From what I hear of them they are ordinary hard-working men.

After all they are for segregation and that is what we want in the South above everything else.

The racial situation being so tense why not blame whoever sponsored Cole's appearance there?

There are people who would like to discredit the Citizen's Council. If the people do not stand together and do something we will lose the fight for segregation as it is evident our newspapers and men in public office are not going to help.

It is too bad we do not have some men in office like our sister states of Mississippi and Georgia.

Since when is it wrong to be proud of your race, any more than your country? There is nothing more disgusting than to see anyone turn against his race and kind and for anyone born and bred in the South to turn against the Southern way of life is the same as turning against your country.

Bucks For Buses

Editor, The Advertiser:

I wish to compliment you on the interview as published in U.S. News & World Report.

Enclosed you will find a dollar bill. Please pass this on to the Montgomery City Bus Lines. I am starting a crusade in Georgia and South Carolina, the territory that I travel. The crusade is to be "Bucks For Bus Lines And The Protection Of The White Race." I intend to send them a buck each week to try to "whip" or at least help out on the situation over there.

If enough people in the South could hear of my plan, I'm sure the Bucks will pour in so fast that your colored preachers there will be forced to "call the dogs." When a Negro realizes that he can't hurt them any more, he will be glad to start riding.

More power to you good people in Montgomery and please get the news of this movement on the wires.

Father Divine Is Watching Montgomery

FOR the last several weeks we have been monitoring the foreign press to see what is said under Montgomery and Tuscaloosa datelines. It was thus that we came across a couple of copies of New Day, the weekly tabloid voice of Father Divine, published in Philadelphia.

Pg. 1 of the first copy is devoted entirely to a scare head, in black type two inches high, proclaiming: I HAVE COME TO RENDER JUSTICE & Lift Up the Fallen—FATHER DIVINE. Pg. 1 on the other contends that "Division Among the People Causes Cosmic Forces of Nature to Be Destructive in Tornadoes, Floods, Volcanoes, etc."

Half of the back page of the first is devoted to a lib-lab account of the Montgomery bus boycott, reprinted from The New York Post. Father Divine apparently forbids the use of the words "Negro" and "white" in his paper as if they are obscenities. When identification by race is necessary, "N——" or "W——" is used, with an s after the dash if plurality is to be noted.

DULY edified by the news from Montgomery, we turned to the masthead inside to see what the official policy of the publication is and were informed: "A righteous nation under Father Divine is rising, electrifying the atmosphere . . . Americanism is our religion and we live it each day of the week! This great baptism of Americanism in deeds and actions we preach . . . Father Divine's True Followers do not accept tips or gifts . . ."

THIS seemed forthright enough to warrant further reading, so we turned to a two-page attack by Father Divine on one of the world's largest insurance companies. We gather an agent of the company had offended the Father in some obscure racial way. Whereupon, in an open letter to the president, Father Divine starts out by reminding the insurance executive that if Hitler had "taken cognizance of my message to him," World War II would have been avoided.

Similarly, such disasters as the Winecoff Hotel Fire in Atlanta in 1946, the Gulf Hotel fire in Houston three years before, and the Cocoanut Grove night club fire in Boston the year before that —all were examples of the "iniquities of the parents which are visited upon them and their children for acts of prejudice, bigotry, segregation and intolerance." Prior to most of these happenings, Father Divine had warned the principals involved that disaster impended unless they mend their ways.

Help Conditions at Home

Eagle June 4-5-56

We are all gravely concerned about the bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala. And rightly so, for what concerns Negroes in Alabama will in some way have bearing on the lives of Negroes elsewhere in the United States. P.4.

We have expressed many interests about economic pressures and infringement of suffrage directed toward Negroes in Mississippi and Georgia. In a like manner, this is no more than right. As Negroes, members of a minority group in America, we should take more than just a casual interest in the problems facing our brethren in various sections of the country, in this case the Old South.

As a matter of fact, the abuses against people of color the world over have their effects on us one way or another. Every time a Negro makes a step forward the race as a whole is benefited. By the same token, backward steps in some instances not only hurt the individual but the entire group.

Negroes in Tulsa and throughout Oklahoma have had the right to vote for some 40 years. This right, granted by the Constitution, is more than just a privilege. It is a responsibility of any citizen in a Democratic form of government, regardless of color. However, in the case of the Negro it should have special significance.

In Tulsa, as in every other community in our "land of the free," the white man "has arrived" as the expression goes. But the Negro, even in the so-called liberal states, still has mountains to climb and rivers to cross. These "mountains" and "rivers" are mainly concentrated in the areas of employment, education, housing, use of public recreational facilities, and transportation.

Negroes in Tulsa, like the Negroes in Montgomery, need to learn the value of strength in numbers. This strength in our particular case can and should be exercised at the polls. When the leaders of the majority race, especially those in politics, see that Negroes in Tulsa are exercising their right to vote, they will become more inclined to act in bhalf of the Negro. Instead of making pre-election promises that fade after the election, they will be forced to stand by their word on many issues. This has proved to be true in many cities where Negroes have decided to take a stand and get out the vote. Local elections are just as important as the National elections. And in view of the ways in which local governments often ignore national laws, local elections might be considerd more important as directly concerned with the individual. In other words, local officials are called upon to handle immediately situations involving the rights of citizens to include the interpretation of laws.

Since the roles performed by these local leaders concern the Negro as much as any other citizen, the Negro should have a voice in putting those persons in office. The voice is exercised at the ballot boxes.

Through organized and intelligent voting Negroes in Tulsa can be heard. Improvements can be soon realized in many areas. The level of economy among Negroes, where the masses are concerned, is comparatively low for a city the size of Tulsa. But when the city's officials are made aware that the Negro's vote is an important one when multiplied, they will be more prone to advocate fair and equal employment—starting in the city hall.

Organizations like the Tulsa Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Greenwood Chamber of Commerce, and the North Tulsa Ministerial alliance among many others can take the lead in such a program. Again we say, in unity there is strength.

Bus Boycott Continues as Montgomery, Ala. Local Officials Defy Supreme Court Edict

State Press Little Rock, Ark.

Negroes in Montgomery, Alabama, voted unanimously to continue the five-month old boycott of city buses, Thursday nite despite the company's order to end segregation.

The Negroes vowed to refrain from riding city buses as long as city and state officials persist in their determination to enforce segregation laws. Nearly 5,000 Negroes attended the meeting, which was held at the Day Street Baptist church.

The resolution to continue the boycott was presented by Rev. M. L. King, jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement association.

The company operating the city buses has announced an end to segregation as far as its policy goes, and has instructed bus drivers to refrain from enforcing it.

The resolution presented to the group stated that:

City and state officials have indicated both orally and in writing that they intend to, and will use, all means available, including the arrest of bus drivers and passengers, to enforce segregation laws.

Since the officials have taken upon themselves to defy the Supreme Court edict, the Negroes have accepted the situation as unchanged, and therefore the boycott is still on.

The boycotters had originally asked for employment of Negro drivers on predominantly Negro routes, and better seating arrangement on the then segregated buses when the boycott started, December 5, 1955. But the Rev. Mr. King, said that the integration order satisfied that demand.

to continue the boycott because of the attitude taken by city and state officials.

A summary of the situation reveals that in the border states bus desegregation—like that of the schools — will come about with some immediacy, but that in the die-hard states of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, stiff resistance will be encountered.

THE NON - DIXIECRAT states are moving quickly to comply with the mandate of the highest court of the land.

Jim crow on city busses died quietly in Virginia Wednesday.

The policy of segregating the races on intra-city buses had been languishing for the past two years.

The death blow was struck Tuesday afternoon when Warren R. Pollard, president of the Virginia Transit Co., Richmond, announced that his operators were being instructed not to enforce segregation.

PUBLIC SCHOOL pricipals called special assemblies Wednesday to warn pupils against demonstrations on the buses.

Bus drivers in Richmond and Norfolk said they had not enforced the segregation law on their vehicles in recent years, except on the complaint of a passenger.

A tobacco worker, waiting for a bus at a Church Hill intersection told this reporter:

"We dont' especially want to sit in the front of the bus, we just didn't like being forced to sit in the rear."

With these words he climbed aboard the bus and took a seat about midway of the vehicle.

"OUR FIGHT here is not a fight with bitterness and hatred. It is one for right and freedom and truth. Somehow, I believe that no matter how difficult it seems now and then, in the end the truth, righteousness and freedom always win."

IN NORTH CAROLINA, the Duke Power Company immediately announced the desegregation of its lines in Durham and Greensboro. A spokesman said no reaction or opposition was expressed by city officials at either place.

San Antonio, Texas, became the first major southern city to be completely desegregated when city buses were added to the things where segregation could not longer be practiced.

All other public facilities, including schools were already integrated.

Little opposition was offered to integration in El Paso, Wichita Falls and Tulsa, but in some border states, cities were "dragging their feet" in complying with the mandate of the Supreme Court.

IN LITTLE ROCK, Ark., for example, David Durbin, vice president of Citizens Coach Co., said transit company attorneys would not advise a company policy until the decision had been studied.

Frank Smith, state executive secretary of the NAACP, retorted that the association would seek an immediate end of segregation of the buses there. He said the first step would be a request, but declined to say what further steps are planned.

In Birmingham, Ala., too, the bus segregation situation is "being studied", according to city commissioners, Birmingham ordinances requre racial segregation on city buses, it was pointed out.

"Sit Anywhere" Bus Riders Are Told

Afro-American 12-1-56

From AFRO Correspondents

Bowing immediately to the mandate of the U.S. Supreme Court, bus companies in almost a score of southern cities desegregated their intrastate buses this week.

Among those cities are Dallas Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio, El Paso and Beaumont Texas; Richmond, Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va.; Tulsa, Okla.; Louisville, Ky., Witchita Falls, Kan; Knoxville, Tenn.; and Durham and Greensboro, N.C.

Although integration has been ordered by officials of bus lines it operates in eight southern cities, the National City Lines, with headquarters in Chicago, has met with resistance of city officials in Montgomery, Ala., and other Deep South states, to changes in racial seating policy.

THE ALABAMA Public Service Commission ordered National City Lines to withdraw its integration order affecting Montgomery or "suffer the consequences."

City and police officers threatened to arrest busline officers and employees or even passengers who try to enforce integration. Sticking to its guns, however, a company spokesman, B W Franklin, promised to lend support to any driver arrested for permitting racial integration on a bus in Montgomery.

There, the bus protest movement entered its 21st week when a mass meeting, led by the Rev. Martin L. King, voted to authorize the Montgomery Improvement Association

South Carolina transit firm as being "frivolous and without cause," the order ended jim crow on busses in Richmond, Norfolk andd Portsmiddle sections.

On Wednesday morning — the first day of the no segregation policy — bus drivers wheeled their vehicles from the terminal slightly apprehensive.

But Virginians of both races took the transition in stride. Almost without exception white passengers—conditioned by custom—took seats in the front of the buses. Colored passengers sat in the rear or middle sections.

Reporters making spot checks of the buses were hardpressed to find incidents worth reporting. On one Broad St. bus a white and colored tinsville, Danville and Petersburg, said they would maintain segregated seating, at least for the immediate future.

It is expected that these companies will abandon the segregated seating policy as soon as opinions are rendered by their attorneys.

Bus segregation has also been ended in Charlottesville, Roanoke and Lynchburg.

WILLIAM M. CAGE, manager of Fredericksburg's Colonial Transit Co., said "no problem exists." He said the company had not enforced segregation in the past.

A jewelry store messenger who makes a living riding the buses (to deliver small packages) told the AFRO:

"Today was no different from

POLICE COMMISSIONER Charles F. Hackmeyer of Mobile said Tuesday that segregation of bus passengers will be continued despite a decision of the company operating the city buses to desegregate. Mayor Joseph N. Langan said, however, he felt the city ordinance ordering segregation on buses was invalidated by the Supreme Court's Monday ruling.

"I don't see there is anything the Mobile city government can do about it." Langan said. He proposed that bus segregation be continued on a voluntary basis.

LESS RECONCILED to the inevitable, however, is Georgia's Gov. Marvin Griffin, who pledged himself to resist the bus desegregation ruling at all odds. He called it "another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people."

The most adamant of the cities resisting the Supreme Court ruling are Montgomery, Ala., where the bus protest movement is underway, and Jackson, Miss., where a White Citizens Council is firmly entrenched.

Mayor A. C. Gayle hinted at a court suit against the National City Bus Line to break its recently renewed 10-year franchise if the company did not rescind its desegregation order.

Said Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers "If the bus Co. operates in Montgomery, it will have to to operate under Montgomery and Alabama laws."

HORACE CORT, a white photographer for the Associated Press, reported that a white bus driver threatened to kill him if he took a picture of some of the few colored persons who boarded a bus, Wednesday.

In Jackson, Miss., the White Citizens Council, Wednesday commended Mayor Allen Thompson for his stand the previous day against the Supreme Court decision outlawing bus discrimination.

The mayor had declared that he "saw no reason whatsoever for any change in our policy of segregation on buses..."

Mayor Gayle also said any contributions would be welcomed to help city buses out of a financial problem brought on by the boycott.

MONTGOMERY BUS LINES TOLD TO CONTINUE BUS SEGREGATION

Thurs. 5-10-56

A state court judge in Montgomery, Ala. yesterday ordered Montgomery City bus lines to continue segregation, but the Nashville, Tennessee Transit Company at the same time was accepting Negroes as bus drivers.

For first time, the Nashville Transit Company accepted applications from Negroes for jobs as bus drivers. The firm says qualifications are the same as for whites. Driver applicants must be at least 25 years old; have no police record; be a high school graduate, have top credit rating. The plan was announced after meeting bus line officials and representatives of Citizens Rights Committee. Committee member, Rev. L. Evans, says similar plans are set for discussion today with Chattanooga bus officials. Rev. Evans is pastor of a Negro church.

Meanwhile, in Montgomery a state court judge ordered the Montgomery City Lines to comply with Alabama State laws requiring segregation in buses.

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones granting the request of city officials held all city and state segregation laws still remain in force. He ordered the subsidiary of National City Lines, of Chicago, to "comply with and abide by all the provisions" of the local laws.

The company announced an end to its policy of enforcing segregation laws after a recet Supreme Court decision was interpreted as outlawing intra-state bus seating segregation. Judge Jones said a subsequent interpretation of the court's action held it to be merely sending a case back to a lower court for further proceedings. Jones declared:

"There is no straight-out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a city or state may not require the separation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

The bus company's desegregation action was ineffectual. Montgomery Negroes continued to boycott the buses, as they have since a Negro woman was arrested in December for refusing to move to a rear seat.

Montgomery Officials

Order To Force Bus Bias Sought

Wed. 5-2-56 Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — City officials at Montgomery Tuesday sought an order from a state court to force the local transit system to abandon its announced policy of operating non-searegated buses.

Mayor William A. Gayle and two other city commissioners asked the court to issue an injunction, the effect of which would be to force National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago and its Montgomery subsidiary to maintain segregation on its vehicles in compliance with state law.

The bus line announced last week it would no longer enforce segregation, which the U. S. Supreme Court held was unconstitutional. There has been no actual integration, however, since city officials threatened arrest of any persons violating the strict state laws.

PUBLIC NUISANCE

The city's court complaint charges that the bus company's desegregation order is "a public nuisance injurious to the public health, morals, comfort, welfare and peace of the community." The action in announcing an end to segregation, the city official said, "creates tension .(and)... is in violation of an established social pattern."

NO DATE

The state court set no date for a hearing on the city's petition. Officials of National City Lines withheld comment.

Most of the city's 35,000 Negroes, meanwhile, continued their boycott of city buses which began Dec. 5 when a Negro woman was arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus. Leaders voiced intentions to continue the boycott as long as "jim crow" buses are operated in Montgomery.

A suit attacking the state's segregation law is scheduled for hearing in Federal Court in Montgomery May 11.

The Montgomery Bus Situation

Informer Sep, Houston, Tex.

By LENORA ROLLA

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The trouble here in Montgomery did not just start, it stems from the beginning of the war, when whites could not get rubber and gas for their cars and had to use buses extensively. It was then that Negroes were asked to give up their seats to whites, even though they were sitting back of the door, which was normally the point that marked the seats in the back off from those for whites. There was supposed to be in front of the door a certain number of undesignated seats, but the whites never observed these during the war years. Negroes sitting behind the door were often asked to move.

PROTESTS, ARRESTS, ABUSE

On one occasion in 1942, a young lady was asked to move, and instead of moving requested that she be given her money back and said she would get off the bus. A white carpenter on the bus was so angry that he threatened to saw her head off. Lawyers consulted told her she could sue but they did not advise her to, although she had been arrested and fined. Friends went to see the president of the company ... he cited like instances involving whites, which Negroes did not believe.

Also during the war Negroes were compelled to get on the front and pay the bus driver, then get off and go back and go in the side door. As was to be expected, sooner or later a Negro was left while walking from the front to the back door. When he went down to protest he was abused and the claim was that Negroes had started the custom of walking back.

In another instance, when a Negro was ordered to get off the bus and go to the back, he asked for his money back but was refused.

As an interlude, in 1944 when 35.6 per cent of the arrests in Montgomery were of Negroes, the Negroes decided to conduct among themselves a Good Conduct Campaign. After two years, only 29.8 per cent of the arrests were Negroes. The difference was so noticeable that they were asked not to give publicity to it.

Later the Federated Club of Women protested to the company against bus fare raises, and pointed out that 75% of the fares on the buses were Negroes. So it can be seen that Negroes have always been the main part of the bus company's business. But Negroes' blood really reached the boiling point over the fact that when the bus got into the Negro area, and there were vacant seats, undesignated from the door frontward, the bus drivers still would not let Negroes sit down in them.

There were about 10 seats back of the door which were for Negoes, and about 16 seats front, which in fact were always for whites whether they sat in them or not.

THE LAST STRAW

In March 1955 Claudette Colvin, a high school girl, was seated in an undesignated seat, which means just in front of the door. There were four other kids in that area, and the conductor ordered them to move. Three of them moved, Claudette refused to move. She was handcuffed and carried to the jail. A committee of nine citizens, consisting of Negroes, white ministers and the bus attorneys were appointed to recommend some rules that could be published so the people would know just what was what on the buses. No publicity was to be given.

Sept 16-30-56

The bus driver, who was responsible for the high school girl's arrest, admitted he was wrong and refused to go to the hearing, saying he was not going up there and let those intelligent Negroes make a fool of him. Nothing came of the committee so far as publicizing the rules was concerned.

On October 20, 1955, Mary Louise Smith, 16, was arrested for refusing to heed the bus driver's order to get up. This arrest was kept secret and Negroes did not know about it until a white man, who had seen the incident, told a disc jockey who she was and gave her name and address and offered to testify.

Then on December 1, or thereabouts, Mrs Rosa Parks, sitting in the last fluid seat, or what is called the undesignated seats just before the door, was told by the bus driver to give up her seat and move back. She refused and was arrested, as all of the readers have learned by this time.

HOW BOYCOTT BEGAN

As a matter of fact, only a one-day protest was planned over Mrs Parks' arrest. She was not abused, and she was advised by her friends to go to court.

Now as to the boycott, the plan was to get out about a couple of thousand hand bills, notifying the people of the boycott. While this was being done, some nosy white reporters got in the wind of it, and they gave full cry in the daily papers and over the radio. Thus the Negroes, who would not have known about the boycott, or would not have thought about it, got it dramatically by these eager beavers.

Then the next thing was that orders went out for the police to follow the buses and keep down disturbances. Negro leaders now say freely that a number of the ordinary Negroes believed that the police meant to arrest them on the buses, so they did not go out to get on the buses. This was another assist by the authorities of Montgomery in arousing the Negroes and in welding them together on staying off the buses.

The first mass meeting was reported to have been at the Holt Street Baptist church of which Rev A S Wilson was pastor. An interesting thing is that the whites have been investigating from the date of that first mass meeting, as to who made arrangements for the church, and they have not found out yet.

The boycott was 98 per cent effective the first day. The Negro leadership was caught fast asleep. The boycott of the masses of people marched on off and the leaders had to scurry to catch it.

The church will hold aboout 800, and there were between 5000 and 8000 trying to get into the church. Neither the leaders, the whites downtown, or anybody else had ever seen anything like it. Like the wave of excitement that runs through a group of ants when somebody hits the bed, somehow there was a communion of interest among all the Negroes in Montgomery that gripped, inspired and held them together.

PLANS WORKED OUT

As the leaders began to catch up, they worked out orderly plans of procedure. Rev Martin Luther King was not the normal leader. Circumstances and his innate ability finally projected him to the front.

In the first place, his home was bombed. When the people came surging to his place in angry protest, Rev King quietly met them and told them, "We do not hate anybody, and we aren't going to offer any violence toward anybody, we are going to pray for all the people." It was on the anvil of those words that the will to boycott without violence was formed. Because it was evident that Rev King had full control of himself, and was willing to walk in the path of the Master, the people instinctively trusted him.

There were volunteers a-plenty with cars, and it only became necessary for the leadership to catch up and to get on top of the problems with plans and with organizational schemes. Organizational stations were set up, 50 dispatchers were selected. Better than 300 cars all told were organized in this pickup service, and the cars were all insured, drivers were secured and organized and assigned. Some of the pickup stations were in the white neighborhoods.

As quiet as it's kept, great assistance was given to the boycott in those early days by whites, who contributed their cars and their services. Not only did many of the white families bring their servants home and go get them, but they also brought others along, going in the same direction. This became so noticeable and so effective that the City Council protested it, and asked the white housewives and owners to stop it.

Leaders of the boycott wrote a letter to the National City Alliance, owners of the Montgomery buses. The president came down on a Thursday to Montgomery, but Negroes did not know that he was there until Saturday. In the meantime, he had been meeting with the Alabama Citizens Council, with the Alabama Council on Human Relations, with the City Commissioners, and also, of course with his own bus line officials.

Court Asked To Void Race Case Against PSC

Birm., Ala.

Wed. 3-28-56

MONTGOMERY, March 27 (AP) —Atty. Gen. John Patterson filed a motion in U. S. District Court here today to dismiss a pending segregation suit against members of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

The suit challenges constitutionality of the state law and city ordinance in Montgomery requiring separate facilities for white and Negro race in public transportation. It was an outgrowth of the racial boycott still continuing in Montgomery against segregated city buses.

Patterson, as the state's chief legal officer, asked for dismissal of the complaint that the segregation laws should first be tested in state courts instead of before a three-judge federal panel which has been named to hear the pending suit.

The attorney general also contended that the petition filed by four Negro women fails to show that the Public Service Commission has jurisdiction over Montgomery City Lines buses. The bus company here is under the City Commission's jurisdiction.

Originally, five Negro women filed the suit against the bus company and members of the City Commission. An amended complaint later added members of the PSC.

One of the Negroes, Mrs. Jeannetta Reese, withdrew her name, saying she didn't know what she signed when she penned her name to the court suit. Negro Atty. Fred Gray insisted she did.

No date has been set in federal court for a hearing on the complaint.

Montgomery Sticks To Bus Segregation

Washington, D. C.

Wed. 4-25-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24 (AP)—An order to stop segregation on city buses brought angry threats of reprisal today from city and state officials who vowed to keep the races apart as long as possible.

Despite the decision from Montgomery City Lines., Inc., to abandon its policy of separate seating of white and Negro passengers, there were no reports of actual mixed seating on the first day.

A reporter who spot-checked the buses said all the Negro riders he saw were seated in the rear, according to the traditional segregation pattern.

Neither was there any indication that the bus company's action would bring an immediate end of the five-month boycott by Negroes who have refused to patronize the segregated buses since Dec. 5.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., boycott leader convicted of violating Alabama's anti-boycott law, said "there will be no change in our position immediately." He did not elaborate.

Comparatively few Negroes rode the buses today.

City and state officials insisted Alabama's segregation laws are still in effect despite the Supreme Court decision of yesterday.

The ruling applied directly only to South Carolina, and Alabama officials contended segregation laws here will remain intact until a court order is directed specifically at them.

Until the city and state laws are knocked down, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and other city officials and President Jack Owen of the Alabama Public Service Commission declared segregation will be rigidly maintained.

Post-Times Herald

The City Commission, all three of whose members belong to the White Citizens Council, issued a statement saying it "does not consider that the Supreme Court construes Alabama laws or city ordinances by which we are governed." The council is dedicated to preservation of racial segregation.

"We, therefore, expect the bus company and all other persons to abide by all existing laws and ordinances," the statement added.

Sellers said he would order the arrest of any passenger or bus driver who permits or indulges in desegregation.

"As far as I'm concerned, this damn thing (the Supreme Court ruling) applies only to South Carolina," Sellers said. "Until they tell us in this suit filed here that it applies to us, I'm going to enforce all city laws to maintain segregation." A hearing on the anti-segregation suit is slated for May 11.

Owen sent a telegram to President Roy Fitzgerald of National City Lines in Chicago, parent company of Montgomery City Lines, demanding that the integration order be withdrawn.

"This company has no choice but to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court," Vice President B. W. Franklin of National City Lines told the Associated Press. "For that reason we are not going to attempt to enforce segregation."

The company also operates bus lines in Mobile, Ala., Jackson, Miss., Tampa, Fla., Tulsa, Okla., Beaumont, Wichita Falls and El Paso, Tex.

Alabama Bus Hearing Tomorrow

Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Wed. 5-2-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 1 (AP)—Expressing fear of "race riots and violence, city officials have gone into court in an effort to force city buses to comply with segregation laws.

Montgomery City Lines announced a week ago drivers would no longer enforce separate seating arrangements for white and Negro passengers.

There have been no reports of actual integration, however. Most Negroes are still boycotting the buses and those who are riding have stayed in the rear of the buses where they always sat.

A hearing on the city's injunction suit, filed late yesterday, is set for 10 a.m. (CST) Thursday before Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones.

Another complaint challenging constitutionality of city and state bus segregation laws and filed by Negroes is pending in U.S. District Court. It will be heard May 11.

Reprisals Are Threatened If Integration Comes—

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24.—An order to stop segregation on city buses brought angry threats of reprisal Tuesday from city and state officials who vowed to keep the races apart as long as possible.

Memphis, Tenn.

Despite the decision from Montgomery City Lines, Inc., to abandon its policy of separate seating of white and Negro passengers, however, there were no reports of actual integration on the first day.

All Seated In Rear

A reporter who spot-checked the buses said all the Negro riders he saw were seated in the rear.

Neither was there any indication that the bus company's action in refusing to continue enforcing city and state segregation laws would bring an immediate end to the five-month-old boycott by Negroes who have refused to patronize the segregated buses since last Dec. 5.

Rev. Martin Luther King, boycott leader convicted of violating Alabama's Anti-Boycott Law, said, "There will be no change in our position immediately." He didn't elaborate.

The Negro Baptist minister said a mass meeting is scheduled for Thursday night and some action might be taken then.

No More Ride

Comparatively few Negroes rode the buses Tuesday despite the announced end of segregation. R. C. Mills, assistant manager of the Montgomery City Lines, said the number was about the same as the number who continued to use the buses throughout the long boycott.

The bus company previously had estimated that as about five to 15 per cent of the normal Negro passenger load.

City and state officials meanwhile insisted that Alabama's segregation laws are still in effect despite the Supreme Court decision which said all bus segregation is unconstitutional.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said he would order the arrest of any passenger or bus driver "who permits or indulges in desegregation."

Montgomery City Lines is a subsidiary of National City Lines, which also operates at Jackson, Miss., Tampa, Fla., Mobile, Ala., Tulsa, Okla., and Wichita Falls, Beaumont and El Paso, Texas, where segregation has been practiced.

The desegregation order also was handed to Jackson drivers, but Mayor Allen Thompson said: "There will be no change whatsoever."

Montgomery challenges bus riders to integrate

News P.1
Tues. 4-24-56
B'ham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24—(AP)—City and state officials reacted defiantly today to the end of bus segregation in the Cradle of the Confederacy, threatening prosecution.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers in Montgomery said he would order the arrest of any passenger or bus driver involved in race mixing under the newly-announced desegregation of Montgomery City Lines, Inc.

The bus company abandoned segregation in the wake of yesterday's Supreme Court decision holding enforced separation of the races unconstitutional.

PRESIDENT JACK OWEN of the Alabama Public Service Commission demanded that the integration order on the Montgomery buses be withdrawn. He also directed all public carriers in the state to "strictly adhere to all present existing segregation laws in our state or suffer the consequences."

The Supreme Court decision yesterday applied immediately only to South Carolina since only that state was involved in the litigation which brought the ruling.

Owens sent a telegram to President Roy Fitzgerald of National City Lines, Inc., in Chicago, the parent company of Montgomery City Lines. It said "I hereby defy the ruling handed down by the U. S. Supreme Court."

"ALABAMA STATE law requiring segregation of the races on buses still stands," Owens telegram said. "I demand that you withdraw your order approving integration on your buses in Montgomery."

Sellers said he would order the arrest of bus drivers and passengers alike if he found white and Negro patrons sitting together on the buses. He is a member of the White Citizens Council.

"I'll be responsible for any arrests and I'll give the direct orders for those arrests," Sellers declared.

"As far as I'm concerned, this damn thing applies to South Carolina only," the commissioner explained, referring to the Supreme Court decision holding bus segregation unconstitutional. The ruling came on an appeal from South Carolina.

A SIMILAR suit attacking Montgomery and Alabama segregation laws is pending in U. S. District Court here and a hearing is scheduled before a three-judge panel May 11.

"Until they tell us in this suit filed here that it (the Supreme Court decision) applies to us," Sellers said, "I'm going to enforce all city laws to maintain segregation.

"That's the way I feel. I'm a Southern white man and I want to continue to be one."

Bus drivers who permit desegregation on their buses also face prosecution, the official said.

A reporter for The Alabama Journal, cruising the city, said all the Negroes he saw on buses were riding in the rear, the section reserved for them in the past.

News P.8

A spokesman for the bus company, Asst. Manager R. C. Mills, said "everything's working out fine. We don't expect any trouble."

MILLS SAID the company will continue to provide separate school buses for white and Negro children because the routing of the buses to white and Negro schools "automatically segregates them."

The school buses operate in the morning and afternoon on special routes, hauling only school children.

Meanwhile, the future course of the boycott was undetermined, but the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., one of the leaders, expressed hope that the end of segregation would terminate the long protest.

King said the decision will be left to the Montgomery Improvement Assn., an organization formed to support the boycott. The executive board was called to meet this afternoon with a Negro mass meeting perhaps to follow.

THE NEGRO Baptist minister, who was convicted of violating Alabama's Anti-Boycott Law for his part in the bus protest, said he didn't believe news of the end of segregation had spread enough to bring many Negroes back to riding the buses this morning.

The car pool which has provided transportation for Negroes throughout the boycott was still operating this morning.

AN ELDERLY Negro woman, unaware she was taking part in an unprecedented occasion, became the first of her race to ride on an unsegregated bus in Montgomery.

But the unidentified woman moved to the formerly segregated section in the back after boarding the bus in the chill dawn at historic Court Square, where the first buses of the day make the initial stop to take on passengers. She was the only person waiting at the bus stop.

The first buses to roll under the tradition-smashing edict did not begin operating until after 5 a.m. Most of the drivers on the early shift first learned of the company's desegregation order when they reported for work at dawn.

THE ORDER to stop assigning seats according to race put the bus company squarely in the middle between the Supreme Court ruling and a stern warning earlier yesterday from Mayor W. A. Gayle that the company continue to maintain strict racial segregation in its vehicles.

The company's directive bore the name of Manager J. H. Bagley.

Before the desegregation order was posted, Gayle hinted that legal action might be taken if bus officials disregarded state and city laws requiring segregation.

CITY POLICE said they had no orders to make any arrests of drivers or bus company officials.

The bus company's desegregation decision was timed to become effective with the start of operations at 5 a.m. today.

Montgomery has a population of about 120,000. About 50,000 are Negroes.

When the Supreme Court ruling was announced yesterday, Mayor Gayle emphasized there would be "no change" in the City Commission's policy. "We will do everything in our power to maintain segregation on city buses," Gayle said.

"We're going to enforce the state and city ordinances just as we have been doing, and we expect the bus company to continue to abide by these laws."

The boycott has been in rigid effect since Dec. 5 when Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 in police court because she refused to move to the back of a bus.

A MONTGOMERY COUNTY Grand Jury indicted 90 Negro leaders about three months ago for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law. King, the first and only Negro tried thus far, was convicted and has appealed a $500 fine.

THE MASS REFUSAL of Negroes to ride the Montgomery buses has forced the company to raise its rates 50 per cent and drastically curtail operations. It has been estimated that 95 per cent of the Negro customers, who once made up about 75 per cent of the total patronage, have stopped riding buses.

Bus fares were hiked from 10 to 15 cents in a move to offset the loss in revenue caused by the boycott. Officials said the company continued to lose money even with the higher fare, but they never disclosed the figures.

Estimates of the economic loss to the company and to Negroes, as well as to white persons whose businesses were affected, have been placed at hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Early in the boycott, officials of both the Montgomery affiliate and the parent concern issued statements saying the company had no choice but to maintain segregated seating because of the state law.

THE MONTGOMERY CASE marked the first concrete reaction in the South to the Supreme Court decision extending the ban on racial segregation to public transportation within the borders of a state.

Negro leaders rejoiced but there was no immediate indication whether similar action might be taken elsewhere in the South.

Some white Southern leaders termed the decision by the high tribunal still another invasion of states' rights and a new step "in federal dictatorship." A Negro spokesman hailed the ruling as marking an end to the separate but equal doctrine as a legal principle.

One governor and several public officials pledged to do everything legally possible to resist the new decision affecting transportation on city buses and trolleys.

The Supreme Court took only 10 words to dismiss an appeal from a U. S. Court of Appeals decision in Richmond, Va., that segregation on intrastate (within the state) buses violates the Federal Constitution.

THE CASE originated in Columbia, S. C., where Sarah Mae Flemming, a Negro, filed suit for $25,000 damages for alleged violation of her civil rights because a bus driver enforced against her a South Carolina law requiring segregation on intrastate buses.

THE ACTION, coupled with earlier decisions and an Inter

Driver threatens AP photographer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 24—(AP)—An Associated Press photographer was threatened by a bus driver as he attempted to take a picture of a bus operating without racial segregation.

As Photographer Horace Cort of Atlanta pointed his camera toward the bus at a downtown stop, the unidentified driver jumped out with fist drawn back and snarled, "if you take my picture, g—— d—— you, I'll kill you."

state Commerce Commission order last November ordering an end to segregation on interstate trains and buses and in waiting rooms used by interstate travelers, covered all conceivable angles of public transportation.

Robert L. Carter, assistant special counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People who argued the case in the Supreme Court, said in New York that the decision ended the "separate but equal doctrine as a legal principle."

Twelve states have laws prohibiting integration on public transportation within the state. They are Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Florida, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Virginia.

GOV. MARVIN GRIFFIN of Georgia, an outspoken foe of integration, termed yesterday's decision "another example of an overt usurpation of the liberties of the people. . . ."

"We shall oppose this latest decision just as we are resisting the decision in the school segregation case by all possible legal means," he said.

In Louisiana, State Sen. William Rainach, chairman of a joint legislative committee on segregation, said the decision was a new step "in federal dictatorship."

Several Southern attorneys general were attending a regional meeting of the National Assn. of Attorneys General at Old Point Comfort, Va., when the decision was announced in Washington.

ATTYS. GEN. J. LINDSAY Almond Jr. of Virginia, T. C. Callison of South Carolina, in whose state the bus case originated, and John Ben Shepperd of Texas issued a joint statement which said in part:

"We are not surprised at the action of the Supreme Court. . . . in view of the trend of the court's ruling in recent years. It is another unwarranted invasion of state and municipal rights. It simply means now that the states and cities cannot determine the type of vehicles that operate over their streets, the manner of their operation or, that based upon the factors of health, safety and morals, that separation of the races is a proper exercise of the traditional police power of a state."

Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina also termed the decision "a further invasion of states' rights." In Miami, Fla., Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin proposed that a special session of the Florida Legislature be called in June to study the entire field of segregation.

"The court is going entirely too fast and is not being mod-

Montgomery Negroes Will 'Crawl First' Before Giving Up Boycott

Call. Fri. 4-6-56 P. 2 Kansas City, Mo.

By Conrad Clark

BOSTON. — (ANP) — Negroes of Montgomery, Ala., will "crawl first" before giving up their bus boycott, declared Atty. Fred D. Grey on Friday night.

The chief counsel for the indicted leaders of the protest movement was the principal speaker before an audience of 1200 at the Union Methodist church, South End, sponsored by the Sigma Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, the Interdenominational Minister's alliance of Greater Boston and other civic organizations.

Grey said that the sentiment of the Negroes in Montgomery could be summed up by what an aged woman told him:

"I'll walk and walk and walk, until I drop. And then I'll crawl."

Grey spoke in place of the Rev. Martin Luther King, his client, a Boston-educated leader of the bus boycott who was convicted last Thursday of violating an old Alabama law of conspiracy to boycott.

The Rev. Mr. King wired his regret for not appearing, saying he has been ordered by his doctor to rest.

Grey said that "the bus boycott is not a racial movement, and it is time for all white people in America to realize the evil of segregation and to do something about it."

He said that in Montgomery, bus drivers have legal powers and "when they talk to you, that's the police talking."

Before concluding his talk, Grey told how "often, sick pregnant or old Negroes are told to relinquish their seats, even to white children."

Last year three Negroes were arrested and convicted of violating the city's segregation law, the attorney said. and one of them was a 15-year old girl who was sitting in the rear Negro section.

She was told to get up, because a white man was standing.

Since then, a move has been instituted in Federal Court in Montgomery to have both state and city segregation laws declared unconstitutional the defense counsel said.

Prior to the main speaker's talk the Rev. Clayton Brooks Halo, president of the Boston Council of Churches praised Rev. King's efforts which "deserve our backing, both the spirit and in finances."

Jail Bus Boycott Leader

Afro-American

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Ride the buses or else!

That is the fantastic threat of the mayor, the police commissioner and the local chapter of the White Citizens Councils to colored residents of this town ~~city~~ buses.

Baltimore, Md.

Frustrated by the bus boycott of the Montgomery Improvement Association which began on Dec. 5, the city officials have initiated a "get-tough" policy.

This policy is primarily aimed at the owners of automobiles in a 200-car pool, which has been transporting citizens about the town.

Sat. 2-4-56

ONE OF THE victims of the "ride-the-bus-or-else" campaign of Mayor W. A. Gale and company was the Rev. M. L. King, leader of the improvement association.

He was arrested Thursday evening for speeding, charged with driving 30 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone.

ON SATURDAY, the Rev. Mr. King was fined $10.

"The arrest has made our group more determined than ever," the Rev. Mr. King told the AFRO, Saturday.

"The city officials have embarked on a two-point program.

"First, a campaign of intimidation through a series of harassing arrests in an effort to tear down our morale;

"Secondly, they are attempting to provoke violence."

Explaining his arrest, the Rev. Mr. King said:

"I pulled up at McDonald and Monroe Sts., the biggest of our pickup stops, to pick up some passengers.

"There were two detectives asking each driver where he bought his gas and if he was charging the passengers.

"They were also taking down the license numbers of each car.

"I overheard one of the detectives tell another, "There is that King fellow."

* * *

"THE DETECTIVES went over to a nearby car in which two policemen were seated and said something.

"When I drove off, the police car trailed and I was very careful not to exceed the speed limit.

"When I had driven about 12 blocks to Grove and South Jackson Sts., the police car pulled along side and one of the officers beckoned me to the curb.

"The officer said that I was speeding. I was ordered to follow him to the station. The Rev. R. D. Abernathy, pastor of the First Baptist Church, was on the scene and offered to put up my bond.

"The officer refused, saying that he could see me the next morning indicating that they were going to keep me in jail overnight.

"HUNDREDS OF people came to the jail and they let me out on my own bond after holding me about 20 minutes.

"The courtroom was jammed this morning when my case came up. The judge wouldn't let us introduce witnesses to point out that the officers had trailed me from the pickup stop.

"My arrest was very unusual for a traffic case. The usual procedure is to issue a ticket and to appear in court."

Fred Gray, attorney for the improvement association, estimates that about 10 persons have been arrested on minor traffic charges since the "get tough policy" was intiated.

There was a report on Jan. 22 that the demonstration was over.

The Rev. Mr. King said that the report was erroneous.

The leader of the demonstrators said that no representative of the association had talked with city hall in several weeks.

It appears that three ministers, the Rev. W. K. Kines, the Rev. B. F. Mosely, and Bishop D .C. Rice had reportedly met with city officials.

Afro-American

HOWVER, ON Monday night, Jan. 23, the largest mass meeting of the demonstration to "get-the-record-straight" showed up at the Beulah Baptist Church.

The throng said in no uncertain terms that they would not ride the buses until their demands are met, the Rev. King revealed.

Sat. 2-4-56

Their demands are:

1. More courtesy of the drivers toward passengers; 2. A first-come-first-served seating arrangement: and 3. the hiring of colored bus drivers.

About $2,000 was collected at the Jan. 23 mass meeting, the Rev. Mr. King told the AFRO.

The city officials offered the ministers in the unauthorized "conference:"

P. 3

(1) More courteous treatment; (2) reservation of 10 seats in front for whites and 10 seats in the rear for colored; and (3) no authority to suggest who the company should employ.

When this was reported to the mass meeting, the crowd jeered it.

Mayor Gale, in issuing a "get-tough policy," said:

"The colored people are laughing at white people behind their backs — the white people who haul the maids and cooks to and from work.

"They think it's very funny and amusing that whites who opposed the colored boycott will act as chauffeurs to colored persons who are boycotting buses.

"THE CITY council urges the white people of Montgomery to cease the practice of paying blackmail transportation money in any form or fashion.

"The colored servants in refusing to ride the buses are fighting to destroy our social fabric just as much as the colored radicals who are leading them."

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said he has instructed police to "break up" colored groups which, he said, have been "loitering" in white residential sections.

Speaking of colored servants getting rides with white motorists to and from their jobs, Sellers said:

"We do not intend to allow them to become nuisances in white sections."

* * *

THE BOYCOTT is so effective the bus rates have been raised 50 per cent. From 10 to 15 cents for adult fares and five to eight cents for children.

Virtually 100 per cent of the colored residents have boycotted the buses. About 75 per cent of the patronage had come from colored riders.

The boycott stemmed from the Dec. 1 arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks, who refused to get up out of her seat for a white person and was fined $14 on Dec. 4 for violating the state's segregation laws.

10,000 Expected At Mass Meeting

Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 22 (AP). Negro religious and political leaders, including 20 ministers, were arrested on boycotting charges today in a wholesale roundup of defendants indicted by a grand jury for their mass protest against bus segregation.

Bus boycott leaders scheduled a mass meeting for tomorrow night at the First Baptist Church and predicted 10,000 Negroes would attend to pray "that justice will prevail."

WALKING DAY FRIDAY

In addition, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, chairman of the negotiating committee for the bus protest movement, said Friday has been proclaimed "prayer-pilgrimage day," and all Montgomery Negroes are expected to walk rather than ride automobiles.

The grand jury returned indictments late yesterday against 115 defendants accused of taking an active part in the 11-week-old racial boycott against Montgomery City Lines buses. Late tonight, 67 persons had been arrested.

Dates for their trials will be taken up Friday at their arraignment.

FINE CHANGED TO JAIL

Thousands of Negroes have refused to ride the buses since Dec. 5, the day a member of their race, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was fined $14 for refusing to move to the colored section of a bus. City and state laws require segregation.

Mrs. Parks was sentenced to 14 days in jail in lieu of the fine today after Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, the jurist who ordered the grand jury investigation, turned down her appeal from the previous conviction in city court.

She appealed Judge Carter's decision to the state Supreme Court, and immediately afterward was arrested on a boycotting indictment.

UPHELD STATE LAWS

Judge Carter upheld city and state segregation laws when the issue was raised in Mrs. Parks' defense. He imposed the jail sentence after she refused to pay the fine and announced she planned to appeal the conviction. All of the defendants brought to the county jail and fingerprinted were released as soon as they put up bond of $300 each. They were charged with violating a state law against organized, illegal boycotting. Maximum sentence for violation is six months in jail and $1,000 fine.

Alabama Citizens To Walk Today In Arrest Protest

Daily World 1/1 Atlanta, Ga.

BY PAT J. McDONNELL

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) - Montgomery's Negroes plan to observe a "total walking day — today by shunning all motor vehicles in protest against mass arrests of leaders of the 12-week-old bus boycott.

The boycott was still in force Thursday as police served the 8th of an expected 90 warrants for violations of A 1929 labor law banning boycotts.

Prominent Negro political leaders about 2 ministers and clerks,4 maids and manuel laborers and had been caught in the dragnet which Sheriff deputies claimed had accounted for almost all of those indicted. All are free under $300 bond.

REV. KING ARRESTED

The Rev. M. L. King, a key leader whose home was bombed during the bus protest, announced after his arrest Thursday that the Negro population would be asked to give strict observance to a 'prayer-pilgrimage Day" in which even private cars and Negro taxis are to be shunned.

The Rev. Ralph Abernathy, who was arrested Wednesday, said he expected "several thousand" persons to attend a prayer meeting for "guidance" at this First Baptist Church last night.

Abernathy said "the eyes of the world are focused here to see Southern Justice in action" and added:

CITES RIGHT TO PROTEST

..."It is an American's right to protest against undemocratic and inhuman practices, yet because we are Negroes, the grand jury has indicted us.

The Montgomery Grand Jury handed down 11 true bills Tuesday listing what was at first believed to be 115 names. The jury warned that continuance of anti-segregation pressures would "inevitably" result in violence.

Rev. King denied that there were any violent intentions behind the boycott actions of the city's 35,000 Negroes, and added:

"We feel that we are within our legal rights. The great genius of American Democracy is that it permits every citizen the right to protest."

The mass boycott began December 5 when Mrs. Rosa Parks refused to comply with Jim Crow seating laws and was fined. The fine was upheld in Montgomery Circuit Court Wednesday.

Here Are Names Of Montgomery Heroes

Chicago, Ill.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Here is a partial list of persons indicted and arrested in the controversial bus boycott case:

Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, pastor of the First Baptist church, the first man to be apprehended.

E. D. Nixon, president of the County Negro Democratic association, whose home was bombed during the boycott.

(Rev. M. L. King, whose home was also bombed, was out of town and reportedly not among those indicted.)

Rev. J. W. Hayes and Dr. S. S. Seay, respectively presiding elder and executive secretary of the Home Missions board of the AME Zion church.

THIN CRUST OF PEACE

Dixie Looks For Answer To Heal Racial Strife

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 3-4-56

By BEM PRICE

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 3 (AP)—Here in the self-styled "heart of Dixie," the time of racial crisis is now.

In the past three months subsurface racial tensions repeatedly have broken through the thin crust of apparent peace.

Alabama, of course, is not alone in its battle against any shift in the South's racial patterns.

There have been riots at the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa over the admission of a Negro woman.

In Montgomery, a Negro boycott of the public transportation system is now in its 14th week, though 99 of the movement's leaders were indicted under an old labor law.

The number of strongly pro-segregation White Citizen Councils has grown from about 40 to more than 60 in Alabama in the last eight weeks.

The Alabama Legislature has approved a resolution declaring the U. S. Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, to be "null, void and of no effect."

In that now historic decision the Supreme Court held that segregation in public schools because of race was unconstitutional.

The voices of moderation in Alabama have been few. Gov. James E. Folsom called the nullification resolution "hogwash." He also has appealed for an interracial committee to seek means of lessening racial tensions.

Another Alabama House resolution asked for an investigation to determine whether the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is Communist controlled.

The NAACP has been the guiding hand behind the fight against segregation throughout the South.

The running fight to maintain racial barriers was not confined to Alabama during the past week.

In Mississippi legislators also called on Congress to submit a constitutional amendment to the 48 states, declaring that the states alone have the right to regulate public schools.

In addition the Mississippi House set up a $5,000 library fund to acquire books on the races of mankind. The floor debate specified they should be books indicating the white man's superiority over the Negro.

P. 2-A

Before this measure was sent to the Senate, however, Rep. Walter Phillips from Hancock County, warned that such a measure would border on "thought control." He said Hitler advocated a master race "and had paid the consequences."

Virginia is another state which has protested the court decision in a legislative resolution. Georgia has declared it to be "null, void and of no effect."

In Louisiana the state brought action to dissolve the NAACP under an old anti-Ku Klux Klan law.

The suit, filed by Atty. Gen. Fred S. LeBlanc, asked the state court also to ban NAACP meetings.

The law under which the suit was filed requires every type of organization to file annual membership lists with the secretary of state. This, the state charged, the NAACP has failed to do for the past three years.

LeBlanc's action came after the NAACP twice had shaken Louisiana in a matter of days. Actions brought by the NAACP ended with a federal court ruling knocking out the state's 1954 laws designed to get around the U.S. Supreme Court's ban on school segregation.

The NAACP followed this decision with a suit last Wednesday asking for integration in New Orleans public schools.

The two Alabama cases which have attracted world wide attention, of course, are those of Autherine J. Lucy, a 26-year-old Negro secretary and ex-school teacher, and the Montgomery bus boycott.

For 29 months the Lucy woman sought the right to enroll at the University of Alabama through the federal courts. She won and became the first Negro ever admitted to the 125-year-old school.

It was a short-lived victory. Riots broke out on the school's campus. The Board of Trustees suspended the Negro woman. She sought a contempt of court motion against 13 trustees and university officials. Federal Dist. Judge H. Hobart Grooms rejected the contempt motion, but ordered the Lucy woman returned to school by Monday.

Within hours after that court action, the trustees met again in secret session and ordered the Negro coed "permanently expelled" on disciplinary grounds.

The next move is up to the NAACP and there was no immediate indication when it would come or what it would be.

In New York, NAACP attorney Thurgood Marshall said "it is pretty clear in my mind what we can do," but he said it would require some "checking" first.

The Lucy woman returned to New York with Marshall after the expulsion for "rest, peace and quiet." She said she was "completely disheartened," but added that she would return to Alabama next week to renew her fight to reenter the university.

The tensions developed over the Lucy case were indicated by the fact that three university officials and an Alabama Circuit Court judge testified in federal court she might be killed if she tried to return to the campus.

Further complicating the Lucy case was a damage suit by three construction workers and a truck driver for four million dollars.

The four civil damage suits, filed in a state Circuit Court Friday stemmed directly from charges made by the Lucy woman and her attorneys in the federal court action which were droppel on the day of the hearing, last Wednesday.

The Montgomery boycott began almost immediately after the Dec. 1 arrest of a Negro woman for refusing to take a seat in the section of a bus reserved for Negroes upon orders of a bus driver.

The transportation company's business fell off an estimated 60 per cent. Bus fares were hiked from 10 cents to 15 cents to meet the increasing deficit.

Finally, a grand jury in Montgomery, a town of 125,000 with a Negro population of 46,000 indicted 99 boycott leaders for violation of a 1921 law making it illegal for two or more people to conspire to hinder a business operation. Oiriginally, the law was adopted as the result of a labor union dispute. Hearings on these boycott cases will be held March 19.

Hudson Denies Saying NAACP 'Paying' Wife

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 3 (AP) — The husband of Pollie Hudson today denied saying she was a "guinea pig" of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and received money from the NAACP.

Edward Hudson, a steelworker, issued a typewritten statement asserting he never made allegations attributed to him in a Circuit Court answer to his wife's petition for a divorce.

The 23-year-old Birmingham woman applied for admission to the University of Alabama but was rejected on the grounds of her "conduct and marital record."

"I deny that my wife is being paid by anyone to my knowledge," the statement said, "and this statement is wholly false and I hereby make public my denial of each and every allegation contained therein."

Morrell Montgomery, attorney for Hudson, said, "The statements in his answer to his wife's complaint are true according to the representations he made to me."

Montgomery said he may ask for a hearing in the case at which Hudson could be questioned under oath about the allegations.

Our Opinions

True Leaders Of The People

As we have stated before, Negroes in America now are getting a new type of leadership from the ranks of the clergy. Historically, the ministers and our church leadership have played significant roles in our development and progress.

In modern times, however, the civic, political and business leaders have had a larger share of the public stage and there were those who regarded the religious leadership among us as backward and self-seeking. The rise of many new sects and various type of over-publicized prophets all seemed to indicate that the quality and character of our religious leadership left much to be desired.

Today, however, we are witnessing the emergence of heroes of the masses who are carrying the message of the pulpit into the market place. Such stalwarts of the church as Martin Luther King and Ralph Abernathy of Montgomery, Alabama, are not only doing a great constructive job of leadership themselves, but they are giving inspiration to their colleagues all across America.

The clergymen of Montgomery who are in the forefront of the leadership of the boycott have shown the kind of statesmanship that will win over all obstacles, the kind that Gandhi used to deliver freedom to his native India, the only kind that a minority so situated as ourselves in America can employ and win without leaving open wounds of lasting bitterness.

Once again we salute the ministers of Montgomery and join with all those who wish them Godspeed in the mission upon which they have embarked. We pray also that their good works will inspire all Americans to help build a better society with love and freedom for all of God's children.

Montgomery Boycott Has Businesses in a Dither

Big Islander Thur. 3-8-56 P.1

Des Moines Register

Montgomery, Ala. (CNS) — The still-going-on boycott of the city's buses by Negroes has business of all kinds in a dither. Shops that are near the bus stops report "almost no business" since the boycott began.

But the city's businesses aren't the only ones to suffer. It seems that shows scheduled to enter the city are trying to get out of the dates. For Montgomery is a "dead" town in many respects.

The touring "Holiday On Ice" is trying hard to e released of its engagement March 20-24. It plays at the Coliseum which is on the outskirts of town and thus is very dependent on all kinds of transportation for a success. Usually its Montgomery stand is very prosperous one, yet if it has to go through its date now, it doesn't expect much of a crowd at all in the tension-ridden city. The Ice Show isn't the only one suffering. All theaters are at a standstill.

Montgomery Bus Boycott Arouses Nation

Outside the Jail—Orderly crowds stand outside the County Jail in Montgomery, Ala., during the arrest of 115 leaders in the current bocott of city buses. Montgomery police kept a nervous eye on the huge throng of Negroes but no violence was reported.

Young 'Hoofers'—The rain which fell on Montgomery, Ala., during "walking day" did not dampen the walking spirits of the town's Negro population and least of all the young folk. Here is a group of students on their way to school, sharing umbrellas.

Alabama Boycott

Evening Star

The strategy adopted by the authorities in Montgomery, Alabama, in an attempt to break a Negro boycott of a busline is almost beyond belief. P. 22-A

This boycott, started in protest against Montgomery's bus segregation arrangement, began on December 5. It has been extremely successful, with nearly 42,000 Negroes finding other means of getting to and from their destinations. As a result, 115 Negro leaders now have been indicted under an antiunion law, adopted in 1921, which makes it a misdemeanor to conspire or agree "to interfere with or hinder business."

Washington, D.C.

It is hard to believe that this is happening in 1956, and we suppose that the indictments, if the Negroes should be convicted, will ultimately be thrown out by the courts. Meanwhile, however, the spectacle remains—the spectacle of white people, who are staunchly opposed to integrated schools, attempting to compel Negroes to patronize segregated buses. And this in the face of the fact that the Negroes, surprisingly enough, are willing to accept a modified system of bus segregation—a first-come, first-served plan under which whites would start seating from the front and Negroes from the rear.

The Montgomery grand jurors, speaking through the indictment, said this: "It is the feeling of this grand jury that if we continue on our present course of race relations, violence is inevitable. The leaders of both races are urged to take a long and thoughtful look into the future." This is a remarkable expression to come from a grand jury which seems to think that Negroes can be compelled to patronize segregated buses. And it is even more remarkable, perhaps, for what it implies, but does not explicitly state.

The implication is, or seems to be, that reason and a sense of fair play are being destroyed in Montgomery by rising racial feeling. If this is correct, it is indeed time for the leaders of both races, and, in this instance, especially for the leaders of the white race, to take a long and thoughtful look into the future.

Support of the boycott against the jim crow bus line of Montgomery, Ala. is the goal of a conference called for Sunday afternoon at 2:30, sponsored by an interracial trio of leaders, the Rev. V. J. Waldron, pastor of the United Brethren church; Mrs. Willie Lee Thompson, chairman of the Southeast Inter-Racial Council; and J. R. Thomas, chairman of the Florence Fair Employment Practices Committee.

The Rev. Waldron whose church at 66th and San Pedro will be the conference scene is white. The organizations are interracial,

According to the call, purpose of the conference is to stimulate active support of the boycott through fund raising and a demand on U. S. Attorney General Brownell for federal action to protest the civil rights of Negroes.

According to announcement, flourescent rubber gummed bumper strips carrying the slogan, "Paul Revere Rode, Alabama Walks for Freedom — Demand Federal Protection of Civil Rights" will be available at the conference as well as posters, over-sized post cards, directed to Attorney General Brownell, and an educational leaflet.

The poster depicts a Montgomery minister standing in front of jail bars, one of the 90 Negro leaders indicted or arrested for inspiring the boycott.

The material may be obtained by calling J. B. Thomas, 823 E. 94th st., or phoning LU. 5-4012.

Vote To Continue Montgomery Bus Boycott Until All Demands Are Met

Defender P.1 Sat. 5-5-56 Chicago, Ill

MONTGOMERY — At a specially called meeting here Thursday night, 2,500 members of the Montgomery Improvement association vowed "we will never go back to jim crow buses."

This, in effect means continuation of the boycott, now almost five months old, in spite of announcement by the local bus company that it will not enforce jim crow regulations in compliance with a recent Supreme Court ruling.

Monday, the Supreme Court voided all state and local laws requiring racial segregation on buses.

One of the chief reasons for continuation of the boycott is the failure of city officials to comply with the high court decision. Complete abolition of jim crow on the city's buses, however, still may not satisfy the MIA.

Earlier, when he was asked to comment on the court's decision Rev. M. L. King, president of the MIA, indicated the organization may not be willing to call off the boycott until some Negro drivers are employed.

The resolution authorized the directors of the M. I. A. "to do any and all acts that are deemed necessary to perfect our desires."

Two lawsuits attacking the municipal and state statutes requiring segregation in buses are in the courts. One of the suits is scheduled to be heard in Federal court May 11.

The Montgomery City lines, inc. itself, has issued a desegregation order on its buses, but city officials have threatened to arrest anyone who violates municipal segregation ordinances.

Rev. King, unofficial leader of the bus boycott, called the meeting which engaged in singing religious songs before getting underway with an opening prayer.

After the resolution was read, the Rev. B. D. Lambert moved that it be adopted unanimously and declared:

"The Negroes of Montgomery will never go back to jim crow buses."

The bus company — which wants to end almost five months of boycott — has met all the demands of the Negroes except one, drivers for predominantly Negro routes.

The bus company stated this was impossible in the near future because union contracts require that furloughed men be rehired before new men are considered.

Meanwhile, at an all-white meeting of the white Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers Association in Montgomery, 500 delegates voted unanimously to defy the national PTA stand against segregation in public schools.

A conference between the Montgomery city commission and officials of the boycotted bus line also failed to settle the segregation question on the transit system.

The officials scheduled another conference.

The city commission firmed up its position that segregation should be maintained on the buses in a brief statement which read in part:

"The City commission has heretofore taken the position that the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court did not pass on the statutes of Alabama and the ordinances of the city of Montgomery. We are now advised that there is a question as to whether the Supreme Court even passed on the statutes of South Carolina.

"We have conferred with representatives of the city lines, but have reached no conclusions."

Bus company officials refused to comment on the meeting.

BUS FIRM ORDERED TO DROP INTEGRATION

Commercial Appeal P.1

Circuit Judge Asserts U. S. Can't Prohibit States From Segregating

Memphis, Tenn.

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, May 9. — Holding that the Supreme Court hasn't outlawed bus segregation yet, Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones directed Montgomery City Lines Wednesday to abandon its new integration policy.

The state court jurist ruled nothing in the United States Constitution gives the Federal Government the right to prohibit states from segregating bus passengers in intrastate transportation.

Thurs. 5-10-56

Orders Firm To Comply

He held Montgomery city and Alabama state segregation laws constitutional and ordered the bus company to "comply and abide" with them.

Judge Jones' decision granting an injunction against further compliance with the bus company's recent integration order came at the request of the City of Montgomery, whose officials and attorneys predicted rioting and other violence if the segregation laws are broken down.

The judge took note of that threat and observed in his written order:

"A situation of tension and unrest has been created in the City of Montgomery, which is likely to explode into violence at any time, if not restrained."

Boycott For Six Months

Most Montgomery Negroes have boycotted city buses for nearly six months, even despite the company's instructions to its drivers to refrain from enforcing the segregation laws. Negro leaders voted at a mass meeting recently to continue the boycott until city and state officials recognize integration.

There have been no reports of actual integration aboard the buses even though the company abandoned segregation as a policy. Negroes who have continued to patronize the buses have remained in the rear where they always sat.

Judge Jones' decision came only two days ahead of a scheduled Federal Court hearing on a suit challenging constitutionality of city and state segregation laws. A three-judge panel will try the suit Friday. The complaint bears the names of six Negroes and was filed as an outgrowth of the bus boycott.

'No Straight Out Decision'

Judge Jones wrote in his decision that "There is no straight out decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a state or city may not require the segregation of the races on buses where carriage of passengers is solely intrastate."

A Supreme Court ruling April 23 was interpreted as outlawing segregation on city buses, but some lawyers later contended it didn't settle the issue.

The decision dismissed an appeal from a ruling of the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals which, in turn, has held bus segregation in Columbia, S. C., unconstitutional and had sent the case back to the original trial court to determine the question of damages.

Judge Jones questioned the validity of the Federal Court of Appeals' ruling, holding it "is not well reasoned, is not sound law" and "at best it is simply the guess of the Fourth Circuit Court of what the Supreme Court will hold."

Basing his conclusion on the 10th Amendment to the United States Constitution which says powers not delegated to the Federal Government by the organic law or prohibited to the states are reserved for the states or the people, Judge Jones asked:

"Where in the United States Constitution is there any delegation of power to the United States Government to say that a state cannot make reasonable regulations for the carriage of passengers on public conveyances wholly within the state?

'Where In Constitution?'

"Where in the Federal Constitution is there one word, one sentence, or one paragraph, saying that the sovereign states of this union, the states which created the Federal Government —and many of whose Constitutions antedate the Federal Constitution—are prohibited from making . . . reasonable rules for the separation of the races?"

Continuing, he said the power claimed for the Federal Government by the Court of Appeals in the South Carolina bus case "does not exist and never has existed."

"It is a power reserved to the states and their people. This court will not be a party to filching the power from the state," he said.

Reynolds C. Mills, assistant superintendent of Montgomery City Lines, said the company will comply with Judge Jones' order.

Court To Air Plea By City In Bus Hassle

Advertiser Thurs. 5-3-56 Montgomery, Ala.

By FRANK McCardle

Intent on preserving segregation on city buses, Montgomery's city officials will carry their fight to Circuit Court today in a suit against the Montgomery City Lines Bus Co. P.1

Judge Walter B. Jones will begin hearing arguments at 10 a.m. on a request for an injunction against the bus firm requiring compliance with local and state bus segregation laws.

Meanwhile, a long bill of demurrer was filed in Circuit Court yesterday by attorneys of the bus company in an attempt to have the suit dismissed.

HELD INVALID

The demurrer was based principally on charges that the bill of complaint filed by the city fails to show any violation of the ordinances and statues requiring segregation on buses, and that under Federal Court decisions, "such ordinances and statues have been held to be invalid and unenforceable under the Constitution and laws of the United States."

City officials have threatened to seek revocation of the bus company's franchise unless the integration order is rescinded. City and bus company attorneys have had two conferences but reached no agreement.

HEALTH, SAFETY

The suit avers that continued adherence to the bus company's desegregation policy begun here on April 23 "threatens the public health and safety by creating a clear and present danger of race riots, disorderly conduct, assaults, affrays, bombings and other physical attacks."

It further states that the decision be made by one of the "Honorable Judges of the Circuit Court of Montgomery County, sitting in equity."

Following a Supreme Court decision then generally believed to declare racial segregation on intrastate buses unconsitutional, Montgomery City Lines ordered its drivers on April 23 to cease enforcing racial segregation on local city buses.

Advertiser

The manager of National City Lines, Inc., of which the Montgomery bus lines is an affiliate, said here later the national organization intended to maintain non-segregated conditions on local buses in compliance with the Supreme Court action. P. 10-A

In the demurrer the bus company cited the case of Flemming vs. South Carolina, which gave rise to the controversial Supreme Court ruling. Pointing out that "there is no basic distinction between the laws and ordinances of South Carolina (considered in the Flemming case and those of the City of Montgomery and State of Alabama" mentioned in the city's suit, the respondent (bus company claims the Supreme Court decision, which dismissed the appeal from the U.S. District Court, left in full effect the lower court's decision.

Therefore, the bill of demurrer asserts, "said ordinances of the City of Montgomery and state statutes no longer afford it protection against law suits under the Civil Rights Act or state and federal laws."

Injunction filed to stop Montgomery bus integration

News P. 12
Wed. 5-2-56
Birmingham Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 2—(AP)—The City Commission has filed an injunction suit in Circuit Court here seeking to stop city lines buses from continuing a policy of non-segregation.

It was filed Monday and is aimed at a racial integration policy announced by the bus company April 23.

A hearing has been set for 10 a.m. (CST) Thursday before Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones.

The privately operated bus company, Montgomery City Lines, has instructed its drivers to refrain from enforcing segregation of their passengers.

But there have been no reports of actual integration. Negroes riding the buses have kept to the rear seats.

THE CITY COMMISSION last week announced that it would continue to enforce the city and state segregation laws and demanded the busy company obey them.

Mayor W. A. Gayle hinted that the charter granted to the bus company, a subsidiary of National City Lines, Inc., of Chicago, could be revoked if the bus line here violates the law.

Bus line officials posted a notice that segregation laws would no longer be enforced by the company after last Monday's ruling by the Supreme Court.

The City Commission has insisted that the Supreme Court dicision applied only to South Carolina and that the Montgomery city and Alabama state laws are still in effect.

Colored Seamstress Refused To Give Up Hers And Got Arrested And Then It Happened; Customers Adopt "Right To Walk And Get Arrested," Bus Company Willing To Forget It All If Negroes Will Just Come On Back And Ride Again; They Refuse

The true story that led to the terrific bus-boycott in Montgomery, Ala., and to a coersive attempt by authorities to subject Negroes to a repulsive form of slavery, has not been revealed by many newspapers in the South.

This was revealed in the Sunday, February 26 issue of The Washington, (D. C.) Post and Times Herald, one of the nation's leading daily newspapers. On a recent visit "Up East," a Nashvillian purchased a copy of the Washington daily and has called the Globe's attention to what is a different story in the daily to what has been published up to now.

The accepted version of the cause of the bus boycott has been that a colored woman patron of the bus company refused to obey the Jim Crow Law of Montgomery and got arrested. To many here it seemed that the woman had no semblance of an excuse for disobeying the Jim Crow Law. This is not wholly true, judging from what was published in last Sunday's Washington daily.

GETS TRUE STORY

Possibly the Washington paper, itself, was not satisfied with what came out of Montgomery as the true story of the arrest and boycott. What the paper published as the real facts, it can be assured, would have precipitated here in Nashville a boycott as severe as that going on in the "Capital of the Confederacy."

The Washington daily sent to Montgomery one of its crack newspaper reporters named Robert E. Baker. It was after he had painstakingly checked on the bus boycott that he came up with an enlightening story which was headlined: "NEGRO RACIAL PROTEST ORGANIZED, EFFECTIVE." Mr. Baker's first paragraph was as follows:

Globe & Ind.

"MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 25—The Negroes of this bustling city have come up with the first organized—and apparently effective—protest by their race in the Deep South's gripping segregation problem.

Independent

"Eighty-nine of their leaders, including 26 clergymen, have been arrested and face trial. Ten more leaders face arrest.

P. 4

After reciting the fact that Montgomery is a city of 125,000 persons, 46,900 of them Negroes, Mr. Baker reports also that "two miles from Montgomery is Maxwell Air Force Base with 8000 persons and a $50 million annual payroll" is located.

Says he:

"Last December 1 was a Thursday. The Montgomery Fair, department store on North Court St., closed its doors as usual at 6:00 o'clock. Rosa Louise Parks, 43 year old Negro seamstress, employed there, left to catch her usual Cleveland Ave. route bus. She was on her way home, 634 Cleveland Ct. in Washington Park, a Negro residential section.

On Montgomery St., she boarded, paid her dime fare and sat down beside a Negro man on the third seat from the front. Two Negro men were sitting on the seat across the aisle. The rear of the seat was filled with Negroes.

MRS. PARKS REFUSED

At the next stop ,the front seats filled with white riders. At the third stop, more white passengers boarded and had only standing room. The bus driver said the Negroes would have to move the third seats from the front on each side of the aisle to make way for the standing passengers. The three men stood and moved to the aisle. But Mrs. Parks refused. The bus driver said he would have to call the police.

"Then go ahead and call them," said Mrs. Parks.

"He did and two policemen took her to City Hall where she spent a brief time in the lockup before she was freed on $100 bond."

Mr. Baker then cites the Montgomery ordinance which says there is a "separatae but equal" provision in the law. It requires the driver to assign passengers so the races are separate. (It does permit the driver to assign Negro nursemaids, who are in charge of white children, to seats among white passengers.)

"Section 11 gives the bus driver the power of a police officer in carrying out the bus segregation law and makes it illegal for the passengers to refuse to obey the driver's seat assignment.

"In Montgomery and many other Southern cities, there is no definite segregation line in the buses. It is up to the bus driver's discretion. For example, buses going out to the well-to-do section in the morning are filled to the front with Negroes who work as domestics. On the return trip downtown, the bus is filled to the rear with white passengers on their way to work.

"This practice leads to the most galling objection of all Negroes: Having once boarded the bus and obtained a seat with other Negroes, they sometimes are forced to give the seat up to late-boarding white passengers.

"Mrs. Parks is well known in the Negro community, highly respected and active in church work. She is a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, an organization feared and hated by many Southern whites.

LEAFLETS CIRCULATED

"The day following her arrest,—Friday, Dec. 2, leaflets were circulated among Montgomery's Negroes, protesting the action as unjust.

"The reaction spread like wildfire, said the Rev. Martin Luther King, 27-year old Negro pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and an active NAACP member.

"A Mass meeting was held that Friday night. A second meeting on Monday night in the Holt Street Baptist Church was attended by 5,000 persons. The Montgomery Improvement Association was formed with King as president. The leaders asked Negroes to stay off the buses until these demands were met:

More courtesy from the bus drivers. They call us black cows, black apes sometimes, said King. Often they make us get on the bus by the back door.

"First come first-serve bus segregation policy, with Negroes filling up seats from the back, while passengers filling seats from the front. That is the way it is done in Mobile, Huntsville and Atlanta, said King, "and that is all we want.

"Negro bus drivers on dominantly Negro routes. This would help overcome the discourtesy shown now, said king.

The speed with which the boycott was organized, the Washington paper said, caused many whites to believe Mrs. Parks was a "plant" that is she boarded the bus with the intention of causing an incident and a test case.

"I had nothing further from my mind," said Mrs. Parks. "That just isn't true." she said: "I have been asked to move, but this time I just didn't."

Said Mayor Gale: "I could not say if it was a put-up-job or not. But this boycott was mighty well organized, mighty quickly.

The Washington daily tells of Negro taxicabs uniting and carrying passengers for the bus fare of ten cents. This was ruled against the law by the city which ruled taxicabs must charge regular taxi rates.

"Then came the car pool. More than 300 cars joined in it. Forty-six pick up and dispatch stations were set up. The Negroes rode free, made contributions to their churches, which in turn donated funds for gas and oil to the car pool drivers. This got around the law which would have made cars taxicabs if the passengers paid the drivers directly.

"The system was hurting. The Mayor announced a get-tough policy Said he, "I am tired of pussy-foothing around."

NURSEMAIDS EXEMPT

"White employers of domestics were asked not to pick up their maids in their cars. A grand jury met, seized records of the Montgomery Improvement Assoication, indicted 99 persons including King and Mrs. Parks, who by this time had appealed her case after conviction in Record's Court and Circuit Court.

The lower courts held it unlawful for two or more persons to enter into conspiracy for hindering, delaying or preventing any persons, firms or associations from carrying on a lawful business. Convictions carry a fine of from $100 to $1,000 and up to six months of hard labor. It is stated this law has been used in various cases, including labor disputes and once by an insurance company to stop scandalous rumors

The article reveals that the bus company and Montgomery's Negro citizens have held meetings, trying to come to terms and end the boy cott, which is seriously affecting the company. Bt no agreement had been reached, Mr. Baker states. He reports the following as the final offer from Mayor Gale and the city:

Courtesy of the bus drivers quaranteed with periodic inspections.

The first ten seats in buses could be reserved for white passenger and ten in the rear for Negroes; the middle 16 seats to be on a first come first served basis; when it was apparent no more white passenger would board a bus, the driver coudl assign seats as required. Special all-Negro and all-white buses would be used during rush hours. All passengers would enter the front door. City Commissioners would assure the Negroes of no retaliation for the boycott.

THESE NOT "OLD NEGROES"

After this offer was turned down, the commissioners are reported as saying "As far as we are concerned there is no use to talk with them any more. We will just have to wait and see. "These are not our old Negroes. There are outside agitators behind this thing. Here in Montgomery we have had very fine relations between the races but we are not going to have completely integrated buses."

Trials of the arrested crowd of passengers have been set for March 19. In the mean time, Negroes continue to carry out their Double P—Day—Prayer and Pilgrimage They have adopted a song set to the tune of "Tis the Old Time Religion." Two of the stanzas are:

"We are moving on to victory, we are moving on to victory, we are moving on to victory, with hope and dignity.

"We shall all stand together, shall all stand together, we shall stand together 'till every one free."

While racial segregation on common carriers has been outlawed by the Supreme Court edict, it is understood that it is still the law for carriers operating exclusively within states.

Negroes Walk to Work To Protest Bus Arrests

New York, N. Y.

By The United Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 24.—Negroes walked to work in the rain today in a silent pilgrimage protesting the arrest of their leaders who organized a boycott of segregated buses and have made it stick for eleven weeks.

Ninety of the leaders, charged under an obscure law, pleaded innocent at their arraignment. The defendants also walked through the drizzle to enter their pleas at the courthouse.

Obeying their ministers, who urged that mass demonstrations be avoided, the Negroes walked in pairs or small groups. Some 150 Negroes held a prayer meeting at a church after the arraignment.

A few blocks away in the state capitol, Gov. James E. Folsom met with Alabama editors and publishers and announced he would appoint a bi-racial commission to study "deteriorating" race relations in the state.

The bus boycott and the Autherine Lucy riots at the University of Alabama resulted in a "serious situation confronting us in Alabama," Gov. Folsom said. He said the commission would aim at removing the "fear" he said is prevalent among both races.

"Luckily there has been no death or bloodshed arising from our differences," he said, "but I am a little bewildered to see how our race relations in Alabama have deteriorated."

Reporters who toured the streets in Montgomery's Negro residential areas noted many Negroes walking, but others were seen in cars.

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, one of the twenty-six Negro ministers arraigned today, had proclaimed the day as "prayer-pilgrimage" day and said he expected "no race-loving Negro" would drive his car or ride in other vehicles.

Herald Tribune

City police reported they could detect no change in downtown traffic flow.

P. 4

The arraignment of the boycott leaders, indicted earlier this week by a grand jury, went off smoothly. Three Negro attorneys represented the defendants, who were called before Judge Eugene Carter in eleven groups, representing the eleven cases reported by the grand jury. Solicitor William Thetford said trials had been set for the week of March 19.

Identical Indictments

The Negroes were charged under identical indictments that said they entered a "'conspiracy, combination, agreement, arrangement or understanding for the purpose of hindering, delaying or preventing" the city bus line from carrying on its business. If convicted, they could receive a maximum jail sentence of six months.

Fifteen of the indictments were dismissed at the request of the solicitor because names were duplicated or the persons named had appeared before the grand jury and were therefore exempt from prosecution.

The boycott was termed a "spiritual demonstration" by ministers at a mass meeting last night, and they urged the boycotters to avoid large gatherings on the streets where "anything might happen." Only a handful of Negro spectators were present at the arraignments.

The Negroes pledged last night to continue the boycott until they have achieved their aims—more courteous treatment from bus drivers and a "first come, first served" seating policy.

Brands Report Of Settlement Of Montgomery Bus Drive "Misleading"

Leaders Say No Solution In Montgomery Bus Situation

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Jan. 1-24-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Authentic leaders here in the 50-day old stay-off-the-buses campaign yesterday branded as completely false a story which had appeared in public print that they had held a conference with Montgomery city officials which produced a solution to the eight-week old protest.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association and pastor of downtown Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, when questioned on a wire service story which quoted the Mont gomery City Commission as saying that an agreement had been reached for settling the refuse-to-ride protest which began Dec. 5 said the story was misleading.

Mr. King said that no representative of the association which he heads had talked with City Hall on January 21. He added that he learned that a Rev. W. K. Kines, a Baptist minister; the Rev. B. F. Mosely, a Presbyterian minister and Bishop D. C. Rice, Holiness minister, reportedly had held conference with the City Commission.

However, the Rev. King said that the three ministers did not speak for the MIA and had not been authorized to confer with the city officials as representatives of the protesting group. He said that he later talked with Rev. Kines and Rev. Mosely who explained how they were brought into the City Hall conference.

A mammoth set-the-record-straight mass meeting was scheduled for Beulah Baptist Church Monday night, January 23. Five neighborhood report-to-the-people meetings were scheduled for Thursday night, January 26.

One of the ministers in the "conference" with the City Commission charged that he was "hoodwinked" into the meeting, according to Rev. King. The MIA president said that he was told by one of the ministers who attended the City Commission's "conference with three Negro ministers" that he was asked to come see about an insurance policy. But was advised that before talking insurance he would have to help find a way to settle the "boycott" of the buses.

Daily World

The statement attributed to the Montgomery City Commission said that the conference agreed that the "City Commission and the bus company must abide by all laws regulating public transportation."

But that the following ideas had been agreed upon, subject to ratification by Negro leaders and upon a request for restoration of bus service in those areas where it had been discontinued:

1. More courteous treatment.

2. The 10-seats plans — setting aside 10 seats in front of the bus for white passengers and 10 in the rear for Negro passengers.

3. No authority to suggest who the company should employ as bus drivers.

MIA leaders (2) are insisting on a first-come and first-served seating and (3) the employment of Negro bus drivers on buses running into Negro districts.

The City Commission's plan also provided "special buses for strictly Negro use" during the peak-load hours on bus lines running into predominantly Negro residential areas.

The Rev. King indicated that a meeting of MIA leaders was held Sunday at which the City Commission plan was rejected as inadequate.

Meantime today the franchise of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc. was scheduled to come up for renewal Action on the franchise had been postponed last Tuesday.

A delegation from the Montgomery Improvement Association was scheduled to attend the City Commission meeting this morning, according to Rev. King.

Arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks on Dec. 1 and fining her Dec. 5 set off the refuse-to-ride campaign. The conviction was appealed to Circuit but no date has been set for its hearing.

But officials have complained that the reduced bus loads growing out of the protest have resulted in a droppage of revenue. City officials, trying to aid the company, granted it a temporary 50 per cent bus fare raise. Negro patrons before the protest gave the company 75 per cent of its bus-riders. Company and city officials have indicated that the protest has resulted in about a 90 per cent fall off in Negro riders.

Montgomery bus boycott continues

News Mon. 1-23-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 23 —(AP)—A boycott of Montgomery city buses entered its eighth week today with no letup in sight despite a compromise proposal announced by the City Commission seeking a settlement.

Birmingham Ala.

There was no immediate word from boycott leaders over their reaction to the plan announced Saturday.

P. 1

The Rev. M. L. King, Montgomery Negro minister and spokesman for the protesting Negroes, said his group was not represented at a meeting with the commission from which the compromise plan came.

The commission proposal included a pledge that courtesy would be extended to all patrons and that seats be reserved on each bus for white and Negro passengers.

Ten seats at the front would be reserved for whites and 10 seats in the back for Negroes. During rush hours special buses would be used to carry Negroes exclusively to and from predominantly Negro sections.

The Negro spokesman had asked for a "first come, first served" policy on all bus seats.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers also announced that the Police Department has been ordered to "break up" Negro groups which he said have been "loitering" at certain times of the day in white residential districts.

Capital bus boycott— Whites urged not to ride Negroes

News Wed. 1-25-56 P. 23

Birmingham

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 25 — (AP) — White Montgomerians were urged by Mayor W. A. Gayle yesterday to quit giving rides to Negro employes who have been boycotting the city buses.

Ala.

"The Negroes have made their own beds," the mayor said, "and the white people should let them lie in it."

38b

The mayor's appeal followed his announcement that the City Commission has adopted a get-tough policy and would make no further efforts to compromise with Negro leaders on a settlement.

Ala.

Mayor Gayle said Monday that boycott leaders have repeatedly turned down all "reasonable" proposals for a settlement and the City Commission, consequently, is through "pussyfooting around" with them.

In his statement yesterday, the mayor said Negro maids and cooks who are refusing to ride the buses are "fighting to destroy our social fabric just as much as the Negro radicals who are leading them.

"THE NEGROES are laughing at white people behind their backs—the white people who haul the maids and cooks to and from work. They think it's very funny and amusing that whites who are opposed to the Negro boycott will act as chauffeurs to Negroes who are boycotting the buses."

"The City Council urges the white people of Montgomery to cease the practice of paying . . . blackmail transportation money in any form or fashion."

HE ADDED that many Negro boycotters have been hitchhiking rides to work, "and we do not intend to allow them to become a nuisance in white sections."

Boycott leaders have established a number of "pickup" stations around the city where Negroes wait for rides provided by an organized car pool of sympathizers.

Negro have refused to ride the buses since Dec. 5 in protest to the segregated seating arrangement required by law.

Meanwhile, the city signed a 10-year franchise yesterday with Montgomery City Lines, the company which has operated the buses here since 1936.

Unlike the previous contract, the new franchise contains a provision that the bus company can cancel its obligation to provide bus service in the event of a boycott "or other disorders be-

End To Free 'Taxi Service' Requested By Mayor Gayle

Mayor W. A. Gayle, speaking for the City Commission, urged white Montgomerians yesterday to halt the practice of using their automobiles as "taxi services for Negro maids and cooks who work for them."

Pol. 1-25-56

He said the maids and cooks by boycotting the Montgomery City Lines are "fighting to destroy our social fabric just as much as the Negro radicals who are leading them."

"The Negroes are laughing at white people behind their backs. They think it's very funny and amusing that whites who are opposed to the Negro boycott will act as chauffeurs to Negroes who are boycotting the buses.

"The City Commission urges the white people of Montgomery to cease the practice of paying Negro maids, cooks or other employes 'blackmail' transportation money in any shape, form or fashion. This practice of extorting transportation money from whites under the threat of not showing up for work is shameful. The Negroes are merely using this practice to pay taxi fares so they can stay off city buses. If they want to ride in taxis, let them pay for them out of their own earnings.

"When a white person gives a Negro a single penny for transportation or helps a Negro with his transportation, even if it's a block ride, he is helping the Negro radicals who lead the boycott.

"The Negroes have made their own bed and the whites should let them sleep in it."

Pol. 1-29-H

Commissioner Clyde Sellers also announced that he is instructing the Montgomery Police Department to break up congregations of Negroes who have been loitering for long periods in white residential districts.

Pol. 1-25-56

"We have received complaints from white homeowners that Negroes are loitering in groups on the sidewalks outside their homes and that the habit has become rather chronic. A person has a perfect right to wait for a ride, but the practice of six and eight Negroes huddling together for an hour or more, trampling lawns and making loud noises in white residential districts must cease," he said.

"Actually some Negroes have turned into hitchhikers and we do not intend to allow the hitchhikers to become nuisances in the white sections."

Commissioner Frank Parks said that he had received dozens of calls from businessmen who said they were going to "lay off Negro employes who are being used as NAACP instruments in this boycott."

All three commission members said that the innocent Negroes who are being used as pawns in the hands of radicals "should wake up."

Meanwhile, a "tremendous ovation" was heaped on Mayor Gayle yesterday for his stand in ending Negro boycott talks and telling Negroes that "whites didn't care if the Negroes never rode the bus again if it meant destruction of the city's social fabric."

In stores and on the streets, white residents praised Mayor Gayle, Commissioner Sellers and Commissioner Parks for their "leadership in cutting the legs off the Negro boycott."

The consensus among whites was that they didn't care if the Negro boycott of the city buses "continued forever" and one man declared, "I hope the Negroes walk until they get bunions and blisters."

At the City Hall, Switchboard Operator Katherine Brown said she was swamped at the switchboard with hundreds of telephone calls praising the mayor and commissioners.

"In my 19 years at the City Hall, I can remember only once or twice when there were more telephone calls," she said.

In the mayor's office, Mrs. Kate Barnett, his secretary, said the "telephone hasn't stopped ringing and there have been so many people in here this morning to thank the mayor that we haven't been able to do a thing."

Mayor Gayle displayed a thick stack of telegrams received from throughout the state congratulating him on his stand.

"The people are with the commission. They have proved it today. We are going to hold to our stand. We are not going to be a part of any program that will get Negroes to ride the buses again at the price of the destruction of our heritage and way of life," he declared.

Commissioner Sellers said that he, too, had received "scores of telephone calls" and "people have been in my office to volunteer their support."

"I am convinced beyond any doubt that every right-thinking white man and woman in Montgomery is solidly behind us in our stand," he said.

Commissioner Frank Parks said he was "amazed with the avalanche of telephone calls, telegrams and visits."

"Our people want leadership in this matter and we, the City Commission, have resolved that we will furnish that leadership."

Throughout the city, white residents were discussing the commission's stand and many commented that "our governor ought to take a stand like that instead of siding with Negroes."

Attorneys, doctors, and other professional people strongly endorsed the mayor's stand as did mechanics, bus drivers, clerks and others.

The Montgomery Boycott

Nation New York

The boycott of transit buses by the Negro residents of Montgomery, Alabama, has caused a fantastically inept city commission to join forces with the White Citizens Council. Soon after this dubious union came the bombings of the homes of two Negro leaders. Since December 5 some 40,000 Negroes in the "Cradle of the Confederacy" have declined to patronize the bus line, in protest against seating practices that allow drivers to uproot Negro riders at will (see The Nation, December 24, 1955). They are not challenging segregation per se, but are only seeking a first-come, first-served allocation of seats on a racial basis. They have formed a jitney service of several hundred cars, have shared rides, and have simply walked. The solidarity, the good order and the high spirits they demonstrate are what especially gall local white supremacists. The seating arrangement they demand is that existing in most Southern cities.

The Montgomery City commission began a sequence of stupidities by declaring flatly that the requested change was contrary to the segregation ordinance—although the ordinance makes no specification as to how the races should be separated. Then Mayor "Tacky" Gayle appointed a committee of whites and Negroes to study the problem, but his naming two Citizens Council chieftains to the group insured that negotiations would be fruitless. After it became apparent that the Negroes were not going to be worn into submission by time alone, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, amid great fanfare, signed with the Central Alabama Citizens Council.

On January 21 the city commission said it had conferred with Negro leaders and bus-company representatives, and issued a detailed arrangement for seating which presumably had the approval of all sides. It subsequently developed that the three Negro ministers at the "conference" had thought they were being summoned for other reasons and had not agreed to anything. And no spokesman of the bus line had been present. Nevertheless, when the boycotters rejected the proposal, Mayor Gayle made a great cry about "bad faith" and declared that he was through "pussyfooting" with the situation. He announced that he and the third member of the commission had joined Commissioner Sellers in the ranks of the Citizens Council.

Immediately thereafter, an "avalanche" of congratulatory messages was reported at city hall. W. C. C. headquarters said new members were coming in by the hundreds. Police, acting under explicit "get-tough" instructions, began harassing Negro jitney drivers, and one of the boycott leaders, the twenty-seven-year-old Reverend Martin Luther King, was stopped twice within a few blocks before traffic officers decided he was speeding and hauled him to headquarters for fingerprinting. The night of January 30, either a grenade or a stick of dynamite was hurled against King's house, destroying the front part. No one was hurt.

Mayor Gayle and Commissioner Sellers both made speedy appearances on the scene to denounce such violence. They posted a $500 reward for the capture of the bombers, and this offer was matched by their fraternity brothers of the W. C. C. On February 1 five Negro women filed suit in federal court to have the state and city travel-segregation laws declared unconstitutional. (One of them was subsequently pressured into withdrawing her name.) The same night a blast was set off in front of the home of a local labor leader who is a past president of the Alabama NAACP.

Whether the explosions or the portent of the legal action have jolted Montgomery out of a rising state of hysteria cannot be judged at this writing. Senator "Voice of the South" Eastland was scheduled to make a public address on February 9—an event not conducive to sanity. And Montgomery's white ministerial association, a powerful force in this God-fearing city, is currently absorbed in enforcing the blue laws against Sunday operation of grocery stores.

City Offers $500 Reward In Explosion

Montgomery, Ala.

The City Commission last night offered a $500 reward for the capture and conviction of the persons who bombed the home of the Rev. M. L. King last night.

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

A bomb tossed on the porch of the home of the Rev. M. L. King, Negro boycott leader, 309 S. Jackson St. about 9:15 last night shattered windows, ripped a hole in the porch and cracked a porch column. No one was injured.

Neighbors reported that a light colored automobile was seen at the time of the explosion. It was believed to have stopped in front of the home as a white got out and placed or tossed the bomb on the porch.

Coretta King, wife of the Baptist minister, said she was sitting in the front room of the six-room white frame dwelling a half block from the Ben Moore Hotel when she heard footsteps and a thud "like a brick hitting on the porch."

She said she was talking with the wife of Roscoe Williams, Montgomery electrician, and that they feared the "thud" migh be "something dangerous." The two women ducked through a side door to the middle bedroom and went to a third room in the rear. As they reached the third room, they said that they heard the explosion.

In the rear room also was the Kings' seven and a half weeks old baby, Yolanda Denise

Vann Pruitt, assistant state toxicologist, said he believed the bomb to be either a hand grenade or a half stick of dynamite.

HOLE IN CONCRETE

The bomb hit on the south side of the porch about two feet from the concrete steps. It ripped a slight indention about a half inch deep, four inches long and two inches wide in the tile-like porch covering.

The bomb explosion shattered the four windows on the front of the house, sending glasses flying inside the living room on the north side and den and music room on the south side.

The house is about 15 feet from the sidewalk and about 30 feet from the street.

A neighbor, Ernest Walters, 301 S. Jackson, said he saw a light colored car stopped in front of the King house and then move away in a "terrific hurry." Walters said he was walking up his sidewalk when he saw the car and immediately after heard the explosion. He said he saw one man driving the car.

The Williams woman told essentially the same story as the wife of King. She said she was "shocked by the explosion.

History Shows . . . . . By J. A. Rogers

Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE MONTGOMERY (Ala.) bus boycott shows that Negroes are getting down at last to a practical grip on the solution of their problem. They are hitting jim crow where it hurts most—in the pocketbook. The one-third rise in fares will make Montgomery whites think more than all the pleas of fair-play by Negroes and the good American whites.

Mr. Rogers

The so-called race problem is nothing else but economic. The Negro was brought here, neither for love nor for spite, but to make money, to enrich others. The first slave was the Indian, but he couldn't deliver. The Negro could and every argument used, including so-called race purity and intermarriage had, and still has, no other goal, than to exploit him, to keep him at a stage where he can be most easily plucked.

NOT ONLY the race problem, but life itself has an economic base. Food, which is economic, is the first essential. In all but very primitive lands economics has money as its symbol, and therefore money is the most powerful thing on earth. Some two thousand years ago, Solomon wrote, "Money answereth all things." (Eccl. 10:19). True then, it's truer now. Of course, like everything else, money can be used for evil, but to get the best things in life money is essential.

Therefore should not Negroes use their spending power to help solve their problem? Recently in Harlem I saw a striking example of the effect of this use. One of the largest and oldest grocery and meat markets there promptly folded when Negroes stopped buying there—Weisbecker. The A&P opened a store in the next block with lower prices. Negroes transferred their trade there and Weisbecker closed two days later.

JIM CROW is on the way out and the economic weapon is the one to speed it. Laws, resolutions, speeches are at best secondary. More of boycotts of that nature and 1965, the one-hundredth anniversary of emancipation, might see jim crow near its last gasp.

What of a bus boycott in New Orleans, Charleston, Richmond and other jim-crow cities? Had minority groups like Jews or Poles been jim crowed as Negroes are, they'd have got together on it long ago. Moreover, the boycott will give to many Negroes a backbone where they had only a wishbone before. I'm sure the average Montgomery Negro has had a great lift in self-respect.

As for the Virginia vote in favor of segregation, it is a futile attempt to stave off the evil day. The majority of Americans now go to desegregated schools and this trend will eventually dominate even in Georgia and Mississippi. That Virginia vote has done an immense amount of good. It has chased the question further into the open. Thinking Americans are aroused. And is it not time for Negroes to stop using their buying power as carelessly as they have been?

Bomb Hits Negro's Home; A Leader of Bus Boycott

Constitution P. 5
Fri. 1-31-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 30 (AP)—An explosion shattered windows tonight at the home of the Rev. M. L. King, Negro leader in the bus boycott here. None was hurt.

Mrs. King, wife of the Baptist minister, said she heard something hit the front porch about 9:30 p.m. (CST) just before a "tremendous explosion" rocked the building. The blast made an indentation in the concrete porch.

Mr. King was not at home at the time. Mrs. King and her 7-week-old baby were in the living room with an unidentified Negro woman when the explosion occurred.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Montgomery City Commission offered a $500 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for the explosion. Police said the blast was probably caused either by a hand grenade or a stick of dynamite.

Rev. King, 27, is a native of Atlanta. His father, the Rev. M. L. King Sr., is pastor of Ebenezer Baptist Church.

Rev. King has been the main spokesman for the boycotters since the movement began here Dec. 5 in protest to the segregated seating facilities on city buses.

The Negro minister was fined $10 in police court Saturday on a speeding charge. He denied going 30 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone and said his arrest was the result of his activities in the boycott.

Dixie Diary

Afro-American Sat. 2-11-56

By CLIFF MACKAY P. 8

MONTGOMERY, Ala — The inconsistencies and contradictions in what has become generally known as "southern customs" never cease to amaze an outsider.

Baltimore, Md.

There simply is no hard and fast pattern existing, nor is there general agreement among the former Confederate states regarding sectionwide policy on racial matters.

A colored passenger may eat in Atlanta's Candler Airport unmolested, but restroom facilities are marked with foot-high letters "Colored."

In Montgomery here, there are no facilities for anyone to eat, but all travelers use restroom facilities with no thought of segregation.

* * *

NO LIMOUSINE service is available for colored passengers arriving in Atlanta and Birmingham. Unless friends know of your arrival the only alternative is to rent a car and find your way into town the best way you can.

But in Montgomery limousine drivers appear to be interested only in hauling as many $1.50 passengers they can, without regard to color.

The State of Alabama won't sell liquor from the same store to colored and white drinkers in Montgomery; but in Birmingham the state-operated package stores are open to everybody.

Montgomery County provides beautiful electric water coolers marked for "white only" in the corridors of its courthouse; but offers only a single sipgot with no refrigerating attachment for its colored citizens.

Yet two blocks away, the Montgomery City Hall also has electric water coolers which are available to everybody who wants to quench his thirst.

* * *

IN BALTIMORE, downtown department stores would rather lose the business than permit colored customers to try on such items as girdles, hats and bars.

But in Atlanta, Birmingham and even Jackson, Miss., department stores make no distinction between persons entering their doors with money to spend.

While most conductors have thrown in the sponge in the struggle to segregate railroad passengers, there are still one or two of the "bitter enders" left.

A Morehouse College student A. D. King, brother of the Montgomery boycott leader, ran into one on the Atlanta and West Point Railroad the other day.

King was en route to Atlanta from Montgomery and, refusing to heed the conductor's motion for him to board the first car, walked back to the third, in which there were about 12 white passengers.

Not to be defeated, the conductor moved all the white passengers to other coaches, according King the unusual distinction of a private car.

But there was one kink in the arrangement. The unreconstructed conductor got his revenge by turning the heat up in the "pirvate" car to its highest possible point.

When he reached Atlanta, young King said, he was as wet as if he had spent three hours in a Turkish bath.

IF THE prediction of Grover Hall Jr. editor of the Montgomery Advertiser, proves to be accurate, not a single colored Alabaman will be allowed to register next year and many of those already qualified to vote will find their names removed from the poll lists.

The Alabama White Citizenss' Council, we are told, is pushing a county-by-county drive to negate what little political power colored citizens possess. The disfranchisement campaign is being conducted quietly, out of respect and fear of J. Edgar Hoover and his FBI agents.

* * *

SPEAKING OF FBI, we learned from reliable sources that that agency is responsible for police not molesting colored passengers at Montgomery's Union Station.

It seems that a police official announced the day before the ICC integration ruling went into effect on Jan. 6 that his police would be detailed at the station to enforce segregation.

The story goes that he received a call from the FBI warning him that the power of city police did not extend inside a privately owned railroad station. The police were removed and passengers now sit anywhere.

But in Birmingham, police are kept on duty 24 hours a day to prevent colored interstate passengers from exercising their right to use the main waiting room. It appears the FBI needs to call there also.

All of the pastors of churches have forgotten denominational difference and closed ranks to support the bus boycott. That is, all of the colored pastors.

Not so the white preachers—at least the Baptist ones, who apparently do not look with favor on the bus uprising.

Officers of the Montgomery colored Improvement Association which has led the boycott were notified that they could no longer occupy office space in the from Mach 3 Gal 36 Baptist Home Mission Building.

It seems that the Southern Baptist Association (white) pays one-third of the maintenance of the building, while the other two - thrids comes from the colored churches.

So what happesn. The desks, files, and typewriters of the association will be moved over to the home mission office of the AME Zion Church, also located in Montgomery. No white contributions help support it.

* * *

DEMANDS OF the bus boycotters would have been met weeks ago, we are told, but for the fear of merchants that the next demand would be for jobs as clerks and office personnel.

So many of Montgomery's white residents have moved to suburban areas where they do their shopping the downtown stores depend on colored customers for nearly 62 per cent of their business.

* * *

NOT ONLY does Montgomery have separate cabs for colored and white residents, but the police department has obligingly erected parking cab stands signs "for white cabs only." This also violates the 14th amendment.

They apparently got tired and have yet to get around to putting up signs "For colored cabs only."

* * *

POLICE COMMISSIONER Clyde Sellers of Montgomery is convinced race relations would be all right if only meddling out-

He says remarkable progress has been made without the aid of agitators.

Asked to cite some "examples," he pointed with pride to the fact that no longer were racially separate lines required at city hall tax windows, in the postoffice or at the poll tax window in the courthouse.

Eyewitnesses told the AFRO that the only car they saw speeding away from the home of Rev. M. L. King, after it had been bombed, appeared to contain four men dressed like policemen.

Bus boycotters are also puzzled by the speed with which Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioners Clyde Sellers and Frank Parks arrived on the scene. The three high officials were there 12 minutes after the blast went off.

"Looks like they were standing around the corner waiting for it to happen," commented one bystander.

DEXTER AVE. Baptist Church, the pastor of which is the bus boycott's leader, the Rev. M. L. King, throws a shadow on the former Confederate White House which is located in the rear.

The congregation can look out of their church windows and see the white state capitol across the street. Confederate monument and all.

ONE WAY to reduce the necessity for filing so many anti-segregation suits, believes Ben Moore of Montgomery, is to find some way to compel the state pay the cost of these legal actions.

Mr. Moore operates a modern, fire-proof, four-story hotel which bears his name.

"I'm 64 years old and I've been working in white folks' kitchens all my life. Before this but strike I was all crippled up with arthritis, neuritis and Lord knows what else.

"Since Dec. 5 I've been walking six miles a day, my joints have straightened themselves out and I feel better than I ever felt in my life."

Thus testified one of the bus boycotters at First Baptist Church, last Monday night.

EMORY O. JACKSON, indestructible editor of the Birmingham World, who has been spearheading the fight to open the University of Alabama, felt fine Wednesday night.

He had just returned from Tuscaloosa, where he accompanied Arthurine Lucy, the first colored student to register at the school in its 124 year old history.

While walking down the street, a teen-age white girl edged up to him, slipped a piece of paper in his hand. The girl nodded, smiled and crossed the street.

After she had gone Jackson unfolded the note under the corner street light. It read:

"Congratulations! Many of us are with you all the way."

$500 Reward Offered

Herald Tribune 2-1-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 31 (UP)—The City Commissioners posted a $500 reward today for information leading to convictions for the bombing of the home of a Negro leader of a race boycott of city buses.

The three commissioners, all members of a pro-segregation white citizens council, went to the scene to supervise investigation after the bomb was tossed against the house last night.

The explosion damaged the front porch and blew out windows of the home of the Rev. M. L. King. His wife, daughter and a visitor were in the house at the time of the explosion. No one was reported injured.

Reserve police were called to serach the area for suspects.

Why Three Judges Will Hear The Bus Case

Advertiser P. 4-A

Some readers have asked why a three-member court will be empanelled to hear the suit brought by Montgomery Negroes against city and state laws governing segregated transportation.

A federal statute requires that when the constitutionality of a state statute is attacked, a three-judge court must hear the case. One of the judges must be a member of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; one a judge of the district court in which the cases was filed (in this case, Judge Frank Johnson); the third may be either a district or circuit judge.

Montgomery Ala.

There's no way in the world of knowing how long it will take to get a final answer in the case. (A district court has already ruled, however, that Columbia, South Carolina, may not segregate passengers on city buses.)

Times 2-2-56

A federal statute requires that cases involving an attack on the constitutionality of a state statute shall be heard as soon as "practicable" after filing. In other words, such cases are given a priority, but "practicable" is subject to a variety of interpretations.

In the appeal of the Negro admissions case, the University of Alabama unsuccessfully argued that the original hearing should have been held before a three-judge court. However, this motion was denied, presumably because no state statute specifically forbids the University from admitting Negroes, and thus constitutionality was not at issue.

The legal maneuvers on both sides are almost without end in a case such as the bus challenge, but we understand that it is unlikely it will drag on as long as the University of Alabama case, which dates back to 1952.

City Commission States Position On Bus Services

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 1-22-56

The City Commission, after a conference with a group of prominent Negro ministers yesterday, issued the following statement regarding the operation of buses in the City of Montgomery.

"It was agreed by all present at this meeting that the City Commission and the bus company must abide by all laws regulating public transportation. However, there are certain definite policies which were adopted which will be requested of the bus company by the City Commission and which, in our opinion, will be fair to all citizens of Montgomery, white and colored.

"1. Courtesy on the part of bus operators shall be uniformly extended to all patrons of our city buses and any instances of discourtesy should be reported immediately, giving all details, to the management of the Montgomery City Lines.

"2. On all regular bus schedules the first 10 seats in the front shall be reserved for white passengers and the last 10 seats in the rear for Negro passengers. It is agreed that in accommodating additional passengers, white passengers shall occupy seats from the front to the rear and Negroes from the rear to the front. During the rush hours of the day when large numbers of colored passengers are riding into and out of the colored sections of the city, special buses will be assigned strictly for the use of Negro passengers. The particular routes involved in this extra service will be the South Jackson bus, the Day Street bus, and the Washington Park bus.

"3. Regarding the employment of Negro bus drivers which has been requested, the City Commission has no authority to specify who shall be employed by the bus company, or any other business operating within our city.

"Full bus service will be resumed in Negro sections of the city upon request of Negro patrons and statement of their desire to use this bus service."

The above agreement is concurred in by all three members of the City Commission, as well as by representatives of the bus company and the group representing the Negroes of Montgomery.

'TIME TO BE FRANK'

Mayor Stops Boycott Talk

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Tues. 1-24-56

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

Mayor W. A. Gayle declared yesterday there will be no more discussions with the Negro boycott leaders until they are ready to end the boycott.

The mayor declared in a dynamic statement of his stand on the boycott that the vast majority of whites in Montgomery "do not care whether a Negro ever rides a bus again if it means that the social fabric of our community is to be destroyed so that the Negroes will start riding buses again."

Shortly after the mayor issued his statement, it was announced that the entire City Commission, Mayor Gayle, Commissioner Frank Parks and Commissioner Clyde Sellers, had joined the Montgomery Citizens Council.

Mayor Gayle said that "We have pussyfooted around on this boycott long enough and it has come time to be frank and honest." He added that the Negro leaders have proved "again and again that they will say one thing to a white person and another thing to a Negro about the boycott."

His full text statement follows:

"The City Commission has attempted with sincerity and honesty to end the bus boycott in a businesslike fashion.

"We have held meetings with the Negroes at which proposals were made that would have been accepted by any fair-minded group of people.

"But there seems to be a belief on the part of the Negroes that they have the white people hemmed up in a corner and they are not going to give an inch until they can force the white people of our community to submit to their demands — in fact, swallow all of them.

"The Negro leaders have forced the bus boycott into a campaign between whether the social fabric of our community will continue to exist or will be destroyed by a group of Negro radicals who have split asunder the fine relationships which have existed between the Negro and white people for generations.

Advertiser

"No other city in the South of our size has treated the Negro more fairly. In Montgomery they have better facilities in schools, hospitals, health centers and the like than in the vast majority of cities. Until the bus boycott occurred, the Negro rode the bus cheaper than Negroes in the vast majority of cities in the nation. Now the boycott has been fabricated by the Negroes into a campaign for forcing the white people of our community to accept their demands or else they will not ride the buses. We attempted to resolve their reasonable complaints but they proved by their refusal to resolve the reasonable ones that they were not interested in whether the bus service was good or not. What they are after is the destruction of our social fabric.

"The Negro leaders seem to believe there is considerable concern among whites on whether the Negroes ride the buses or don't ride the buses. There is no such concern among the whites as the whites are not alarmed about whether the Negroes ride the buses again.

"It is time to be frank about this matter. The white people are firm in their convictions that they do not care whether the Negroes ever ride a city bus again if it means that the social fabric of our community is to be destroyed so that the Negores will start riding the buses again.

"It is not that important to whites that the Negroes ride the buses. This is not a matter of a bus boycott. It is a amatter of a community relationship.

"The Negro leaders have proved they are not interested in ending the boycott but rather in prolonging it so that they may stir up racial strife. The Negro leaders have proved they will say one thing to a white man and another thing to a Negro. They have proved it again and again.

"The Negro is the person who is concerned with bus transportation in Montgomery. They have admitted this by their own claims that 75 per cent of the passengers are Negroes. If they want bus transportation, they can ride the buses. I don't believe the majority of whites care one way or another and certainly not enough to destroy our heritage and way of life so that Negroes will get on buses and ride them.

"The Negro leaders say the boycott will last until their proposals are given 'sympathetic treatment.' If the Negro leaders mean what I believe they mean by 'sympathetic treatment,' then there is no likelihood of the end of the boycott.

"When and if the Negro people desire to end the boycott, my door is open to them. But until they are ready to end it, there will be no more discussions."

Earlier yesterday, there was a restoration of normal bus service on three predominantly Negro routes.

Montgomery City Lines Manager J. H. Bagley said there were "a few more passengers on other routes" but no "noticeable increase on the Negro routes."

Service was reinstated on the Day street, Maxwell Heights and Veterans Court buses. What had been known as the Day street bus during the boycott will become the Holcombe street bus.

Bagley said the company had received numerous requests for resumption of service to the Negro sections. That, coupled with a compromise statement issued

Saturday by the City Commission, led to the decision to restore service. The bus company was not represented at the Saturday meeting.

The Rev. M. L. King, pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and boycott leader, chared that the three Negro ministers who talked with the commission were "hood-winked" into attending a city commission meeting Saturday.

It was this statement by King that caused Gayle to declare that Negro leaders were "saying one thing to whites and another thing to the Negroes."

King also charged that the three Negro ministers who had attended the meeting at the invitation of the commission all told him they had been duped into going.

One of the Negro ministers, the Rev. B. F. Mosley, who said he attended the meeting, issued a statement claiming he had not agreed to any compromise plan for ending the boycott.

The Rev. King said that the City Commission statement was "totally erroneous" if it gave the impression an agreement had been reached.

"More than 99 per cent of the Negro citizens of Montgomery have stated their position and it remains the same," he said. "The bus protest is still on and it will last until our proposals are given sympathetic treatment."

Gayle replied to the "sympathetic treatment" statement that there was no likelihood of an end to the boycott if the Negroes mean what he thought they meant by "sympathetic treatment."

Refuse To Ride Bus Leaders Not Intimidated By Whites

World Birmingham Ala. Fri. 1-27-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(SNS)— A frantic and desperate effort by city officials to break the refuse-to-ride campaign which has reduced the bus loads of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc., is underway here in the "Cradle of The Old Confederacy."

But at mid-week, the Montgomery Civic Association which has spearheaded the protest against alleged racial mistreatment on the franchised buses, had not budged.

Here are the developments:

1. All three members of the Montgomery City Commission now indicate that they are members of the Central Alabama (White) Citizen Council headed by State Senator Sam M. Englehardt, Jr., of Shorter, Ala. (The FBI has announced that it is investigating the WCC to determine whether there has been any violation of federal law. Englehardt, a Macon County "white supremacy" advocate has said that he "will welcome" any FBI check on the WCC.

Card-holders in the CA (W) CC, according to their own announcement are Mayor W. A. Gayle; Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and Public Improvement Commissioner Frank Park.

Mayor Gayle in an angry outburst announced that there would be no more talks with Negro leaders on ending the protest.

2. Mayor Gayle also asked white employers to stop transporting their employees to and from work. He said that Negroes persons caught loitering in white neighborhoods would be arrested.

3. Jan. 24 the commission renewed the franchise with the bus line on a 10-year conditional basis.

4. The Montgomery bus company Jan. 25 requested a copy of Birmingham's bus segregation laws. (Birmingham is said to have the toughest racial segregation ordinances in the country.

(Birmingham, Ala. It was learned here that some civic leaders were discussing a plan by which the validity of the Birmingham bus segregation laws could be challenged in the courts. But the sources asked not to be quoted or identified.)

5. Commissioner Park said Jan. 25 that since announcement of their revised stand on the protest six white business men had called and said they were ready to lay off any persons working for them who were cooperating with the protest. He said that Negro persons been received by the city officials commending them for their counter moves against the protest.

6. Five know-the-facts mass meetings were scheduled by the MIA leadership in different neighborhoods last night.

The protest was touched off by the Dec. 1 arrest and the Dec. 5 fining of Mrs. Rosa Parks, a well-like civic and church worker. The conviction was appealed to Circuit Court but as yet no date has been announced for hearing it.

MIA leaders in their protest have requested (1) more courteous treatment; (2) seating arrangements on a first-come, first-served basis, and (3) the employment of Negro bus drivers on lines operating into areas of predominantly Negro residents.

The second two requests have been rejected. The seating plan offered by the City Commission, according to civic leaders, is less favorable than the seating arrangement previously in operation.

Civic leaders also say that the bus company employs only five Negro workers, all in menial jobs. The bus company has admitted that the protest has cut deeply into its revenue. Negro patrons before the protest gave the company approximately 75 per cent of bus-riding business.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, J., pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church is president of the Montgomery Civic Improvement Association. The various churches, civic organizations and social club groups are backing the protest.

Bus Boycott Goes On Despite Compromise

Herald Tues. 1-27-56 P. 10-A

Miami, Fla.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (AP) — A boycott of Montgomery city buses entered its eighth week Monday with no letup in sight despite a compromise proposal announced by the City Commission seeking a settlement.

The Rev. M. L. King, Montgomery Negro minister and spokesman for the protesting Negroes, said his group was not represented at a meeting with the city commission from which the compromise plan came.

"I don't think our people are ready to go back on the buses," he said after the plan was announced.

The city commission proposal included a pledge that courtesy would be extended to all patrons and that seats be reserved on each bus for white and Negro passengers.

Frank Park said he had received dozens of calls from businessmen who said they are going to "lay off". Negro employes who are participating in the boycott. The businessmen, said Mr. Park, claimed the Negroes are being "used" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The boycott began Dec. 6 as a protest over segregated seating arrangements on city buses. The demonstration was touched off by court action in which a Negro woman was fined $10 for refusing to move to the rear of a bus.

"Hundreds of messages" were reported sent to commissioners Tuesday, praising them for calling off the talks.

Montgomery Citizens Push Bus Protest Despite Arrests

Tues. 1-31-56

Atlanta, Ga.

B-U-L-L-E-T-I-N

Word was received in Atlanta last night that the home of Rev. M. L. King, Jr. was bombed by unknown persons. According to the informant, no one was hurt. The King family was absent while Rev. King conducted a mass meeting at Dexter Ave. Baptist Church. Extensive damage was done to the home.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., one of the leaders in the "fair bus seating" campaign here which is entering its ninth week was arrested January 26 on "speeding" charges.

He is president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, one of the groups which is leading the protest against the Montgomery City Lines for alleged mistreatment of Negro passengers on the franchised intra-city buses.

The Rev. King said he was arrested after police trailed him for 10 blocks, carted him off to city jail, and fingerprinted him. He was held in jail about 15 minutes.

The militant Baptist minister said that he was charged with exceeding the 25 mile speed limit, which he denied. Arresting officers said he was going 30 miles per hour.

Rev. King said that police officers trailed him as he left a pick-up stop, and when he discharged one of the occupants from his car, ordered him to pull over to the side and said, "You are under arrest."

He said that he was carried to the jail where police at first refused to allow anyone to sign his bond. He said that those who asked to let them make the bond were told they would have to get a bond from City Hall, which was closed.

Word of his arrest began to beat around town and crowds swarmed the scene where police held the militant pastor. Eyewitnesses said they believe police intended to try to keep the Rev. King in jail overnight.

DR. M. L. KING, JR.

As excited citizens poured to the scene police, according to eye-witnesses, told Rev. King he could be released upon a recognition bond, but released him without even giving him a bond to sign, the minister said.

The Rev. King said that police had begun widespread arrests "for the past three days" (Jan. 24, 25 and 26) in an effort, he thought, to try to break up the citizens' free transportation system. "More than 100 traffic violation tickets have been issued and some of the car pool workers have been frightened off," the Rev. King said.

A five-man delegation Jan. 26 representing a partnership known as the Montgomery Transit Company asked the City Commission for a certificate of franchise for jitneys to serve areas effected by the protest.

Mayor Gayle who is leading the effort to break up the protest said that a decision on the jitney request would be handed down today (Jan. 31). Daily World

Meantime he made public a joint statement joined in by Commissioners Sellers and Parks which said: "If the Negroes want to ride a public vehicle, they can ride the city buses." P.4

"There is an abundance of public transportation in Montgomery for those who want to use it. If there is a group of people who don't want to use this public transportation that is their fault."

"We stand firm in our position that the white people of Montgomery are not going to be coerced by the threats of Negroes now or any other time."

Filing the jitney petition were: Rufus A. Lewis, J. E. Pierce, J. W. Bonner, Thomas W. Gray and Ronald R Young

The petition argued that there was "a strong demand for this type of service."

Meantime the Central Alabama (White) Citizens Council, which has conducted a campaign to offset the effectiveness of the protest, said this week that there was a "5 to 1 white-over-Negro margin" and that this freed Montgomery politics of a balance-of-power impact in local elections.

MIA leaders said that in spite of the "campaign of intimidation and wholesale arrests" that the refuse-to-ride protest was standing up under the counter-attack. "Our gorup is not riding the buses," the Rev. King said. He added that bus service had been restored in all of the communities.

A general mass meeting was scheduled for Monday night, January 30 at First Baptist Church pastored by the Rev. Ralph Abernathy.

In a quarter-page ad January 27 in The Montgomery Advertiser, The Montgomery Improvement Association said:

"On December 25, 1955, there was released through these columns from the Negro Citizens of Montgomery explaining the reasons the protest had been staged."

"Since recent public pronouncements have attempted to cloud and distort issues in the protest, we feel that further explanation is needed."

"Negroes want the entire citizenry of Montgomery to know that at no time have we raised the race issue in the movement, nor have we directed our aim at the segregation laws. We are interested in a calm and fair consideration of the situation which has developed as a result of dissatisfaction over bus policies."

"The protest, which has been a non-violent method of bargaining, has been used in a democratic society to secure redress of greivances. This technique, however, has caused some of the leaders of the city to inject unrelated issues — such as "destruction of the Social fabric" or "the southern tradition," which we feel is an effort to evade the real issues involved."

RACE RELATIONS

"We have used the non-violent approach and have sought relief for our complaints within the framework of the law. We deplore any attempt to pit one race against the other. And we are amazed that there are among us those who could impute any sinister motive other than the request submitted to the Bus Officials and the City Commission. We believe that our proposals, if considered fairly, will help to improve race relations in Montgomery."

DEMOCRACY

"As we interpret the democratic way of life, we are convinced that it gives to each citizen equal opportunities and privileges to enjoy the benefits of what ever service he is able to pay for, so long as he does not infringe upon the rights of others. Under the present policies of the bus company the rights of Negroes have been infringed upon repeatedly. Up until now our proposals have not been given fair consideration. We have no alternative, therefore, but to continue the bus protest until something fair, just and honorable has been done in our behalf."

THE CHRISTIAN WAY

"We live in a Christian community in which brotherhood and neighborliness should prevail among all people. We can only rely upon these principles to guide those in authority and other people of influence to see that the Christian way is the only way of reaching a satisfactory solution to the problem."

SIGNERS

Stating the message was submitted "to all of the citizens of Montgomery in the name of Him who brought Peace on Earth and Good Will to All Men," it listed as signers Negro Ministers and Congregations, Baptist Ministers' Conference, the Rev. H. B. Hubbard, president; Methodist Ministers' Conference, the Rev. J. W. Hayes, president; the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, the Rev. L. R. Bennett, president; Montgomery Improvement Association, Dr. M. L. King, president and the Citizens Coordinating Committee, Rufus Lewis, president.

Put 'Sweets' in Pastor's Gas Tank

Boycott's Enemies Turn To Sugar in Montgomery

Courier Sat. 1-28-56 P.3 Pittsburgh, Pa.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Enemies of the Rev. Robert S. Graetz, white, a key figure in the boycott of Montgomery's city buses, are using "sweet" tactics in an effort to get even with the Lutheran minister.

Vandalism was injected into the dispute over jim-crow transportation facilities here when "unknown parties" put sugar into the gas tank of the Rev. Mr. Graetz's car and also cut up his tires.

The Rev. Mr. Graetz is pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church which is located in a heavily populated area of this town and whose congregation is largely Negro.

THE REV. Mr. Graetz had been using his car to transport workers to and from their jobs as part of the boycott campaign which has cost the local bus line dearly in revenue.

The Rev. Mr. Graetz has been the target of innumerable phone calls, many of which commended him for his stand in support of the boycott. He revealed that out of twenty-nine calls, twelve were from whites and nine from Negroes that could be classified as "friendly."

Eight other calls were "unfriendly" and four of these calls were "hostile."

* * *

ONE PERSON warned him to get out of town. Another white man wrote, "May you have for a son-in-law the blackest Negro that ever originated from the wilds of Africa." Still another said, "Pastor, if I was you I wouldn't call myself a pastor. You're a no-good s—— b——."

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers also called and, according to the pastor, said, "You know I don't agree with what you believe but I do believe that every man has the right to his own beliefs."

Sellers also pledged the minister that the police department would afford him with protection.

Memphis Hears 'Montgomery Story' By Dr. Wilson At May 17 Meeting

World, Birm, Ala. Tues. 5-22-56

By RAYMOND F. TISBY

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — (SNS) —

"God was in the plan" of the Montgomery bus protest movement avowed Dr. A. W. Wilson, Montgomery minister and a leader in the now world famous protest move, keynoting a May 17 mass meeting Thursday at Metropolitan Baptist Church, sponsored by the Ministers and Citizens League.

"I say that God was in the plan," declared Dr. Wilson, pastor of the Holt Street Baptist Church in Montgomery and vice president of the Alabama State Baptist Convention, "because every move against us has only served to solidify us and more so because Montgomery Negroes, like Negroes everywhere who had never stuck together more than one week have been united in the move for all these months."

Rev. Wilson said there is no hatred, no bitterness, no desire to fight on the part of Montgomery Negroes "but we just decided we would stop paying our money to be mistreated and to start walking."

Tracing the incidents which led to the protest movement the Rev. Mr. Wilson charged that the bus operators were disrespectful to Negroes, made them pay at the front door and then walk around to the back door, threw their change on the floor, forced them to move on the bus and made them stand when plenty seats were available.

The situation "came to a head" Rev. Wilson stated when Mrs. Rosa Parks, "a moral, intelligent churchwoman whom the Lord told to stand her ground" was arrested for refusing to move from her bus seat.

Mrs. Parks was arrested on a Friday, Dr. Wilson revealed, adding that "out of nowhere" some 250 pamphlets appeared stating: "They have arrested another. Too much has happened. Stay off of buses Monday."

"Now, Montgomery has a population of some 50,000 Negroes and you can imagine how many people those 250 pamphlets would have reached," Dr. Wilson pointed out, "but God was in the plan as the local paper received one of those pamphlets and ran it on the front page giving more publicity than we ever would have had."

That Monday following Mrs. Parks' arrest a mass meeing was held at the Rev. Wilson's church attended by some 5,000 Negroes and the movement "which the white man calls a boycott, but Negroes call it a protest" began.

Prior to the protest move some 30,000 Negroes rode the buses daily but after the move began less than 300 are now riding, he said.

Montgomery Negroes, Dr. Wilson felt, have now set up a transportation system "that operates more efficiently than the city line ever did."

Some 300 private cars plus 13 station wagons recently purchased by 13 Montgomery churches thru the Montgomery Improvement Association are used to transport Negroes throughout Montgomery. "Nobody gets paid," Dr. Wilson said, explaining that the MIA only buys the gas and oil for the cars.

Dr. Wilson, one of the 90 bus protest leaders indicted in the bus trouble, said any Montgomery Negro minister who has not been indicted "is not recognized."

Citing the role of the minister in the Montgomery incident the visiting pastor charged the church "must be interested in more than walking the golden streets of heaven."

"The Negro minister is the one real leader of the race and it is time we start giving the followship the type of leadership they need and want," he avowed.

Dr. Wilson, who pointed out that he was speaking on the night of the second anniversary of the May 17, 1954 public school ruling by the Supreme Court, declared "I'm glad I'm not God tonight."

"At least two kinds of prayer are going up to God today. The colored man in the South and some of his brothers all over the world are giving thanks to God for what we call the second Emancipation . . . In this same South . . . there are meetings of White Citizens Councils . . . protesting what they call Black Monday. The Lord has to answer both sides," he declared.

Referring to the Ministers and Citizens League current drive to boost the number of Negro voter registrants here and the easy manner in which Negro Memphians can become voters, he felt that any Memphis Negro who fails to register "ought to be ashamed of himself!"

Also warning "don't let anybody turn you against the NAACP" the militant Montgomery minister asserted "the Negro in the South must speak up in character and let the world know that he doesn't want any more or any less than any other decent citizen wants."

The Rev. D. L. Varnado, pastor of the Jackson Avenue Baptist Church, introduced the speaker. Others appearing on the program were the Rev. Henry C. Bunton, league president; the Rev. D. W. Browning, the Rev. Roy Love, Lt. George W. Lee, Dr. J. E. Walker, the Rev. T. M. Davis and the choirs of Mt. Olive CME Church, St. Mathew Baptist Church and Collins Chapel CME Church. The Rev. S. A. Owen was host minister.

Birmingham may be 3rd boycott city

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. 7-21-56

(Special to AFRO)

BIRMINGHAM — "There have been rumors of a boycott but we have not discussed that yet."

"We are going to try and use good will in this situation but we will continue to meet and to work out plans for future action."

This was the statement that came on Saturday from the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, as he commented on the organization's request for an end to segregatiion on the city's bus lines.

* * *

THE GROUP MADE its request of the Birmingham Transit Co. on Tuesday in a letter which asked:

(1) Seating on a first come, first served basis, (2) the removal of discriminatory signs, and (3) the employment of colored drivers.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth said the letter also asked company officials to meet with the group's executive committee within the next 30 days to discuss the bus situation.

Up until Saturday, the minister said no answer had been received from the company, nor any indication given of the action, if any, they plan to take.

* * *

MEANWHILE, the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth said that a similar letter was being sent to the City Commissioners and a meeting requested so "that the lines might be clearly drawn."

The clergyman explained:

"We don't believe the Commissioners have a right to say who the company will hire and we want to find out exactly where they stand."

The mention of a possible boycott was made by Mayor James W. Morgan following the sending of the letter to the bus company. He said in part:

"I do not think that our colored people here are going to unite in anything of that type which would bring bad publicity to our city. Our facilities here are good. Everything that could be done has been done."

Afro-American

TO THIS, the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth answered:

The colored people of Birmingham have as much courage as the people of Montgomery and Tallahassee (where bus demonstrations have been held) and they will follow the right kind of leadership. 7-21-56

"Some people say that the people of Birmingham won't stick together, but time will answer that."

The minister also said that the request for an end to bus segregation "could possibly serve as the opening move in a campaign to improve the economic position of the city's colored population.

"We are part of this economy and we should get some of the dressing from this economy rather than the crumbs that fall from the table."

The minister charged that Birmingham's colored citizens have in the past been relegated to "menial jobs" and declared:

"We should share in the economy like everyone else."

* * *

THE ALABAMA Christian Movement for Human Rights, which the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth heads, was organized last June 5 after the ban on the NAACP and is pledged to:

"The removal from our society any forms of second-class citizenship."

According to the minister, the group, which meets on Monday night in various churches, has earned the support of the people and at its last meeting attracted an audience of some 1,500 persons.

To date, the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth said he had received a number of messages of support and none that opposed the move to end segregation in the buses.

The minister, who heads the Bethel Baptist Church, said that while there had been rumors of a boycott, his group had not discussed such a possibility.

But he emphasized that while the group awaits word from the company, it will continue to work out plans for future action, and that a boycott might "probably be discussed."

MEANWHILE in Tallahassee 15,000 bus boycotters are wondering what has become of the pro-civil rights organizations throughout the country.

Not one has rendered them any financial aid during their seven-week protest against "humiliating segregation" on the city's buses.

This was revealed Friday by Daniel Speed, motor pool director of the Inter-Civic Council, which is directing the mass protest movement.

Tallahassee citizens have borne the brunt of financial sacrifices, themselves, in addition to walking weary miles operating their own cars for the benefit of stranded neighbors and being subjected to police harassment for refusing to yield to pressures brought to bear upon them to ride segregated buses.

NEITHER INDIVIDUAL nor group contributions have reached the Inter-Civic Council, in sizeable amounts, from outside the state, Mr. Speed disclosed when baring plans to hold a sacrificial mass meeting this Sunday, when offerings from $10 to $1,000 would be accepted.

"We need six more station wagons to keep our motor pool operating," he pointed out," and therefore we are asking our members for major gifts.

At a former mass meeting the previous Sunday, the council again rejected a compromise proposal for ending the boycott submitted by the Tallahassee City Commission to a committee the previous Wednesday, and reaffirmed their determination to do without public transportation until they get integrated seating.

THE COMMISSIONERS had renewed an offer to permit colored patrons to sit where they wished on buses except for one three-passenger seat reserved for white patrons.

The mass meeting unanimously approved two other commission proposals under which bus drivers would show courtesy to all patrons and colored drivers would be employed for predominately colored routes within 60 days.

The bus protest began on May 28, after two coeds at Florida A. and M. College had been arrested for sitting in seats reserved for white riders.

* * *

AT A THIRD meeting, Wednesday, July 11, the negotiating committee of ICC decided not even to present to the general membership the commissioners' latest compromise offer, because the proposal for segregated seating was still contained in it.

The strikers' main objective is "a first-come, first-served" seating policy.

Meanwhile, it was announced by the Cities Transit Company, which on July 1 had ceased operating in Tallahassee because of its loss of 70 percent of its revenue due to the boycott, that it would resume bus operations on a segregated-seating basis, but over altered routes.

* * *

CHARLES L. CARTER, manager of the firm, said the company was acting in response to the city's Chamber of Commerce, which had pledged its efforts to increase patronage among whites in a ride-the-bus campaign.

Whites, in this city of 40,000, have been without transportation for two weeks and the downtown merchants have been feeling the pinch of lack of customers because of this situation.

Carter made it plain that the new bus routes would cater to white people by operating only in white areas and at such times as the bulk of white riders needed transportation.

* * *

MR. SPEED said that no action has been planned by the ICC, "legally or otherwise" to keep the bus company from renewing its services.

"The spirit is good here," he commented, "they'll have their bus line and we'll have our motor pool. We have not sought a franchise to operate buses," he added.

He said that the Junior Chamber of Commerce, in cooperation with the White Citizens Council was spearheading the drive to get buses back on the street for the "walking whites of Tallahassee."

* * *

"HARASSMENT of motor pool drivers by some Tallahassee policemen has become a pattern in the downtown areas," Mr. Speed said, adding that his own son Leonard D. Speed, 23, had been arrested and ticketed for traffic violation just last week.

The young man, a veteran of four years in the U.S. Navy with an honorable discharge, was profanely abused by the arresting officer and fined $30 because he did not stop "long enough" at a stop sign, a violation usually costing only $3.

"He was pretty bitter because he was not even permitted to show his papers to prove he was a discharged veteran and because he was cursed at,"

Transcripts Ready For Boycott Trial

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) — A way was cleared last week for an appeal of the circuit court decision that convicted Rev. Martin L. King, president of the Montgomery Improvement Association and leader of the hard-hitting Negro bus boycott here, when bulky transcripts of the court records involved in the case were completed.

The noted minister was convicted last March of an ancient law charging him with illegal boycotting.

He was found guilty of "fostering an illegal boycott against Montgomery City Transit company."

Rev. King has since headed a powerful Negro crusade to stop riding buses in protest of Alabama's segregated seating system.

The vast record of testimony and evidence in the trial, prepared by a court reporter, will be the largest ever present in a circuit court for a single case.

More than 560 pages are included in the report, requested by Rev. King's attorneys for an appeal of his conviction to the State Court of Appeals.

The Rev. King case became a test case for the indictment of more than 90 prominent Negro leaders accused of promoting the boycott.

Montgomery Citizens Push Bus Protest Despite Arrests

Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., one of the leaders in the "fair bus seating" campaign here which is entering its ninth week was arrested January 26 on "speeding" charges.

He is president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, one of the groups which is leading the protest against the Montgomery City Lines for alleged mistreatment of Negro passengers on the franchised intra-city buses.

The Rev. King said he was arrested after police trailed him for 10 blocks, carted him off to city jail, and fingerprinted him. He was held in jail about 15 minutes.

The militant Baptist minister said that he was charged with exceeding the 25 mile speed limit, which he denied. Arresting officers said he was going 30 miles per hour.

Rev. King said that police officers trailed him as he left a pick-up stop, and when he discharged one of the occupants from his car, ordered him to pull over to the side and said, "You are under arrest."

He said that he was carried to the jail where police at first refused to allow anyone to sign his bond. He said that those who asked to let them make the bond were told they would have to get a bond from City Hall, which was closed.

Word of his arrest began to beat around town and crowds swarmed the scene where police held the militant pastor. Eyewitnesses said they believe police intended to try to keep the Rev. King in jail overnight.

As excited citizens poured to the scene police, according to eye-witnesses, told Rev. King he could be released upon a recognition bond, but released him without even giving him a bond to sign, the minister said.

The Rev. King said that police had begun widespread arrests "for the past three days" (Jan. 24, 25 and 26) in an effort he thought, to try to break up the citizens' free transportation system. "More than 100 traffic violation tickets have been issued and some of the car pool workers have been frightened off," the Rev. King said.

A five-man delegation Jan. 26 representing a partnership known as the Montgomery Transit Company asked the City Commission for a certificate of franchise for jitneys to serve areas effected by the protest.

Mayor Gayle who is leading the effort to break up the protest said that a decision on the jitney request would be handed down today (Jan. 31).

Meantime he made public a joint statement joined in by Commissioners Sellers and Parks which said: "If the Negroes want to ride a public vehicle, they can ride the city buses."

"There is an abundance of public transportation in Montgomery for those who want to use it. If there is a group of people who don't want to use this public transportation that is their fault."

"We stand firm in our position that the white people of Montgomery are not going to be coerced by the threats of Negroes now or any other time."

Filing the jitney petition were: Rufus A. Lewis, J. E. Pierce, J. W. Bonner, Thomas W. Gray and Ronald R Young

The petition argued that there was "a strong demand for this type of service."

Meantime the Central Alabama (White) Citizens Council, which has conducted a campaign to offset the effectiveness of the protest, said this week that there was a "5 to 1 white-over-Negro margin" and that this freed Montgomery politics of a balance-of-power impact in local elections.

MIA leaders said that in spite of the "campaign of intimidation and wholesale arrests" that the refuse-to-ride protest was standing up under the counter-attack. "Our gorup is not riding the buses," the Rev. King said. He added that bus service had been restored in all of the communities.

A general mass meeting was scheduled for Monday night, January 30 at First Baptist Church pastored by the Rev. Ralph Abernathy.

In a quarter-page ad January 27 in The Montgomery Advertiser, The Montgomery Improvement Association said:

"On December 25, 1955, there was released through these columns from the Negro Citizens of Montgomery explaining the reasons the protest had been staged."

"Since recent public pronouncements have attempted to cloud and distort issues in the protest, we feel that further explanation is needed."

"Negroes want the entire citizenry of Montgomery to know that at no time have we raised the race issue in the movement, nor have we directed our aim at the segregation laws. We are interested in a calm and fair consideration of the situation which has developed as a result of dissatisfaction over bus policies."

"The protest, which has been a non-violent method of bargaining, has been used in a democratic society to secure redress of greivances. This technique, however, has caused some of the leaders of the city to inject unrelated issues — such as "destruction of the Social fabric" or "the southern tradition," which we feel is an effort to evade the real issues involved."

RACE RELATIONS

"We have used the non-violent approach and have sought relief for our complaints within the framework of the law. We deplore any attempt to pit one race against the other. And we are amazed that there are among us those who could impute any sinister motive other than the request submitted to the Bus Officials and the City Commission. We believe that our proposals, if considered fairly, will help to improve race relations in Montgomery."

DEMOCRACY

World

DR. M. L. KING

"As we interpret the democratic way of life, we are convinced that it gives to each citizen equal opportunities and privileges to enjoy the benefits of what ever service he is able to pay for, so long as he does not infringe upon the rights of others. Under the present policies of the bus company the rights of Negroes have been infringed upon repeatedly. Up until now our proposals have not been given fair consideration. We have no alternative, therefore, but to continue the bus protest until something fair, just and honorable has been done in our behalf."

THE CHRISTIAN WAY

P. 6

"We live in a Christian community in which brotherhood and neighborliness should prevail among all people. We can only rely upon these principles to guide those in authority and other people of influence to see that the Christian way is the only way of reaching a satisfactory solution to the problem."

Montgomery's Bombing

The Talladega Daily Home

Talladega

RACIAL agitation and resentment of that agitation reached a regrettable climax at Montgomery last night when a bomb of some sort was hurled at the home of a Negro minister who has been a leader in the bus boycott of recent weeks.

Ed. 2-3-56

We deplore the situation. We condemn in precisely equal measure the hoodlums who hurled the bomb and the minister who helped to bring on unbearable tension by deliberately working to create a crisis over racial segregation in public transportation.

The City of Montgomery has posted a reward of $500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the bombers. That is an action which all right-thinking people will commend.

Under Montgomery city law segregation of the races is required in public conveyances.

Montgomery

The boycott began when a Negro woman was found guilty of violating that law and given a moderate fine.

From week to week the tension has mounted. The boycott leaders, this particular minister loud among them, have turned down proposal after proposal designed to meet whatever complaints Negro passengers might have had.

P. 4-A

Their refusal to go half way in the situation made it perfectly plain that their goal was not an agreement reached in Montgomery's traditional understanding and good will between the races, but the breeding of animosity and controversy in order to attack segregation.

The incident but points up the necessity for calmness on the part of both white and Negro as Alabama charts her course for the difficult days ahead.

Negro Man Jailed For Bus Boycott Row

Post-Herald Sat. 1-28-56 P. 11

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 27 (AP)—A Negro accused of roughing up a Negro woman because she wouldn't join a boycott of city buses was sentenced to 10 days in jail here today and fined $54.

Thomas Carter, 31, of Montgomery, was charged with assault and battery on a warrant signed by Beatrice Jackson, also of Montgomery.

The woman told Judge John Scott in City Court that Carter accused her of "acting smart" by riding buses despite the 8-week-old Negro boycott against Montgomery City Lines.

She said the man knocked her to the ground, tore her jacket and threw a chair at her as she ran into her house.

Carter, however, insisted the boycott had nothing to do with the incident. He said he went to the woman's house to buy whisky and that a dispute arose while he was helping her move a television set and radio set to a taxicab.

Under court orders, police drove to the woman's house and returned with word that the TV set and radio were still in the house today.

Meanwhile, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal denied that the arrest of a boycott leader yesterday had anything to do with the bus controversy which started Dec. 5 after a Negro woman was arrested for refusing to move to the colored section of a bus.

The Rev. M. L. King, pastor of a downtown Baptist church, said his part in the boycott was to blame for police picking him up on a speeding charge. The Rev. King was fingerprinted and held for 15 minutes before being released on his own recognizance.

Ruppenthal said there has been "an undue number of arrests of Negroes since City Commission announced a new get-tough policy earlier this week.

"We are continuing to enforce the traffic laws without discrimination to any group," the police chief said.

The City Commission announced Monday that it would make no further efforts to settle the bus boycott, and appealed to white residents of Montgomery to refrain from giving Negroes rides or paying their taxi fares.

All three members of the commission announced they had joined the pro-white Central Alabama Citizens Council which is dedicated to preservation of segregation.

Negro Minister's Home In Alabama Bombed

Star T. P. 2-9 Tues. 1-31-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 31 (AP).—An explosion last night damaged a Negro minister's home in a new flareup of violence stemming from the prolonged boycott by Negroes of the city's transportation system.

Washington D.C.

Minutes after the blast the minister, the Rev. M. L. King, 27, who has been an outspoken leader in the boycott movement appealed to a crowd gathered at the scene to remain calm in the face of mounting racial tension here.

Police said either a hand grenade or dynamite shattered windows at the King home.

No one was injured.

This was the first violence reported since the first week of the boycott last December 5. Shots were fired at a few buses during that first week, but there were no injuries and little damage.

Origin of Movement

The protest movement against segregation laws applying to city buses was touched off by a $14 fine given Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro, who refused to move to the rear of a bus.

The Montgomery City Commission offered a reward of $500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the bombing.

Mr. King's wife, their 7-weeks-old daughter and Mrs. Roscoe Williams, a neighbor, were in the home when they heard a thud "like a brick hitting the front porch."

They ducked into a back room just as the explosion shattered windows, ripped a hole in the porch and cracked a porch column.

300 Negroes Gather

Arriving home 15 minutes after the explosion from a mass meeting at a church, Mr. King asked about 300 Negroes gathered outside his home to be "peaceful."

"Don't get panicky," he said. "Don't get your weapons. He who lives by the sword will perish by the sword. Remember that is what God says . . ."

Mr. King, pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, was fined $14 last Saturday for driving 30 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone. He denied the charge and blamed his arrest on Mayor W. A. Gayle's statement that the city commission was through "pusseyfooting around" with boycotters.

Bomb Home Of Alabama Bus Boycott Leader

Weekly P. 1 Sat. 2-4-56

Montgomery (Special).—The bombing of a Negro minister's home Monday night marked the second attempt in less than a week to "get back" at one of the leaders in the nine-week-old bus boycott dispute. In other actions the mayor joined a white citizen's council and urged a "get tough" policy to end the transit difficulties.

Reports indicated that slight damage was caused by a hurriedly tossed explosive from an automobile at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. It was stated that the bomb fell short of the intended target, falling in the yard and smashing windows in the house and damaging a support post.

New Orleans La.

The Rev. King was reportedly not at home when the bombing occurred. However, none of the members of his family, who were in the rear of the house, were injured.

The first sign of violence followed on the heels of Mayor W. A. Gayle's announced intentions of following a "get tough" policy. He charged that Negro leaders in the boycott "are after the destruction of our social fabric" and that "we have pussyfooted long enough."

Weekly 2-16

Issuing a statement warning whites against giving rides to Negro employees who refuse to ride the busses, the mayor said: "The Negroes are laughing at white people behind their backs—the white people who haul the maids and cooks to and from work. They think it's very funny and amusing that whites who are opposed to the Negro boycott will act as chauffeurs to Negroes . . ."

Police Com. Clyde Sellers announced the city's police have been ordered to "break up" Negro groups which he claims have been "loitering" at certain times of the day in white residential areas, apparently referring to persons who wait at designated spots for cars which have been supplying transportation.

The Rev. King was arrested last week on a "trumped up" speeding charge. It was said that the police had trailed him for ten blocks before making the arrest.

Word of the arrest began to travel around town and crowds swarmed to the scene when it appeared the officers had no intention of setting a bond. As the excited citizens poured to the scene, police, according to eye-witnesses, told the militant minister he could be released upon a recognition bond but released him without even giving him a bond to sign.

The arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks on Dec. 1 and fining her $10 four days later because she refused to stand to permit a white passenger to have her seat, set off the "refuse-to-ride" campaign. The conviction has been appealed to the circuit court but no date has been set for its hearing.

The officials have complained that the reduced bus loads growing out of the protest have resulted in a droppage of revenue. City officials, trying to aid the company, granted it a temporary 50 per cent bus fare raise.

Negro patrons before the protest gave the company 75 per cent of its bus riders. Company and city officials indicated that the protest has resulted in about a 90 per cent fall off in Negro riders.

Act Of Mercy

Advertiser Mon. 7-9-56

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — I read the article about the two white boys in Mississippi who saved the lives of three Negroes.

In behalf of the Negroes in Montgomery and throughout the United States, may I express our deep appreciation and heartfelt gratitude for the unselfishness, courage and goodwill it took for those boys to risk their lives to save those people.

Montgomery, Ala.

Negroes here and elsewhere in years to come, will remember and feel indebted to these and many others, some in our own city and state, who have gone out of their way and far beyond the call of duty to show acts of kindness, justice, and, as in this case, mercy. For such acts have done much to ease the tension and make us feel that we are a part of, not merely tolerated in, this great country. And for those of us who were born, and prefer to remain in the South, these recent acts performed by young people (though we regret the violence) make us feel that our children will have a better and more secure future, free from hatred and fear. And let us hope with less prejudice, and thus a better tomororw.

Enforce The Anti-Boycott Law

Editor, The Advertiser:

As one who has no financial interest in the bus company but who is interested as a native born citizen in not wanting to see the city bus system illegally destroyed, I would like to call your attention to the state law against boycott.

Title 14, Section 54, of the Alabama Code, provides that where two or more persons unlawfully enter into an understanding for the purpose of preventing the operation of a lawful business they shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Violation of this law is punishable by fine of not less than $100 or more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than six months for the first offense. It is unlawful for anyone to teach or advise others to violate this law.

An individual has the right to ride a bus or not as he or she sees fit and that right should not be interfered with and should be protected by the police, but when certain so-called leaders call a group together and organize a boycott they are taking the law into their own hands and should be prosecuted.

Whether the bus company or its drivers have or have not always themselves obeyed the law and given colored passengers their rights is not the question at all, because two wrongs do not make a right and there is always legal redress against the bus company for anything it does wrong.

The question is whether the officials whose duty it is to enforce the law are going to sit idly by and permit the illegal destruction of a transportation system which is most certainly needed by both races.

It seems to me that instead of granting the bus company an increase in rates at the expense of the general bus riding public, that the city administration would have done better to have enforced the law against boycotts.

A copy of this letter goes to the county solicitor with the suggestion that he give consideration to presenting this matter to the grand jury when it meets at an early date.

Housewife Counter-Boycott

Editor, The Advertiser:

All conversations now seem to eventually get on the subject of the bus boycott but as Mark Twain remarked about the weather, "no one seems to do anything about it."

Although I have never had a maid to complain about any mistreatment by a bus driver I have heard of many cases of rudeness of the drivers towards Negro passengers.

Noticing since the boycott how most of the Negroes have become sullen and indolent I feel perhaps the bus drivers dealing with these people collectively have seen a side of them that we dealing with them singly have not seen and evidently the patience of the most tactful drivers has been tried. There are many Negroes like Julie Seale Harris (Grandma, Jan 4th) that want to ride the busses but are afraid to. Where are these people getting this fear and who is putting this fear into them that they cannot ride to work or to town without being afraid of bodily harm?

I think those people who want to ride the bus should band together and ride the bus. There is safety in numbers. On the other hand, most of us housewives have been patient through this past month, allowing our household servants to be late and to leave early when a ride is available (most of the servants taking advantage of us).

The time has come when we housewives must quit being so lazy, get together and tell the help to either ride the busses and get to work on time or quit.

We white people have tried to be understanding of our servants for years and I feel we were understanding until some outside influence put fear in them.

We have been good to our Negroes but now is the time to make them understand a few things. We should quit paying taxi fare, quit going for them or taking them home, quit paying their social security tax, quit lending them money for debts contracted for unnecessary items, etc.

I am very much interested in the fight Montgomery is having to preserve segregation. It is a fight for every Southerner to preserve our white race that our grandfathers bequeathed to us.

Fight in any and every way to prevent integration. Fight boycott with boycott. Don't employ any Negro who does not ride the bus. If they use private transportation, let them find other jobs.

Unbecoming Situation

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I am a former citizen of Montgomery but I want to correct Mrs. Samuel Rushing. If she read the Bible as she should she should know that nowhere in the Bible is it mentioned that God created white superior to black, or black superior to white.

Montgomery, Ala.

The Bible clearly tells us this. How can we love God whom we haven't seen and hate our brother whom we have seen? It's the individuals who are superior so far as intelligence is concerned. In the white race we have many individuals superior to other white, the same applies to colored I am white, but I consider that there are white people and there are Negroes too in this country superior to me.

P. 4-A

So far as the constitution is concerned, our forefathers, I am sure, would have written it different had they known how wicked we would have grown. Those good old Christian souls meant everything good. So let's not try and twist things on them.

As for the bus boycott I regret it very much. I am sure there are enough good white people and colored people in Montgomery to get together and settle this matter as it should be, and not allow the bad, selfish characters to dominate this most unbecoming situation.

Ministers Are Not Infallible

Editor, The Advertiser:

I would like to express my appreciation for Novelist Hurston's article which was printed in your Saturday paper. If more of the intelligent Negroes would only speak. You will notice that I said "intelligent" rather than educated. Certainly Novelist Hurston is both and we have some educated Negroes in Alabama and in Montgomery. We have more who are intelligent and maybe not so well educated. Why are they sitting back and letting the few agitators with less than their intelligence do the talking?

Certainly, as the Negro minister wrote last week, "Who, if not the ministers, are supposed to be closer to God and the church." You will notice that he didn't even profess to be closer, he said we are supposed to be closer. I think that we will all agree that even our most conscientious and religious ministers make mistakes and take a wrong turn sometimes—we will also agree that every minister who fills a pulpit is not a consecrated child of God. Oh, that we had no one in our pulpits and churches as leaders but those who are real children of God and led by the Holy Spirit!

Going back to Novelist Hurston's statement that a Negro who was really proud of his race would not want to force their mixing and associating with people who didn't want them. Do the Negroes in Montgomery really force themselves upon each other? Do we whites force our way into the society that looks a little more attractive or fashionable than the one we can afford to be in and actually belong in? If we do, then I can safely say, that person isn't enjoying the fullness of life.

What are our intelligent Negroes thinking about when they THINK they want to force their children into white schools where they are not wanted? Will those Negro children really be happy? Will they feel they belong? Rather don't you think they will have the feeling that they are ostracized, that they don't any longer belong in their own society nor in the white classes?

Don't misunderstand me, I was reared in the South on a farm and we had Negroes on our plantation. I was taught to respect them and do respect them. But the Bible says there is a time and place for all things. There is a place for each of us—but that doesn't mean mixing together in an undesired or unsatisfactory manner.

Biting The Hand That Feeds

Editor, The Advertiser:

It is unfortunate that Negro leaders have seen fit to employ a boycott. Like the U. S. Supreme Court, they have greatly erred. The writer has many friends of the Negro race, but he cannot imagine why any government should have the right to enforce the court's decision. No government should undertake the ramming of social equality down the throats of its people. That's what government is trying to do, and it is absurd. It cannot be done, and should not be tried. We must face that fact.

The white population has been good to the Negroes. In Montgomery the whites have provided excellent schools for the Negroes, and in other ways have helped them. Most Negroes appreciate all that. It is not right to "bite the hand that feeds you," and the boycotters should think about that. We should strive, as different races, to live peaceably, alongside each other. I am sure, if we do that, we shall all profit and be very happy.

Why Is It A Sin To Ride The Bus?

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Can you help some of us cooks? The folks tell us that they pass a law against the colored folks riding any bus. P.4-A

I don't have enough money to ride the taxicab. Last week it took $3.80 for taxicabs. The bus company has been mighty nice to me and so has our bus driver. He helps the old white folks and the old colored folks and is nice to all alike. I wanted to ride the bus and the bus driver said I could, but some folks told me I would get myself in trouble. Montgomery

Mr. Advertiser, can you please help us, so we can ride the bus. The preacher at our church told us not to ride—maybe a year or more, and that it would be a sin, but I don't see how it is a sin for colored folks to ride a bus. Ala.

The bus is more convenient for us. I get to my job late every morning since the boycott. The white lady I been working for is mighty nice to me and I want to stay on, but this boycott is hurting a lot of us colored folks. Please help us if you can and tell the mayor we want to ride the bus like we been doing all the time.

Overbearing Bus Drivers

Editor, The Advertiser:

As the magnificient and successful bus boycott continues I would like to make it a matter of record that there are white bus riders in Montgomery who are honoring the request of our colored friends by refraining from patronizing the City Lines in an effort to express our sympathy.

The plaintive plea of Mayor Gayle, calling for public support of bus service has a futile and hollow ring, coming from a man who has callously ignored the appeals of delegations who have called upon him repeatedly in the past for redress. Someone should scrawl across his office wall, "It is later than you think."

The demands of the Negro populace are extremely moderate and within the law. I challenge any legal light in the state to show how these modest requests are outside of the law, though city hall politicians, City Lines counsel, and curbstone lawyers continue to prattle about the sacrosanct inviolateness of state statutes.

Man and boy, I have ridden street cars and buses in Montgomery for over 40 years. Seamy and sordid have been the scenes I have witnessed. The charges brought by the Negro protestants in their paid advertisement of Dec. 25, are confirmed by personal observation many times over. Has the bus company ever conducted a training program among its drivers stressing curtesy and consideration to its customers?

There are bus drivers who are courteous to both races, but has any effort been made to weed out the belligerent, overbearing and profane drivers who have caused most of the trouble? Would any responsible businessman permit his employes to insult his customers in such ways and expect to remain in business? Are our city fathers less aware of their responsibility than the leaders of Mobile and Houston, Texas? Are our newspapers less capable of keeping citizens abreast of the changing times than the publications of those two cities? Are those of us who sympathize too timid to make our views known? There is ample blame to share among all of us.

Answering the mayor's appeal to save the franchise by patronizing the bus lines, here is one white ex-bus rider who would like to declare that as long as the bus boycott is on, it will be a dreary, rainy day, when I have a sprained ankle, and less than 45c cab fare, before I board one of those yellow rolling cell blocks again.

COMMISSIONER AT CIVIC CLUB

Sellers Asserts 'Fear' Keeping Negroes Off Buses

Advertiser

Eighty-five to 90 per cent of the Negroes of Montgomery want to ride the Montgomery City Lines buses again but they are remaining off the buses because of a fear of physical violence, a city commissioner told a civic club here yesterday. Wed. 1-18-56

Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers added in a talk at the Montgomery Junior Chamber of Commerce that if the Negroes received all of the demands they are asking, it would require twice as many policemen as are now on the city force to maintain order and protect the citizens on the buses. Montgomery

"The first come, first serve situation would create a problem bigger than any of us can visualize at this moment," he said. Ala.

The commissioner, giving no indication when he thought the boycott would end, said that it will continue as long as goon squads are in operation and there is a misunderstanding among Negroes about the reason for it.

"The vast majority of Negroes —85 to 90 per cent—want to ride the buses again. The other 10 to 15 per cent never have ridden the buses and never will ride the buses. They own automobiles and don't need the bus service. But it is this 85 to 90 per cent that do need the service and want to ride the buses again."

He said of the three demands urged by the Negroes, only one can be accepted even partially. That one is a request for more courteous service. He added that the state and city laws prevent the adoption of the demand for first, come first serve seating and the demand for 75 per cent of all bus drivers to be Negroes is "completely unworkable".

"It is tragic—more tragic than we realize—that the people of Alabama and particularly Montgomery, are sitting by and not taking an interest in the present situation caused by the bus boycott." P.9A Wed. 1-18-56

"It is a vital thing and means our life blood. We must at all cost strive to preserve our way of life and maintain the southern heritage of our fathers and forefathers. It is important and vital to our very existence as a people," he declared. Montgomery, Ala.

White women of Oregon write Ala. Negroes, "may we be worthy to claim fellowship . . ."

Tribune Mar. 3-30-56 P. 4

Los Angeles, Calif.

A news story in the Tribune of Mar. 9 has inspired 7 white women of Portland, Ore., who are "active in the Council of Churches, denominational leaders, members of the board of the YWCA, Naacp, Fellowship of Reconciliation, and American Friends Service committee" to write a letter to "Church Members of Montgomery, Ala.," care of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., bus boycott leader, humbly claiming "fellowship" with them.

The Tribune story, on the boycott and the philosophy of the leaders, gave them "the information and inspiration to write", Mrs. Ruth Haefner, of Portland, a regular Tribune reader, wrote.

Referring to the description of modern churches by a national Presbyerian official as "warrens for spiritual rabbits who want some magic formula to save their tender skins," the women's letter wanted the Alabamans to know that, "We are not rabbits.

"We believe in revolution," they wrote.

"We became aware of the world' need for change from the Mission Study program 'This Revolutionary Faith'. We, therefore, pride ourselves when we recognize the boycott . . . as a part of the revolutionary movement in the world today and the responsibility each individual Christian has to give it moral and economic support. . . .

"We sense what appears to be a movement — non-violent in character — toward correction of a very bad social practise. For some years we have observed . . . scattered throughout the South . . . a definite pattern . . . in that direction.

"We of the Northwest feel that you are far ahead of us. For if we had worked as hard as you, we would have wiped out the subtle practices of segregation and would not have waited until 1953 to pass a Civil Rights law. We still have much to accomplish here in Oregon. . . .

"Humility does not come easy for us. Though humility is one of the first attributes of a Christian, we find it difficult to practise. For sometime, we have wondered just how . . . it would be for us to change. . . . We have followed Lillian Smith's analysis from the time as a child when she first began to doubt, until her forthright presentation, 'Now Is The Time."

"We know that we have not made such a change. We question our strength. Had we been situated as Lillian Smith, in Georgia, Caroline Burks, in Oklahoma, and Thelma Stevens, in Louisiana, would we have been able to defy the traditions and cut new paths through the maze of segregation?

"You are like the early Christians — the kind Rev. Payne refers to. You know the price that must be paid for freedom and have the courage, conviction, and ask God for the Grace to see it through. . . .

"May we be worthy to claim fellowship with the church people of Montgomery."

Negro, White Bus Patrons Mostly Retain Old Pattern

Wash. Post Herald Sun. 4-26-56

Raleigh, N. C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 25. (UP)—Negroes sat freely with whites on buses in some southern cities today but the same hard core of resistance that has delayed school integration kept the races apart in many others.

Generally, the compliance with the new Supreme Court action foretelling the end of legal segregation in transportation, fell into what is becoming a familiar southern pattern.

Some cities in Virginia, North Carolina and eastern Tennessee, where faint beginnings have been made in integrated education, put up no barriers against first-come, first-served seating. But in most of them Negroes continued to take seats toward the rear, reluctant to make the first break from the old custom.

Segregation Stands.

The unyielding segregation stand was found in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi although bus lines serving some of their cities instructed drivers not to enforce segregation.

Local and state governments simply interposed their own segregation laws over the Supreme Court's implied authority.

Nowhere was this deadlock more vividly illustrated than in Montgomery where both state and city have threatened to prosecute the bus company, drivers and passengers, white or black, who try to bring about indiscriminate seating. The feeling persisted despite a 20-week boycott by Negroes of the segregated buses which has bitten deeply into the economy of the city.

The Negroes have not called off their boycott so the showdown has been delayed in Montgomery.

Actually, the Supreme Court's terse refusal to interfere with a ruling against segregation in a South Carolina case last Monday did not constitute an immediate order for mixed seating everywhere.

Attorneys in Washington said it left considerable room for legal maneuvering and a number of southern areas were taking advantage of it.

Some Mixing Reported.

Bus lines in Charleston and Columbia, S. C. are operated by the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., against which the suit that reached the Supreme Court was filed. The utility has not issued a formal statement of its intentions and the state insists its own segregation law still prevails. But it was reported several Negroes have ridden among whites in Columbia recently and the drivers did not interfere.

Some Negroes sat in front with whites in Richmond and Norfolk, Va. today where the Virginia Transit Co. formally ended segregated seating today and called for passenger cooperation. There were no incidents.

Bus companies in most North Carolina cities reported they have not enforced segregation for some time and that where it was continued it was done on a voluntary basis.

'They fight our battles'

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 3-24-56

WASHINGTON

"They are fighting our battles."

This is what James B. Cobb, president of the National Alliance of Postal Employees, stated in urging the organization's 100,000 members throughout the country to support the Montgomery protest movement with an hour's pay as well as prayers.

In a letter to the union's 115 branches, Mr. Cobb placed the weight of the national organization solidly behind the Montgomery movement and also urged members to support the NAACP.

* * *

REMINDING HIS membership that alliance members are involved in the Alabama terror, he urged the organization to send their tangible support to The Rev. M. L. King in the form of letters and communications. The Montgomery post office is 100 per cent organized by the NAPE, Mr. Cobb says.

"Our only answer to the equivocators and 'yes, but's' is a tremendous expression of support from an aroused people. If democracy is ever to be fully achieved, we cannot allow the isolation of small groups to be fully annihilated by tyrannic expression," Mr. Cobb said.

He further questioned the absence of action by the Federal Government "to relieve these people of persecution." The partial text of the letter to the branches is as follows:

"The colored citizens of Mountgomery, Alabama, are giving their all for first class citizenship for all of us. The NAPE has a large stake in this struggle, as the Montgomery Post Office is one of the few where the NAPE is 100 per cent organized.

"The leadership of the memorable boycott against bus segregation has been indicted for leading an illegal boycott. A day has been requested for every colored citizen to set aside one hour for prayer for these brethren who are struggling in this jungle of democracy. Of course they need one hour of prayer, but they also need our continued prayers.

"This office is requesting more. Give them economic weapons to defend themselves. Along with your prayers solicit your membership and give them one hour of pay.

"Write letters and give them encouragement in the name of the NAPE. Advise this office of your accomplishment so that recognition can be given to your branch in our magazine. Send your contributions to:

PIKE LAUDS CLERGY IN THE BUS BOYCOTT

Times Herald Mon. 3-26-56

Negro clergymen who are leading the bus boycott in the South are using a modern application of basic Christian precepts, the Very Rev. James A. Pike said yesterday in a sermon at New York Cathedral (St. John the Divine).

New York, N.Y.

"It's a great thing for the church of God that many of the people arrested are ministers of the gospel," he asserted.

He lauded the conduct of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, "a Christian minister, who like his Lord, is now a convicted criminal." He said that Dr. King's declarations of brotherly love had eased a tense situation that could have led to violence.

He referred to the explosion of a bomb in front of Dr. King's home and Dr. King's plea to the crowd that gathered to "love your enemies and let them know you love them."

Dean Pike, hailing a "struggle for the equality of man," compared the views of "the (unnamed) minister of the largest church of his denomination in the world" with those of an elderly Negro woman in Montgomery, Ala.

He quoted the minister: "Let them integrate. Let them associate with whites. But they are all infidels from the neck up."

He quoted the woman, explaining her refusal to ride in the segregated buses: "It used to be that my body rode, but my soul walked. Now my body may be tired, but my soul is free."

Judge flays U.S. for not acting in Ala.

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 4-7-56

WASHINGTON (ANP)—Judge Homer S. Brown of Allegheny County Court, Pa last week charged Federal officials with being unwilling to sit down and reason out the solution of the problem now facing this nation.

This unwillingness, said the jurist, has resulted in one of the greatest race problems of this era. He was referring chiefly to the Montgomery, Ala. bus boycott of colored people and other racial uprisings in the South.

Speaking at the annual luncheon meeting of the Washington Urban League, the Pennsylvania Judge said the Montgomery situation is "a challenge not only to the colored Americans, but to the law."

"What kind of situation is this when a person can be arrested for taking advantage of his right to ride on a public bus and then be arrested if he doesn't ride on a public bus?" asked the speaker.

Negro Boycott Driver Fined In Near Crash

Advertiser P. 30

A Negro bus boycott station wagon driver was fined $25 and costs yesterday in Recorder's Court for passing without seeing his way.

Montgomery, Ala.

The Rev. Burl Mack Averhart, of Peace Baptist Church, pleaded not guilty before Judge D. Eugene Loe when a state highway patrolman, C. E. Ward, testified Averhart had failed to yield the right-of-way to an emergency vehicle last week.

Ala. 11-7-34

Ward said Averhart passed an automobile which had pulled off the road into the path of his approaching state police car with emergency light flashing.

Averhart said he was unable to park behind the car in front of him and was forced to go beyond the parked vehicle. He said he not swerved across the middle road.

In other cases, Charlie H. Davis, 56, Negro laborer of 3307 E. Tuskegee St. was fined $100 and costs for leaving the scene of an accident.

P. 3-D

Johnny L. Jackson, 27, Negro nursery helper of 710 Dixie Dr., was fined $100 and costs for driving while intoxicated and $100 and costs for leaving the scene of an accident. Willie Penton, 24, Negro taxi driver of 1312 Mapler St., was fined $25 and costs for reckless driving. He was also fined $1 and costs for an improper tag.

Court Sanction Asked For Negroes' Car Pool

U. S. Judge Has Petition Requesting Ban On Interference By Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 1 (AP)—Bus-boycotting Montgomery Negroes beat city authorities to the punch today and asked for a Federal Court injunction to block any interference with their car pool.

The City Commission several days ago served notice of intentions to seek an order in state court to stop the Negroes from continued use of the motor pool which has provided transportation during the 11-month-old boycott of segregated city buses.

But before any action could be taken in court, Negro Attys. Fred Gray and Charles Langford petitioned U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. to prevent city officials or any others from interfering with the car pool service.

Johnson took no immediate action.

The Negro attorneys cited a City Commission resolution adopted Tuesday instructing city attorneys to take "any legal action they deem necessary" to stop the car pool from taking Negroes to and from work.

The commission disclosed last Friday that it was contemplating a court suit against the motor pool. The comment then came in reply to a threat from an independent labor spokesman, Jack D. Brock, to take court action if the city refused.

Gray and Langford charged in their injunction request today that the city is conspiring to "interfere with the civil and constitutional rights" of Montgomery Negroes who have refused to ride city buses since last Dec. 5.

The car pool which at one time numbered 250 to 300 privately owned automobiles was devised shortly after the boycott began.

Negro leaders asked the city for permission to operate a bus service of their own but were turned down.

Post Herald

In recent months, 20 or more church-operated station wagons have joined the car pool along with the privately owned autos.

Fri. 11-2-56

The petition in federal court contends the motor pool is legal and operated on a voluntary basis without charge to the riders.

Birmingham Ala.

After a county grand jury indicted 90 boycott leaders last Spring on charges of violating the state's anti-boycott law, some of the leaders testified the car pool was financed by contributions from Negroes here and elsewhere throughout the nation.

An organization called the Montgomery Improvement Assn. was formed to direct the mass bus protest and to operate the car pool. The petition today was filed in the names of the MIA, several Negro churches and other individuals.

Weary Ala. Bus Boycotters Take Victory With Dignity

Sat. 11-24-56

Recoiling from another startling thrust made at the heart of its beloved segregation, the South prepared to take up the shield of "states' rights" in defense against the rapier of a Supreme Court verdict which had seemingly punctured the color line on Dixie buses.

In Alabama, in Mississippi, in Georgia, in Tennessee, Florida and in the Carolinas the reaction of Southern whites to the Supreme Court's latest interpretation of the laws of the land was one of open defiance and an open pledging of themselves to use every device at their disposal to see that the Negro citizen is kept in his place.

Typical of the commentary was that of State Senator Sam Englehart, the executive secretary of the White Citizens Councils of Alabama, who belched, "The people of Alabama are not going to put up with integration."

C. C. Owen, president of Alabama's Public Service Commission, said that his state has put into effect a plan which calls for the continued segregation of Negro passengers in the interests of "public peace."

ACCORDING TO Florida's State Attorney General Richard Ervin, the Supreme Court decision means nothing "until direct suit is brought against our laws and city ordinances."

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi, "resting" at his farm home near Ackerman, was calm as he noted that "Our attitude about this decision will be the same as about the school segregation cases." With regards anyone attempting to enforce the ruling on Mississippi, Coleman said, "Anticipation would be a waste of time; we'll meet the situation as it arises."

In Memphis, Tenn., Roane Waring, president of the Memphis St. Railways Company, asserted that there would be no change in Memphis jim crow. He said, "We have a state law in Tennessee. Until it is declared unconstitutional . . . not some other law . . . we're going ahead as we are."

And, in the wake of these verbal blasts spoke one Rev. M. L. King of Montgomery, Ala., whose leadership in the 345-day bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala., paved the way for a chain of events leading to the Supreme Court action.

CALLING FOR "meaningful symphonies of spiritual harmony," the Rev. Mr. King told his cheering supporters at a mass meeting in a Montgomery church, "We must take this not as a victory over the white man, but with dignity . . . Don't go back to the buses and push people around . . . we are just going to sit where there is a seat . . . if someone pushes you, don't push back. I know this is a hard thing to do.

"Our western philosophy teaches us that in the end there can only be violence. But we must refuse to hit back. We must have the courage to refuse to fight back."

As the Rev. Mr. King spoke, a group of hooded Klansmen was meeting in another section of Montgomery.

Also, Luther Ingalls, head of the Montgomery White Citizens Council, promised that "any attempt to enforce this decision will inevitably lead to bloodshed and riot." And Englehardt made a phophecy that if the Supreme Court decision is enforced, "Montgomery will have an all-black bus line. I don't think the white people of Montgomery will ever submit to this. As far as I'm concerned, they can move the Montgomery City Lines, lock, stock, and barrel, to Washington, D. C."

The bus line had already confessed that it has lost three-quarters of a million dollars in revenue since the boycott began.

OVER IN Tallahassee, Fla., where another boycott has been under way, the protest leader, the Rev. C. K. Steele, observed that "in light of the Supreme Court decision . . . Tallahassee officials have an excellent opportunity to prove to the world that they believe in law, order, and democracy . . . If our city officials are sincere in their faith in the law of the land, they will not force us through a long court procedure to obtain that which many other Southern cities have already done without any court action."

Significantly, the Miami Daily News commented, "The end of segregation on buses in Miami is about as certain as anything can be and we might just as well adjust ourselves to the idea. It is a situation which calls for calmness and forbearance. Nothing is to be gained by senseless resistance to what is the law of the land."

Two Miami Negroes have promised to press their anti-segregation suit against the city.

IN HOUSTON, Tex., the Houston Transit Company was not affected in any way by the High Court verdict because its buses have been desegregated for some time since an ICC decision was handed down some months ago. At that time, Carl Fraser, Houston Transit prexy, stated, "Whatever the decision is or whatever the effect of the decision, we intend to obey the law."

Bus drivers have been warned by company heads not to jim crow. However, many Houston Negroes still comply with custom and walk meekly to the rear of city buses either by force of habit or ingrained inferiority.

In Atlanta Negro leaders were huddling in an effort to see whether or not they could start the ball rolling against jim crow on their city's public transportation facilities.

Out of this melange one thing remained certain, the South was in the middle of its biggest state of flux since the Clinton, Tenn., disorders and the Autherine Lucy riots.

South assails parley ordered by Brownell

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 20—Two attorneys general from the South today described a called Washington conference on bus segregation as a move "to interfere with states' rights."

Sun. 11-20-56

Atty. Gen. Brownell, in calling the conference of federal prosecutors from 14 Southern states, said the group should meet to discuss ways of carrying out the Supreme Court decree against racial segregation on the buses.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson of Mississippi said the conference "is just another instance of utter disregard of the rights of the states."

Florida's Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin said Brownell "will do more harm than good" if he attempts to force action to end segregated seating on intrastate buses in the South.

Taking the position that the Supreme Court decree knocked out only Alabama state laws and Montgomery city ordinances, Ervin said "Florida's bus segregation laws will stand."

WILLIAM L. LONGSHORE, U. S. district attorney at Birmingham, said, "I have no ideas in the matter at this time and would make no predictions on the outcome of the situation.

"I got a letter from Brownell, like all the other attorneys, and I plan to attend the conference to see what he has in mind.

LONGSHORE said he would reserve expression of opinion until he had noted the outcome of the conference.

Comment from Montgomery and Alabama officials was not immediately available on the call issued by Brownell.

In a letter to the prosecutors, Brownell said it is clear from the court's decision on the Montgomery case that racial discrimination against passengers on buses is "a crime against the United States."

Patterson and Ervin were quick to answer.

"If Brownell has any regard for the rights of the states, he also will discuss these matters with the state officials charged with the responsibilities of enforcing state laws," said Patterson.

Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi has said that Mississippi's segregation laws would be enforced throughout his administration under all legal means.

Ervin said "I don't think Brownell has any right to interfere with state laws.

"This is a question for the courts to determine, not the attorney general of the United States."

City to apply for rehearing

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 20 — (AP) — The City Commission said today it will ask the Supreme Court to reconsider its decision holding city and state bus segregation laws unconstitutional. 11-20-56

A request for rehearing will be filed with the court within the 25-day deadline beginning with announcement of the ruling Nov. 13.

City authorities had said privately that they have little hope of winning a rehearing in view of the unanimous action of the court in knocking the segregation laws out.

Negroes Lose Plea Asking Quick Action

P. 1

An attempt by Montgomery Negroes to hasten the day when integration of city buses goes into effect met with failure yesterday before the U.S. Supreme Court.

In a decision announced by Justice Hugo Black of Alabama, the court denied a plea by attorneys for Montgomery Negroes who sought immediate delivery of the formal court order on bus integration.

As had been previously announced by the court, the decision outlawing local bus segregation laws will not become effective until the official order is delivered to federal court here.

LONG DELAY

Normally, such orders require about 25 days for delivery, and it was this long delay which local Negro leaders sought to circumvent.

The ruling by the Supreme Court yesterday in effect held that the bus segregation decision would be handled just as any routine decision.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. head of the bus boycott-sponsoring Montgomery Improvement Association, declined comment on this setback last night. However, he indicated further legal steps might be taken in an effort to speed up delivery of the notice.

"I haven't had a chance to look into the decision, nor have I discussed it with our attorneys," King explained. "But we hope to agree on a new course of action as soon as possible."

OPPOSING SIDE

The delay of 25 days in mailing out such orders is necessary to permit the opposing side to appeal for a rehearing to the decision.

The opposing side in this case—the Montgomery City Commission and the Alabama Public Service Commission—has 15 days from the date of the decision to request a rehearing.

Neither side has made such a request as yet, but both are expected to do so before the 15-day deadline.

As a result of the delay, the court's order will probably be mailed about Dec. 12, and could be expected to be received here later that week.

BRIEF STATEMENT

Justice Black handled the case yesterday in his capacity as presiding judge of the 5th U. S. Circuit Court. However, he issued a brief statement saying he had consulted with the eight other Supreme Court justices and found them "in agreement with my views" that the request for immediate issuance of the official notice be turned down.

Attorneys for the local Negroes filed their motion for quick action Saturday, declaring it was "of great public importance that the opinion or order and judgment of this court (be) issued forthwith."

In essence, segregation as a legal instrument is dead.

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — I read the article about the two white boys in Mississippi who saved the lives of three Negroes.

Mon. 1-9-56

In behalf of the Negroes in Montgomery and throughout the United States, may I express our deep appreciation and heartfelt gratitude for the unselfishness, courage and goodwill it took for those boys to risk their lives to save those people.

Montgomery

Negroes here and elsewhere, in years to come, will remember and feel indebted to these and many others; some in our own city and state, who have gone out of their way and far beyond the call of duty to show acts of kindness, justice, and, as in this case, mercy. For such acts have done much to ease the tension and make us feel that we are a part of, not merely tolerated in, this great country. And for those of us who were born, and prefer to remain in the South, these recent acts performed by young people (though we regret the violence) make us feel that our children will have a better and more secure future, free from hatred and fear. And let us hope with less prejudice, and thus a better tomororw.

Enforce The Anti-Boycott Law

Editor, The Advertiser:

As one who has no financial interest in the bus company but who is interested as a native born citizen in not wanting to see the city bus system illegally destroyed, I would like to call your attention to the state law against boycott.

Title 14, Section 54, of the Alabama Code, provides that where two or more persons unlawfully enter into an understanding for the purpose of preventing the operation of a lawful business they shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Violation of this law is punishable by fine of not less than $100 or more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than six months for the first offense. It is unlawful for anyone to teach or advise others to violate this law.

An individual has the right to ride a bus or not as he or she sees fit and that right should not be interfered with and should be protected by the police, but when certain so-called leaders call a group together and organize a boycott they are taking the law into their own hands and should be prosecuted.

Whether the bus company or its drivers have or have not always themselves obeyed the law and given colored passengers their rights is not the question at all, because two wrongs do not make a right and there is always legal redress against the bus company for anything it does wrong.

The question is whether the officials whose duty it is to enforce the law are going to sit idly by and permit the illegal destruction of a transportation system which is most certainly needed by both races.

It seems to me that instead of granting the bus company an increase in rates at the expense of the general bus riding public, that the city administration would have done better to have enforced the law against boycotts.

A copy of this letter goes to the county solicitor with the suggestion that he give consideration to presenting this matter to the grand jury when it meets at an early date.

Housewife Counter-Boycott

Editor, The Advertiser:

All conversations now seem to eventually get on the subject of the bus boycott but as Mark Twain remarked about the weather, "no one seems to do anything about it."

Although I have never had a maid to complain about any mistreatment by a bus driver I have heard of many cases of rudeness of the drivers towards Negro passengers.

Noticing since the boycott how most of the Negroes have become sullen and indolent I feel perhaps the bus drivers dealing with these people collectively have seen a side of them that we dealing with them singly have not seen and evidently the patience of the most tactful drivers has been tried. There are many Negroes like Julie Seale Harris (Grandma, Jan 4th) that want to ride the busses but are afraid to. Where are these people getting this fear and who is putting this fear into them that they cannot ride to work or to town without being afraid of bodily harm?

I think those people who want to ride the bus should band together and ride the bus. There is safety in numbers. On the other hand, most of us housewives have been patient through this past month, allowing our household servants to be late and to leave early when a ride is available (most of the servants taking advantage of us).

The time has come when we housewives must quit being so lazy, get together and tell the help to either ride the busses and get to work on time or quit.

We white people have tried to be understanding of our servants for years and I feel we were understanding until some outside influence put fear in them.

We have been good to our Negroes but now is the time to make them understand a few things. We should quit paying taxi fare, quit going for them or taking them home, quit paying their social security tax, quit lending them money for debts contracted for unnecessary items, etc.

NEGROES' BOYCOTT CRIPPLES BUS LINE

Times

Carrier in Montgomery, Ala., Increases Fares to Offset Loss of Business

Sun. 1-8-56

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 7 —The boycott of Montgomery bus lines by Negro riders entered its second month this week with no conciliation in sight.

As a result of the bus company's loss of revenue in the boycott, the City Commission Wednesday raised fares 50 per cent: adult fares from 10 to 15 cents, school fares from 5 to 8 cents. The commission also authorized a 5 cent charge for transfers, which have heretofore been free.

New York

Asking for the increase, the bus company cited losses averaging 22 cents a mile since the boycott began Dec. 5. The losses would run even higher, company spokesmen said, except for a curtailment in service that has reduced mileage by 31 per cent.

Shortly after the boycott began, virtually all service to Negro communities was abolished. Two routes, serving predominantly Negro areas, were abandoned entirely and other routes revised so as to exclude Negro neighborhoods along them.

Negro Woman Convicted

The boycott began with the arrest and conviction of Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress employed by a downtown department store. Mrs. Parks had refused to give up her seat when told to do so by the bus driver.

At the time the incident occured, there were twenty-six Negroes and ten white persons seated in the thirty-six-passenger bus. Law requires the bus driver to segregate the passengers but leaves it within his discretion where the line is to be drawn. Thus, on many routes serving populous Negro areas it is not uncommon to see Negroes occupying all but a few seats.

When the driver asked Mrs. Parks and three other Negroes to give up their seats, a number of white persons were about to board. There were already some white persons standing as well as a number of Negroes. The driver explained later in court that he was "equalizing" seating facilities.

Mrs. Parks refused to yield her seat and was arrested for violation of a city segregation ordinance. Later the charge was changed to read a violation of a state law, which gives bus drivers the power to assign and reassign seating. The law makes it a misdemeanor for anyone to disobey the driver's orders.

Mrs. Parks was found guilty in City Recorder's Court and fined $10. Her attorneys filed notice of appeal. At a mass meeting in a local Negro church the night following the court hearing, Negro citizens were urged not to ride the buses. The following morning Negro patronage was down by an estimated 90 per cent. Today it is close to 100 per cent off.

Conditions Laid Down

Negro citizens, led by virtually all the city's Negro ministers, have demanded that three conditions be met before they resume riding the buses. These are:

¶Adoption of a "first-come-first-served" rule as is in effect in other Alabama cities such as Mobile and Huntsville. Under this plan Negroes would continue to load from the rear and whites from the front, but the seating, once established, would remain fixed.

¶Greater courtesy on the part of drivers. Negro bus riders have complained of rude, insulting treatment.

¶Employment of Negro drivers on routes serving predominently Negro areas.

A bi-racial committee, appointed by the City Commission, has so far failed to resolve any of the differences. The company contends that it cannot adopt a "first-come-first-served" policy and comply with the segregation laws. Negotiations have been broken off, for the time at least.

Bus-riding Protest In 46th Day; Renewal Of Franchise Postponed

Birmingham World P. 1

Fri. 1-20-56

Montgomery, Ala. — (SNS) — A 46-day protest by the Negro group against alleged unpleasant treatment on the Montgomery city buses still has transit service curtailed here. Birmingham

Caught in a three-way deadlock between city officials, bus company representatives and protest leaders some bus-riders have taken aholiday from riding. Ala.

The protest started Dec. 5 after the fining of Mrs. Rosa Parks, church worker and civic leader, who was arrested Dec. 1 and charged with violating the Montgomery and Alabama bus segregation law. The conviction was appealed to circuit court but no date has been set for its hearing.

The Montgomery City Lines, owned by the National City Lines of Chicago, and the Montgomery City Commission were expected to discuss the renewal of the franchise Tuesday but the city officials indicated that because of a heavy agenda of business they were unable to consider the matter. It has been widely believed that the Chicago owned bus company was putting the final touches upon its application for franchise renewal.

Two representatives of the Montgomery Improvement Association were reportedly at the commission meeting January 17 and declined to accept the suggestion from one of the city officials that the protest group return to bus-riding.

This city official reportedly told the MIA delegation that the city executives could not grant the proposed revised seating arrangement and the suggested employment of Negro bus operators. A third MIA proposal is that of more courteous treatment of bus-riders who currently are staying off the buses.

Renewal of the bus franchise has apparently been one of the prime goals of the city officials. They granted a 50 per cent fare raise to the bus company and prior to this Mayor W. A. Gayle issued a proclamation urging the public to ride the buses more.

Meantime the Central Alabama (White) Citizens Council headed by Macon County Senator Sam M. Englehardt, Jr. of Shorter, Ala. has conducted a newspaper ad campaign appealing to the white people to support the bus company. Some ads stated that the CA(W)CC feared that unless the MCL was able to offset losses resulting from the protest the company might not care to renew its franchise.

Public Safety Commissioner City Seller told the Civitian Club Tuesday that in his opinion the reason members of the Negro group were not riding the buses as they formerly did was because they were afraid to do so. The CA(W)CC of which Commissioner Sellers joined Jan. 6 has also expressed in ads the belief that a section of the population was refraining from riding the buses because of fear.

MIA leaders have denied that any pressure, fear or intimidation were being used to keep any one desiring to ride the buses from doing so. The Rev. M. L. King, Jr. president of the Montgomery Improvement Association and pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church has repeatedly asserted that "90 per cent (of the protest group(was refusing to ride the buses because of principle and about 8 per cent because of shame".

Nobody is being arrested for allegedly using "fear" to prevent others from riding the buses.

Five share-the-kindness mass meetings were scheduled in an equal number of communites last night. Protest leaders were expected to report on new developments in the seven week old refuse-to-ride campaign. Thirteen general mass meeting have been held.

The Rev. King said the meeting program has been changed so that a general spiritual rally is held every Monday night and five neighborhood meetings are conducted every Thursday night.

Says U. S. Has No Right To Try To Prevent Economic Pressures

Wed. 1-11-56

Post-Herald Capital Bureau

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10—Sen. J. Strom Thurmond (D., S. C.) today said the federal government has no right to try to prevent Negroes or whites from using economic pressures to obtain their objectives.

He declared, in an obvious reference to the current Negro boycott of the city bus system in Montgomery, Ala., that "the federal government has no right to try to force those Negroes to ride the buses or to stay off them."

The South Carolinian, the 1948 States Rights Democrat candidate for President, aimed his remarks at President Eisenhower's proposal to create a federal civil rights commission to investigate "unwarranted economic pressures."

Assuming the President's proposal is aimed at Negroes and whites alike, he said that whether the pressures involve Negroes or whites the issue is a matter of state jurisdiction.

He said the President's proposal will not pass "as long as I am able to stand and fight on the floor of the Senate."

In proposing the commission in his state of the union message, President Eisenhower said, "It is disturbing that in some localities allegations persist that Negro citizens are being deprived of their right to vote and are likewise being subjected to unwarranted economic pressures."

The Montgomery bus system, it is reported, has suffered losses averaging 22 cents a mile since the Negro boycott began Dec. 5, the result of a dispute over seating arrangements.

Boycott Still On

Courier

Sat. 1-21-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — City buses were still operating here under curtailed services and reduced load due to the seven-week-old protest which started Dec. 5 at the Montgomery City Lines, Inc. Pittsburgh Pa.

A two-hour conference Monday, Jan. 9, between a delegation from Montgomery Improvement Association and the Montgomery City Commission over a fluid segregated seating arrangement presented by the protest leaders was rejected flatly by the city officials. P. 2

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., MIA president and spokesman of the delegation, outlined the floating segregated seating proposed as a "first-come, first-served" seating arrangement.

But Mayor W. A. Gayles told the committee there would be no reshuffle of the law-fixed racial seating. He added: "We are going to carry out the laws as we see it, and state law and city ordinance call for segregation on buses."

Since the seven-week-old, refuse-to-ride protest started, company officials estimate that there has been a fall away of over $51,000 because Negro citizens are not using the franchised buses.

An estimated 75 per cent of the company's bus patronage has come from members of the Negro group.

The protest grew out of the Dec. 1 arrest and the Dec. 5 fining of Mrs. Rosa Parks, a well respected church and civic worker, who was charged with violating the city and state bus segregation law, when she refused to surrender her seat to a white male passenger.

An appeal of the conviction was taken but it has not been docketed for hearing in the Circuit Court.

'How In Hell Could Birmingham?'

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I would like to ask in regard to your editorial Jan. 5 re Birmingham and its part in the Civil War. How in hell would Birmingham take part either directly or indirectly in said war when it did not come into being until 1871?

To write of history one must know history. What you have said is true, but tell the whole truth. What few iron works there were at Elyton were destroyed by Wilson's Raiders.

Don't Bear False Witness

Ala

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I have read some of the letters concerning the Negro boycott and I must say I have enjoyed reading where some are in sympathy with the Negro and some are entirely against the Negro.

I read in old Grandma a few days ago a letter concerning Julie Seale Harris, asking help from the mayor and different ones about getting into trouble and whipped by colored leaders.

Now I am sure Mrs. Harris can ride, and anyone else who cares to, and no violence or threats from the colored leaders will come to them.

I am a cook and nurse. No one has attempted to whip me or give me any trouble when I ride. Of course I don't have to ride a bus, as I have always had my own way to come and go. But you who don't have it, let's not tell the wrong thing on our colored ministers and leaders.

Misguided Ministers

Editor, The Advertiser:

This present boycott of the City Bus Lines, and as I have heard, of some Montgomery merchants, by the Negro element in our city, has been taken in stride by me. I have never been a patron of the bus lines, because I did not need them; but I have always thought it a privilege to have their services available for those who did depend on that transportation for their daily economy.

However, my "in stride" manner has suffered a much shorter pace; and for that reason I am now much less amendable.

Let's take the letter signed by the Rev. U. J. Fields, whoever he is. With deletions, I am quoting the last paragraph of his letter, which to me is a more direct threat than ever voiced by Marx or Lenin.

"We shall never cease our struggle for equality—this is from a reliable source (the Negro citizens of Montgomery). We have no intention of compromising . . . unwarranted delay . . . will result in a demand for the annihilation of segregation which will result in complete integration."

First, about the Negro citizens of Montgomery." I can prove that some of the same Negroes have been told by this same ministerial body that it is now against the law to board a city bus. Second; that they would demand an end to segregation. Let them get all the decrees they wish, and then try to find a way to enforce them. Third, they seem to fail to understand, that if we so chose, we could throw up a counter boycott that would starve most of them to death in 30 days. That is not our wish nor intention.

Personally, I know lots of Negroes in Montgomery for whom I have the highest regard, and I think they feel kindly toward me. But I can't go for these this morning's Advertiser (Jan. 5), concerning Birmingham, our youngest and largest city. The editorial was headed "The Blunt Truth About Birmingham In The Civil War." Have you forgotten your history so soon, or was it the effects of too many holidays coming so close together? You must remember that where Birmingham stands today was only virgin forest, coal and iron ore, untouched by civilization, during the period of the Civil War.

Now, please let us have some more history on this subject.

Bah, Mr. Benson

Editor, The Advertiser:

According to the Jan. 2 issue of The Advertiser Mr. Benson mentions the "gap" between what the farmer gets for his produce, and what the consumer pays for it.

He goes on to say this difference is brought about by the rising cost of handling between the farmer and consumer. This brings to my mind the man who prepared his land, planted, worked and gathered his okra and took it to market. Upon arriving at the store with his okra, he asked the manager what he was paying for okra. Seven cents a pound, was the reply.

So while the farmer was at the store, he looked around to see if there was something he needed. He came to a hamper of okra with a price card on it—28c per pound. 21c per pound handling charges between the farmer and consumer?

It took the farmer three months to get it to market for 7c a pound. It took the store man not more than three days to get it to the consumer.

Bah! Mr. Benson will have to wrap that one in something besides sugar coated honey to get the farmer to swallow it.

If the farmer was as well organized as the merchants, the merchants could be found out on the farms bidding against each other to get the precious farm raised products.

I don't blame the farmers for quitting their farms. When they must take a gambler's chance on weather, insects, and prices. What went with the days when 12 pounds of meal was a peck? At that rate I should buy a dollars worth for 80c.

No solution to boycott—

Hard-pressed capital bus line gets fare increase

News Thurs. 1-5-56

BY TRUDY CARGILE, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 5—A measure of relief from effects of a month-old boycott was permitted the Montgomery City Buslines yesterday when the Board of Commissioners granted its petition for a hike in fares.

The increase was sought by bus officials to offset losses in operating revenue since a protest boycott was begun by Negroes Dec. 5. Few of the city's Negroes have ridden a bus since Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined in city court for refusing to move back in a bus at the operator's request.

Birmingham Ala.

OUTLINED IN THE company's petition was the first evidence of the boycott's actual economic effect.

For the 26-day period ending Dec. 31, a gross decline in passenger revenue of 67 per cent or $52,380 was disclosed in the petition.

P. 10

Where official records showed a total of 788,537 passengers in the last 26 days of December, 1954, 258,891 were noted for the same days of 1955.

Since the beginning of the boycott, a series of efforts by city officials, bus lines representatives and citizens groups has failed to end the boycott.

Negro leaders, denying part in the beginning of the boycott, have offered a three-point plan which, if adopted by the bus line, would bring the boycott to an end for the time being.

Negro Attorney F. D. Gray outlined the points requested as more courteous service for Negroes, a more flexible seating arrangement with unmarked sections and employment of Negro drivers in Negro areas of the city.

A citizen's committee, appointed by Mayor W. A. Gayle in an effort to bring the situation closer to settlement, failed to reach a compromise and adjourned after a second meeting without setting plans for further talks.

Several white members offered compromise solutions which were solidly rebuffed by Negro members who maintained they could not relent on any of the points.

SERVICE INTO the predominantly Negro section of Montgomery was halted after the first few days of the boycott. The move was made after several reported acts of violence in which drivers and passengers were endangered.

Mileage for bus operation during the 26-day boycott period of December was reported at 134,148 miles as compared with 184,295 for the same period in 1954.

The bus company, which regularly employs 92 operators, placed 32 on vacation after Dec. 27. An additional "half-dozen" maintenance employes were likewise given leave, said a company official.

During peak periods, approximately 54 buses are in operation, as compared with 34 running now. Attorney Jack Crenshaw said the number fluctuates according to season and demand so that actual decline in number cannot be estimated.

IN PRESENTING the petition for increased rates to the commission, Crenshaw estimated the drop in service at 31 per cent. He told them the company could not hope to continue operation at that rate.

New rates, to become effective Jan. 9, will place regular fares at 15 cents, school children's fares at 8 cents and transfers at 5. The company had sought rates of 20 cents for regular and 10 for children on school runs. There has been no charge previously for transferring.

Montgomery Bus Fares Increased

Times-Picayune Thurs. 1-5-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 4 (AP) — The Montgomery city commission Wednesday authorized an increase in bus fares to offset bus company losses resulting from a month-long boycott by Negroes.

Effective Monday, adult fare will be raised from 10 to 15 cents, and school children's fares from 5 to 8 cents. Transfers, now free, will be 5 cents.

P. 6

The new rates will be "subject to reconsideration" after the boycott ends, Mayor W. A. Gayle said. The City Lines Bus Company had petitioned the commission to double the fares temporarily.

Negroes have been boycotting the buses since Dec. 5 in protest to segregated seating facilities.

In asking for the rate increase, bus officials told the commission Tuesday that their revenue has plunged to about 22 cents per operating mile while expenses are approximately 44 cents per mile. They noted that the bus company has cut service by 31 per cent because of the boycott.

Segregation To Remain On Carriers

P.17

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 13. —(UP)—The Alabama Public Service Commission ordered segregation to remain in interstate transportation facilities Friday, a direct countermand to an earlier ruling by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

PSC president C. C. 'Jack' Owens reported his office is sending out letters to all interstate carriers in Alabama, directing them to maintain segregation in all vehicles and waiting rooms. He said similar letters will be distributed to all city law enforcement agencies over the state.

The PSC's order was in direct opposition to the earlier ICC ruling ordering an end to segregation in interstate carriers.

It was the second Alabama rebuff to the ICC order in as many days. A Barbour County grand jury yesterday reported it would continue to recognize Alabama Jim Crow laws and blamed a breakdown in race relations on court actions that have ordered integration.

Mr. Owens said, "We are directing all public carriers to keep segregation signs in their stations in compliance with Alabama law. It is the law of the state and we intend to uphold it to the best of our abilities as long as it is on the books."

Negroes "Sitting Tight" In No Ride Bus Fight In Ala.

Daily World Fri. 1-13-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. -(SNS)- The protest-with-dignity campaign which has reduced the pay load of the Montgomery City Lines, Inc. because of alleged racial mistreatment entered its 40th day.

A two-hour conference Monday Jan. 9 between a delegation from the Montgomery Improvement Association and the Montgomery City Commission over a fluid segregated seating arrangement presented by the protest leaders was rejected flatly by the city officals.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., MIA president and spokesman of the delegation outlined the floating segregated seating proposal as a "first-come-first served" seating arrangement. He is pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church.

But Mayor W. A. Gayle told the committee there would be no reshuffle of the law-fixed racial seating. He added: "We are going to carry out the laws as we see it, and state law and city ordinances call for segregation on buses."

Mayor Gayle suggested that the committee did not seek an alteration in the law but a different interpretation of it.

Meantime the protest group was scheduled to hold the twelfth in a series of twice-a-week relay-the-facts mass meetings last night. Since the six week- old refuse-to-ride protest started, company officials estimate that there has been a fall away of over $51,000 because Negro citizens are not using the franchised buses.

An estimated 75 per cent of the company's bus patronage has come from members of the Negro group.

The Central Alabama (White) Citizens Council headed by Sam M. Englehardt, Jr., of Shorter, Ala., state senator from Macon County, has spearheaded a campaign through newspaper ads to help offset the effect of the bus-riding drop-off. Some appeals made in ads have warned the "white" people that the bus company might not renew its franchise if the fall-off in bus-riding resulted in a loss of money.

Meantime Public Safety Commissioner Clyde Sellers, selected to office on a "White Supremacy" platform, joined the CA(W)CC at the latter's meeting held Friday night, Jan. 6.

A member of the protest delegation said Commissioner Sellers injected into the discussion his signing up with the council. He said Mr. Sellers brought it relating alleged reports of violence, which he insisted would not be tolerated. The protest delegation said they knew of no instances of violence and suggested the guilty parties should have been arrested, if they committed acts of violence.

MIA leaders have been insisting on a three-point program asking for (1) better treatment of Negro patrons on the buses; (2) a first come, first served seating arrangement and (3) the employment of Negro bus drivers on buses running into areas heavily populated by Negro residents.

The protest grew out of the Dec. 1 arrest and the Dec. 5 fining of Mrs. Rosa Parks, a well-respected church and civic worker, who was charged with violating the city and state bus segregation law, when she refused to surrender her seat to a white male passenger.

Alabama Bus Boycott Forces Fare Increase

Meekly P.1 Sat. 1-14-56

New Orleans, La

Montgomery, Ala. (ANP).—A month-long boycott by Negroes of Montgomery City Lines buses, costing the company approximately $150,000 in loss of revenue, has resulted in the city commission authorizing an increase in fares.

Effective last Monday, adult fares were raised from 10 to 15 cents, and school children's fares from 5 to 8 cents. Transfers, previously free, are now five cents.

The new rates will be "subject to reconsideration" after the boycott ends, Mayor W. A. Gayle said. The bus line had petitioned the commission to double the fares temporarily.

Negroes have been boycotting the buses since Dec. 5, following the arrest of Mrs. Rosa Parks who refused to get up out of her seat for a white passenger. She was fined $14 for violating the state's segregation laws.

A committee of Negro citizens and city and bus officials have failed to agree on terms for ending the boycott, which is reportedly 80-90 percent effective.

Negro leaders have demanded more courtesy from drivers, unreserved seating arrangements and additional Negro drivers on some bus runs.

Sat 1-14-56

The seating proposal has been the main point of the debate.

Bus line officials have maintained they operate under a city contract which requires them to obey city law requiring separate seating of Negro and white passengers. In the meantime, various interpretations of the law have been made by city and Negro attorneys.

Approximately 65 percent of the passengers on Montgomery buses are Negroes during normal operation.

Since the boycott, eight lines in predominantly Negro sections have been discontinued.

New Bus Pact By City Lines Likely Today

Advertiser Tues. 1-17-56 P.1

The bus franchise held by Montgomery City Lines is expected to be renewed today by the City Commission.

Bus and city officials conferred yesterday afternoon, apparently to put the franchise in final form preparatory to the commission's meeting at 11 a.m. today.

The present franchise, granted in 1935, expires in March.

CHANGES MADE

Whether there will be any major changes in the charter because of the extended boycott of busses by Negroes could not be determined.

Since the boycott began over six weeks ago, the City Commission has authorized several changes in the company's operation, including a reduction of routes and an increase in fares.

No other companies have expressed interest in the Montgomery franchise, besides the Montgomery concern. National City Lines of Chicago is parent company of the Montgomery firm. It operates bus lines in numerous other U.S. and Canadian cities.

Head Of PSC Set To Order Segregation

Advertiser Sat. 1-14-56 P.1

President C. C. (Jack) Owen of the Alabama Public Service Commission said yesterday he was in the process of reminding all carriers in the state of Alabama's laws pertaining to racial segregation.

Montgomery, Ala.

In letters mailed to the presidents of all bus and railroad companies operating in Alabama, Owen explained three phases of the law in relation to a desegregation decree handed down several weeks ago by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Owen said the ICC decision had no bearing on bus lines operating in Alabama, and under state law they would be required to continue segregation practices both on interstate and intrastate carriers.

All railroads which were not a party to the suit which led to the ICC ruling also must continue to comply with Alabama laws Owen added, both in interstate and intrastate traffic.

Finally, Owen explained, railroads which were a party to the suit must still practice segregation on all intrastate carriers but would not be required to do so on interstate carriers.

"We are directing all public carriers to keep segregation signs in their stations in compliance with Alabama law," Owen said. "It is the law of the state and we intend to uphold it to the best of our abilities as long as it is on the books."

Owen said letters were also being sent to city law enforcement officers in the state, reminding them also of Alabama's segregation laws.

The Solicitor's Duty

Editor, The Advertiser: Advertiser

If an organized boycott is against the law, as Mr. Fred Ball states in his letter to The Advertiser, Jan. 9, then why should anyone have to present his letter to the Circuit Solicitor? Doesn't the Solicitor know his job? Why does he have to be reminded of his duty?

Maybe he is worried about the Negro vote. He had better start worrying about the white vote.

Five Men Given Deferment With 'FG' Classification

Military induction of five Bullock County men, scheduled for the October draft, was postponed indefinitely yesterday as waves of protest from Alabama continued to crash down on National Selective Service Headquarters in Washington.

The men were classified "FG"—Fred Gray—as the three-man Bullock County Draft Board announced yesterday it would halt all inductions unitl Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray is drafted.

Members of the board are Bob Owen, chairman, former State Sen. L. K. (Snag) Andrews and Earl Brannon. The county draft appeal agent, J. Allen Tucker, announced his resignation after a meeting of the board at 8:30 a.m. yesterday.

Montgomery Ala.

12 HAVE RESIGNED

Meanwhile, two other Alabama selective service officials—including a member of the State Appeals Board—announced their resignations yesterday to bring the total of resignations since last Monday to 12.

There was unconfirmed speculation last night that other Alabama draft boards would follow Bullock's example in halting inductions. In this event, it would be doubtful that Alabama could meet its October induction quota of 400.

The men classified FG included one white man and four Negroes. They are the only men in U.S. history to be classified under any designation other than those set down as law by Congress.

FOUR NEGROES

They were William Thomas Morton, a white resident of Midway, Ala., and four Negro men, Charlie Glaze, Johnnie Lee Scott, Henry Joseph Thomas and Tom Williams Jr., all of Bullock County.

Morton, 22, is a graduate of the University of Alabama. He is floor manager for the J. C. Penney Co. in Decatur. He had no comment to make on his reclassification.

Morton's father, Lawrence Morton, operates a store in Midway. He is a former member of the Bullock County draft board. Morton's son, Lawrence Morton Jr., said his father "has followed the Gray case closely and I can tell you he agrees 100 per cent with the board's action in holding up inductions."

APPEAL AGENT

State Selective Service Director James W. Jones announced yesterday the resignation of Crenshaw County Draft Appeal Agent Alton L. Turner. Turner said he resigned since the head of the Selective Service System 'has chosen to subject the decision of one of our local boards to the wishes of the NAACP." The letter added that "the people of Alabama will never accept a forced draft system dominated by the NAACP."

Other resignations yesterday came from Bullock County Draft Appeal Agent Tucker and O. O. Martin of Montgomery, a member of the State Appeals Board for the Middle District of Alabama, the board that sustained Montgomery Draft Board 51's decision reclassifying Gray 1-A.

Both cited the Gray case as their reasons for submitting their resignations.

advertiser

Martin represented labor on the five-man appeals board. Members are chosen from the fields of medicine, law, agriculture, business and labor.

Sept 9-22-56

Resignations from draft board officials are expected to snowball. The first resignations came last Monday after Gray, a legal spokesman in the Montgomery bus boycott, was notified his draft had been postponed indefinitely.

The 25-year-old attorney-minister was ordered by the Montgomery board to report for induction on Sept. 17, last Monday. Earlier, Gray had ben reclassified 1-A from 4-D, a ministerial deferment. He appealed to the State and Presidential Appeals boards but both bodies declined to overrule the local board's decision.

But then Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, the national selective service director, went over the heads of the local board and ordered the case reopened. Three members of the Montgomery board resigned Monday rather than reopen the case.

On Tuesday, three members of the Barbour County Draft Board and the county draft appeal agent resigned. Two more resignations came in Thursday from the Dallas County draft appeal agent and from a member of the Hale County Draft Board.

The three resignations yesterday raised the total to 12.

State Director Jones said yesterday he would not take immediate action on the Bullock County board's action refusing to induct anyone until Gray was drafted.

Under law, Jones could ask for removal of the board for placing five men in an unauthorized classification. But Jones reiterated yesterday "any action must come from Washington."

He said he had not received any directives from the nation's capital concerning the Gray case. He said he has not made any recommendations to Gov. James E. Folsom for replacements of the draft board vacancies created by the wave of resignations.

Word came yesterday from the Bibb County draft appeal agent that he will resign 'if the members of the county draft board will go along with me.'

George Herring, Bibb's appeal agent, said, "I have not been able to contact the members of the board and tell them of my intentions. I want all of us to resign at the same time. I think it would be a more effective move that way."

Boycott Leader Wins Draft Delay

Herald Tribune Mon. 9-17-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 16 (AP)—The induction of Fred Gray into the armed forces has been suspended indefinitely by the national Selective Service director, although the Negro attorney's local draft board has ordered him to report for induction tomorrow.

Tues 9-18-56 p. 10

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey announced in Washington yesterday that he had ordered Mr. Gray's induction delayed indefinitely.

The Negro attorney, a legal spokesman for his race in the continuing bus boycott, was first ordered to report for induction a month ago. He was granted a thirty-day delay on instructions from Gen. Hershey.

Mr. Gray's board ordered him to report for induction again tomorrow but Gen. Hershey in effect went over the board's head and postponed it indefinitely.

Mr. Gray held a draft exemption because he was an assistant pastor in a Montgomery church, but when the boycott first attracted attention and he was its legal voice, he was reclassified 1-A on the basis that his ministerial duties took only a small part of his time.

Police back down as Gray protests

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — City Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, this week, said he has dropped what he called a "protective surveillance" for colored pastor-attorney Fred D. Gray, after the Rev. Mr. Gray charged Tuesday that he was being "humiliated" and "intimidated" by local police.

Sellers explained that he had ordered police to keep watch over Mr. Gray because of threats which he said came to his office after Mr. Gray's draft induction was delayed indefinitely last month.

9-29-56

Mr. Gray, a legal spokesman for the Montgomery Improvement Association in court actions relating to the 10-month-old bus boycott, had been ordered inducted Sept. 17 by the local draft board, but Lt. Gen. Lewis Hershey, national director of selective service, intervened and postponed it indefinitely.

* * *

COMMISSIONER Sellers said he ordered surveillance of Mr. Gray for his own protection after receiving several anonymous threats against the young attorney.

Mr. Gray, however, charged that he had been followed "for no apparent reason" by motorcycle patrolmen and stopped by police on at least one occasion "for no reason at all."

On Monday, he said, two policemen on motorcycles followed him "for 20 minutes" as he was driving to his downtown law office.

MR. GRAY said he checked his speed very carefully and drove toward Washington Park on Mobile Rd., with the police "still behind me."

He said he began making turns at nearly every intersection just to see what they would do. They followed him, he charged, until he stopped at a friend's home.

Mr. Gray said last week the same two policemen stopped him at 9:30 in the morning on Virginia St., asked him to show them his driver's license, had him to turn on his lights, both dim and bright, blow his horn and turn on his windshield wipers.

"IT'S JUST humiliating and intimidating," Mr. Gray said, "I drive very carefully because I know what will happen if I violate even the most minor of traffic laws. But they just seem to stop colored drivers and follow them to see if they violate any of the laws."

Frustrated White Citizens Councils and other hate groups have made a political issue over Mr. Gray's deferment from the Armed Services, some 15 members of draft boards of Bullock and Autauga draft boards resigning in pique after General Hershey postponed Mr. Gray's induction indefinitely.

The Autauga board requested a congressional probe in letters to U.S. Sens. Lister Hill and John Sparkman and U.S. Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts of the 4th District.

* * *

MR. SPARKMAN said he "did not know if the situation would call for a congressional investigation," but said he was "in favor of checking into the situation to determine the Selective Service system has not become a Federally directed policy out of Washington."

He added that it is his belief that local units of the Selective Service system have authority in granting deferments.

U.S. Rep. George Grant of the 2nd District said he favored a congressional probe. He said such an investigation "should go the bottom of the Fred Gray case and give a full report."

Alabama draft board freezes inductions 'til Gray drafted'

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (ANP) —An Alabama draft board insisted last week that it would halt the call of men for induction into the armed services until the Rev. Fred D. Gray is drafted.

At Union Springs, the Bullock County draft board announced last Friday that all eligible registrants, both white and colored, would be pulled from the files and reclassified F-G (Fred Gray) until the minister-attorney is himself drafted.

The 25-year-old lawyer has been active in the bus boycott of Montgomery and was given an indefinite deferment by Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, National Selective Service Director. Gray was deferred as a practicing minister.

AN ANGRY appeals agent, Alton L. Turn, was the latest of a string of draft officials who have resigned in protest of Gray's deferment.

In quitting, Turner assailed Hershey and the NAACP. He said Hershey had bowed to the wishes of the civil rights group and is pursuing a "politically inspired course" that could wreck the selective service system.

Three members of Gray's draft board resigned last Monday after Gray failed to report for induction.

Since then, three county appeals agents, a state appeals board member, and the entire Barbour County board have resigned in irate protest of the lawyer's deferment.

* * *

FORMER STATE Sen. L. K. Andrews of the Union Springs board said the group would "not send anybody from Bullock County until Fred Gray goes."

Gray was classified 1-A after he had become prominent as a legal spokesman in the effective bus boycott here. He obtained a review of the case and the classification was sustained by the highest appeal board.

Then, after Gray was ordered to active duty, Hershey asked that the case be reopened. He had received information that Gray was full-time minister of a church, replacing an absent pastor.

Alabama Board Halts Draft Over Negro Case

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 21 (AP).—The draft board is adjoining Bullock County said today it will not call up any more men to serve in the armed forces until the Army drafts Fred Gray, a part-time minister and leader of the Montgomery bus boycott.

At the same time, the board's appeal agent, J. A. Tucker, announced he is quitting because "the Fred Gray case was illegally handled." Mr. Tucker's resignation was the tenth in the state over the controversial case.

Indefinite Delay

Mr. Gray's induction was postponed "indefinitely" by Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national Selective Service director, to permit consideration of "new evidence."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other Negro groups charged that the Montgomery draft board changed Mr. Gray's classification from 4D to 1A to "get even" with the young Negro for his support of the bus boycott by Negroes here and suits against segregation laws.

The board reclassified Mr. Gray last winter after an investigation which it said disproved his claim that he spent more than half of his time in ministerial duties.

Resignations Mount

Since postponement of Mr. Gray's induction by Gen. Hershey, three members of Mr. Gray's draft board and all four members of the Barbour County board at Eufaula have quit. The state Selective Service director said he also received resignations last night from a member of the Greensboro board and the appeal agent of the Selma board, in connection with the case.

Former State Sen. L. K. Andrews, a member of the Bullock board, said the records of five men scheduled for induction had been pulled from the files and put into a new classification, "F-G" for Fred Gray. Sen. Andrews said the five would not be inducted until Mr. Gray is taken into the service.

Authority Denied

"We have taken the position that Hershey did not have any authority to defer Gray," Mr. Andrews said. "Therefore, we are not going to send any more Bullock County boys into the Army until Fred Gray goes."

He said that if the "Selective Service of high brass overrules us, that's a matter that directs itself to their conscience, not ours."

"If Hershey fires us for exercising the rule, then he himself should resign because he has used the same thing," he said. "Now it's his move."

The six members of boards here and in Eufaula resigned with strong criticism of an indefinite postponement of induction granted Fred D. Gray, a Montgomery Negro attorney prominent in racial cases.

James W. Jones, Alabama Selective Service head, said yesterday he had heard no reports that other Alabama boards might resign.

REPORT ASKED

U. S. Rep. George Grant of Troy said he had asked Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, National Selective Service director, for a full report on the Gray case, but earlier Selective Service officials in Washington said the "usual, routine manner" was followed.

It resulted in an order from Hershey granting the postponement after he had earlier ordered a 30-day delay of an induction order by Local 51. A spokesman attributed the orders to Gray's ministerial duties, saying he had recently taken over full responsibility for a pulpit here.

PRESSURE CHARGED

Chairman Paul I. Reaves of Barbour County Board No. 3 and members Emmett Holmes and Carl Strang resigned in Eufaula with the "firm conviction that outside pressure groups have succeeded, in the case of registrant Gray, in giving the lie to one of the cardinal principles" of the draft —freedom for local boards to operate without "any compulsion or pressure whatsoever."

The Barbour official did not specify any "pressure group."

In resigning Monday the three Montgomery board members said they thought the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had brought the pressure.

ROLE AS ATTORNEY

Gray has represented the NAACP in Alabama legal actions. He was one of the attorneys during the continuing Negro bus boycott here in a suit that resulted in a three-judge federal court panel ruling city and state bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

The Barbour board members said if the Montgomery board "can be made the victim of sinister influences," they might get "in the same position" and preferred to resign.

Circuit Judge George B. Walace of Clayton, the county appeals agent, also resigned. He said he would have no part in drafting young men while "influence peddling is the vogue."

Bullock Halts Draft; 2 More Officials Quit

Five Men Given Deferment With 'FG' Classification

BY STEVE LESHER

Military induction of five Bullock County men, scheduled for the October draft, was postponed indefinitely yesterday as waves of protest from Alabama continued to crash down on National Selective Service Headquarters in Washington. Sat 9-22-56

The men were classified "FG"—Fred Gray—as the three-man Bullock County Draft Board announced yesterday it would halt all inductions unitl Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray is drafted.

Members of the board are Bob Owen, chairman, former State Sen. L. K. (Snag) Andrews and Earl Brannon. The county draft appeal agent, J. Allen Tucker, announced his resignation after a meeting of the board at 8:30 a.m. yesterday.

12 HAVE RESIGNED

Meanwhile, two other Alabama selective service officials—including a member of the State Appeals Board—announced their resignations yesterday to bring the total of resignations since last Monday to 12.

There was unconfirmed speculation last night that other Alabama draft boards would follow Bullock's example in halting inductions. In this event, it would be doubtful that Alabama could meet its October induction quota of 400.

The men classified FG included one white man and four Negroes. They are the only men in U.S. history to be classified under any designation other than those set down as law by Congress.

FOUR NEGROES

They were William Thomas Morton, a white resident of Midway, Ala., and four Negro men, Charlie Glaze, Johnnie Lee Scott, Henry Joseph Thomas and Tom Williams Jr., all of Bullock County.

Morton, 22, is a graduate of the University of Alabama. He is floor manager for the J. C. Penney Co. in Decatur. He had no comment to make on his reclassification.

Morton's father, Lawrence Morton, operates a store in Midway. He is a former member of the Bullock County draft board. Morton's son, Lawrence Morton Jr., said his father "has followed the Gray case closely and I can tell you he agrees 100 per cent with the board's action in holding up inductions."

APPEAL AGENT

State Selective Service Director James W. Jones announced yesterday the resignation of Crenshaw County Draft Appeal Agent Alton L. Turner. Turner said he resigned since the head of the Selective Service System 'has chosen to subject the decision of one of our local boards to the wishes of the NAACP." The letter added that "the people of Alabama will never accept a forced draft system dominated by the NAACP."

Other resignations yesterday came from Bullock County Draft Appeal Agent Tucker and O. O. Martin of Montgomery, a member of the State Appeals Board for the Middle District of Alabama, the board that sustained Montgomery Draft Board 51's decision reclassifying Gray 1-A.

Both cited the Gray case as their reasons for submitting their resignations.

Resignations from draft board officials are expected to snowball. The first resignations came last Monday after Gray, a legal spokesman in the Montgomery bus boycott, was notified his draft had been postponed indefinitely.

The 25-year-old attorney-minister was ordered by the Montgomery board to report for induction on Sept. 17, last Monday. Earlier, Gray had ben reclassified 1-A from 4-D, a ministerial deferment. He appealed to the State and Presidential Appeals boards but both bodies declined to overrule the local board's decision.

But then Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, the national selective service director, went over the heads of the local board and ordered the case reopened. Three members of the Montgomery board resigned Monday rather than reopen the case. Sat. 9-22-56

On Tuesday, three members of the Barbour County Draft Board and the county draft appeal agent resigned. Two more resignations came in Thursday from the Dallas County draft appeal agent and from a member of the Hale County Draft Board.

The three resignations yesterday raised the total to 12.

State Director Jones said yesterday he would not take immediate action on the Bullock County board's action refusing to induct anyone until Gray was drafted.

Under law, Jones could ask for removal of the board for placing five men in an unauthorized classification. But Jones reiterated yesterday "any action must come from Washington."

He said he had not received any directives from the nation's capital concerning the Gray case. He said he has not made any recommendations to Gov. James E. Folsom for replacements of the draft board vacancies created by the wave of resignations.

Word came yesterday from the Bibb County draft appeal agent that he will resign 'if the members of the county draft board will go along with me.'

George Herring, Bibb's appeal agent, said, "I have not been able to contact the members of the board and tell them of my intentions. I want all of us to resign at the same time. I think it would be a more effective move that way."

THAT WAS POSTPONED 30 days at the request of Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national Selective Service director. Then Hershey ordered Gray's induction indefinitely postponed.

Board Chairman F. A. Miller charged in resigning that "the decision of the national director to play politics with draftees renders my position . . . untenable." Hugh M. Smith said "our usefulness is ended," and G. C. Gilder Jr. said in his resignation "that we have been 'run over,' so to speak."

W. Glenn Harrison said he was "going to stay inside to see how much rottener the thing gets." He might resign later, Harrison added.

The fifth member, Richard O. Grable, resigned earlier yesterday because he was sworn into the National Guard, making him ineligible.

WHEN GRAY'S PART in the boycott was publicized early this year, he held a ministerial draft deferment as a part-time pastor of a Negro church. The state Selective Service headquarters ordered an investigation that ended in reclassification and the appeal.

Smith said since the induction date was set the board was told by Hershey that Gray had taken over full duties at his church with the regular minister gone. "Our position was that it was too late for such evidence once we had ordered him inducted and set the date," Smith said, so the board refused to reopen the case.

AFTER THAT REFUSAL Hershey granted the indefinite postponement.

James W Jones, state Selective Service director, said Hershey could transfer Gray's case to any other Alabama board He said it would take at least 20 days for new Board 51 members to be named so the board could operate again. A minimum of three are required.

Three on Negro's draft board quit

Sun. 9-18-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 18—(AP)—Only one member remained on a Montgomery draft board today and he said his reason for not resigning is "to see how much rottener" a situation involving a legal spokesman for Montgomery Negroes might become.

Three board members resigned yesterday with charges that "political pressure" had been used to keep Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray from being inducted yesterday as the board had ordered. They named the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People as having brought pressure in Washington.

THE 25-YEAR-OLD LAWYER has been the legal representative of Negroes who have been boycotting buses here since last Dec. 5 to protest segregation laws. He has also participated in Alabama legal actions by the NAACP.

When Local 51 classified Gray 1-A last Spring the NAACP obtained an appeal on the case that went to the highest national review board. It upheld the local board, which set an August induction date.

HERSHEY HALTS GRAY INDUCTION

Herald-Tribune
Mon. 9-17-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 16 (AP)—The induction of Fred Gray into the armed forces has been suspended indefinitely by the national Selective Service director, although the Negro attorney's local draft board has ordered him to report for induction Monday.

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey revealed in Washington that he had ordered Gray's induction delayed indefinitely.

The Negro attorney, a legal spokesman for his race in the continuing bus boycott, was first ordered to report for induction a month ago. He was granted a 30-day delay on instructions from Hershey.

Gray's board ordered him to report for induction again Monday, Sept. 17, but Hershey in effect went over the board's head and postponed it indefinitely.

The national Selective Service chief has twice requested the local board to reopen Gray's case on grounds of new information. On the second request, the board chairman, F. A. Miller, said the board found no new grounds for reconsideration and so declined to take up the case again.

Hershey has declined to say what would happen next. He said only that he was waiting for a report of the situation and that he expected to have it in hand early next week.

Gray held a draft exemption because he was an assistant pastor in a Montgomery church but when the boycott first attracted attention and he was its legal voice, Gray was reclassified 1-A on the basis that his ministerial duties took only a small part of his time.

Hershey, it was reported, has received additional information that Gray was now filling a church pulpit on a full-time basis since the regular pastor had left.

Advertiser 9-4-A

IN DISCUSSING the Fred Gray case it must first be noted that attention was focused on his exempt status as a minister because of his prominence as an attorney in the boycott.

Montgomery, Ala.

But it does not follow from this, as Gen. Hershey seems to hold, that he was drafted as punishment for his role in the boycott. His classification was changed when it became obvious that Blackstone, not the pulpit, received most of his occupational attention. True, he was at one time a theological student of sorts, but the law seemed to have called louder than the pulpit. From all the evidence so far adduced, he was not entitled to a ministerial exemption.

Recently, as we understand the facts, his status has changed. Instead of being a full-time lawyer and a part-time pastor, he now claims to be a full-time pastor and a part-time lawyer.

Sat. 9-29-56

It is on the basis of this changed occupational status, presumably, that Gen. Hershey has been pressured into demanding that the local board reopen the case. Refusing to review a finding that had already had the fairest hearing all the way up to the presidential appeal board, three of the local board members have resigned. They had little choice.

We do not question Gray's theological interests; undoubtedly they date back several years. The question now is whether his work qualifies him for a ministerial exemption. It seems clear that as a substitute minister whose business was the practice of law, he couldn't honestly claim the status. If he could, thousands could evade service in like manner as lay leaders, semi-ministers and pastoral assistants.

Does his full-time pastoral service after reclassification alter the facts? In our opinion it tends merely to cast doubt on the validity of his earlier claim to ministerial immunity. It is quite obviously an evasion attempt and, because it invokes the pulpit as a shield, evasion of an unsavory kind—recalling the "Pearl Harbor Preachers" of World War II who got the call after the bombs started falling.

Many young men in Gray's age group, white and Negro, try to get out of service these days. Only a small number of the eligibles have to serve and, with no war on, it is dreary business without glory.

But Gray is a leader in a group which has arrogated to itself all of the shibboleths and ideals of patriotism and freedom, claiming them as the basis for a holy crusade. Consequently, more is expected of Gray than the average young man today. He should be a leader in this period when few want to serve their country. If he placed the bar before the pulpit, as he did before being reclassified 1-A, he should now place service to his country above a questionable claim to the pulpit.

It is not as if the induction of Gray will deprive boycott leaders of their legal arm and leave them defenseless before the white man. In all of the important litigation so far, Gray has played only a minor role, taking a back seat to NAACP's talented corps of New York attorneys.

He was left in the action primarily for window dressing, to make it appear a local fight, but the shots were called by the big guns. He seemed bright enough for a lawyer of his youth, but no match for the gifted lawyers sent in to "help" him.

If we had to make a prediction, it would be that Gray will probably not don a uniform. But the local board was correct in refusing to have any part of the fraud, and in refusing to draft other young men who haven't such powerful defenders as Gray has.

If Gray is successful in dodging, a new dimension will be added to civil rights—civilian rights.

1-A Is F-G In Bullock

Advertiser 9-4-A

Hand it to the Bullock County draft board for the shrewdest maneuver yet in the private war between Gen. Hershey and Alabama's selective service officials.

Montgomery, Ala.

By designating all its prospective draftees in a new "F-G" (for Fred Gray) category, the Bullock board has thrown down the gauntlet to national Selective Service headquarters. In fact, you might say the Bullock board has adopted Adlai Stevenson's recent proposal that the draft be ended as soon as possible.

In Bullock the draft is already over.

The next move is up to Hershey. If he wants draftees out of Bullock—and other counties which may be expected to adopt the "F-G" classification in a spirit of playful rebellion—he'll have to oust the board.

Sat. 9-22-56

Hershey has a commendable record as draft director, but when it comes to guerrilla warfare he may prove no match for the rebel tacticians.

Atty. Gray 'Amends' Anti-Segregation Suit

Montgomery, Ala.
4-19-3-9-56

Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray yesterday filed an amendment to his complaint in U.S. District Court to strike the name of Jeaneatta Reese from an anti-segregation suit.

The Reese woman had denied that Gray represented her in a suit he filed in protest to segregation on Montgomery City Lines buses.

The amendment also added as defendants in the suit C. C. Owen, Jimmy Hitchcock and Sibyl Pool, members of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

Gray's amendment stated that Owens, Hitchcock and Miss Pool, acting as state officers, have issued or caused the issuance of orders directing and requiring segregation of Negroes on buses.

ORIGINAL TEST

The original complaint was filed in the names of Aurelia S. Browder, Susie McDonald, Jeaneatta Reese, Claudette Colvin, by Q. T. Colvin, her father, and Mary Louise Smith, by Frank Smith, as plaintiffs versus Mayor W. A. Gayle, Clyde Sellers, and Frank Parks, city commissioners; Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal; the Montgomery City Lines Co., and James F. Blake and Robert Cleere, bus drivers.

The plaintiffs charged in the suit that the segregation on City Lines buses is in violation of the 14th Amendment. They asked for a court of three judges in a "speedy hearing" and that the court enter a temporary injunction against segregation on buses on grounds that the statutes requiring segregation are "null and void."

RECENT CASE

Gray recently appeared in Circuit Court to face charges of representing a client (the Reese woman) without her permission.

Circuit Solicitor W. F. Thetford did not prosecute, however, on grounds the state has no jurisdiction in the case which was filed on federal grounds.

Meanwhile, Dist. Atty. Hartwell Davis has said he would take the matter under consideration.

Review Case Of Attorney For Boycott

Defender 4-2
Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 3-3-56

WASHINGTON — The case of Fred D. Gray of Montgomery, Ala., attorney in the bus boycott, was being reviewed by the Selective Service Board for a possible revision of his present 1A draft status.

Gray was re-classified by his local draft board in Montgomery from his former status of 4-D after he filed suit against the city to cease harrassment and intimidation of citizens participating in the boycott and to change the laws requiring segregation of the races in intra-state transportation.

He is an ordained minister of the Church of Christ and serves as assistant pastor of a Montgomery church.

Leaders of the boycott say the move was obvously a retaliatory measure against the 27-year-old lawyer for filing the suit.

It has been reported that he will be drafted for immediate military duty, thus attempting to take him out of the case.

A spokesman for the Selective Service board in Washington said that the case had been brought to their attention and as in such matters, the director of the service, Major Gen. William Hershey has the right to appeal to the President for a change in classification if he thinks the case warrants it.

Circuit Court Tosses Out Gray's Case

The unlawful practice charge against Negro bus boycott Attorney Fred D. Gray was tossed out of Circuit Court yesterday but the case was left open for possible federal prosecution. P. 1

Circuit Solicitor William T. Thetford admitted at the outset of Gray's scheduled trial that the state had no jurisdiction since the anti-integration suit which resulted in Gray being accused of unlawful practice was filed in a federal building.

The 25-year-old Negro attorney was indicted on the charge after filing suit in U.S. District Court challenging constitutionality of the Alabama laws requiring segregation of the races on buses.

One of the five Negro women whom he listed as bringing action later said she did not consent to it. Gray said she did consent.

Thetford said he would bring the facts in the case to the attention of U.S. District Attorney Hartwell Davis, who could file charges against Gray if he sees fit.

100 NEGROES NAMED

Davis said he had not been officially notified and could not say whether he will investigate the case.

Gray was indicted two weeks ago, three days before the same grand jury returned indictments naming some 100 Negro leaders for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law in their protest against segregated buses.

Trials for the boycott defendants, including 24 Negro ministers, are to start March 19 in Circuit Court.

Gray would have been subject to disbarment and a minimum fine of $500 if convicted of unlawful practice. He said he hasn't been "worried about the outcome" of the case and came to the courtroom yesterday prepared to file motion's attacking the state's jurisdiction. P. 6-A

It wasn't necessary to file them because Thetford admitted at the outset that Gray could only be prosecuted in federal court.

PURCHASE AUTHORIZED

The circuit solicitor explained that in 1880 Alabama approved a law authorizing the federal government to purchase property in Alabama. But the state at the time retained the right to prosecute cirminal cases growing out of offenses committed on government land.

Then, in 1923, the law was changed to give jurisdiction in such cases to the federal government. Jurisdiction was returned to the state again in 1940, Thetford said, but it does not apply in Gray's case because the post office building where he filed suit was acquired by the government in 1931 during the time the federal jurisdiction was authorized.

Thetford said the loophole was overlooked because the 1940 code gave jurisdiction to the state.

PART DENIED

The charge was brought against Gray after Mrs. Jeanetta Reese, one of the five Negro women named in his suit, made a statement to Mayor W. A. Gayle saying she did not know she was a party to an action attacking Alabama segregation laws.

The suit challenging constitutionality of the segregation statute applying to public carriers has not been set for a hearing.

Gray has been classified by his draft board as a "practicing minister" since 1948 and was deferred from military service. After the suit was filed, his classification was changed to 1-A.

State Selective Service Director James W. Jones said the classification was changed because Gray's church has acquired a full-time minister.

ANONYMOUS CALLS

Gray, a bachelor who lives with his mother, said he received several anonymous telephone calls Thursday night taunting him with "what was to happen in court today."

He was accompanied to court by Arthur D. Shores, Birmingham Negro attorney who led the legal fight to get Autherine Lucy admitted as the first Negro ever to attend the University of Alabama.

Shores and Gray, along with three other Negro attorneys, fired another legal shot in the bus boycott Thursday.

They entered demurrers to the boycott cases in Circuit Court listing several grounds challenging legality of the indictments under the U.S. and Alabama constitutions.

Negro leaders charged under the state's 1921 anti-boycott statute have pledged to continue the protest movement, now in its 13th week. It was touched off Dec. 5 when a Negro woman was fined $14 for refusing to move to the segregated section in the back of a city bus.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(ANP)— Fred D. Gray, attorney in the bus boycott situation in Montgomery, was cleared in Circuit Court of charges of unlawful practice, but there is still the possibility of Federal action against the Negro lawyer.

Atlanta, Ga.

Gray was cleared when Circuit Solicitor William T. Thetford admitted that the state had no jurisdiction over the matter.

The issue arose when Gray filed a suit in behalf of five women, asking that the state's law requiring segregation on buses be declared unconstitutional.

Later, Jeanetta Reese, one of the persons in whose name the suit was filed, declared that the action had been taken without her permission.

It was on this point that the charges were brought against Gray, accusing him of representing an individual without her consent.

Thetford made a motion to drop the charges in the hearing last week after the witness failed to appear against Gray.

The solicitor said, however, that he would bring the facts to the attention of U. S. District Attorney Hartwell Davis, who could file charges against Gray, in view of the fact that Gray filed his suit in a federal court.

The petition was drawn up by Gray, 26, one of the most popular leaders of the bus boycott.

A few days later, however, Jeanetta Reese went to the mayor of the city and told him that she did not know what she was signing when she signed the petition. She asked that her name be withdrawn.

Her name was withdrawn. But acting on information given them by Mrs. Reese, race-baiting whites had Gray called before the grand jury and he was indicted.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 29 (U.P.) —A Negro attorney today requested non-jury trails for his clients indicted by a grand jury for violating a state boycott law.

Atty. Fred Gray, under indictment himself for representing a Negro woman in a segregation suit without her consent, said he represented a "substantial" number of Negro leaders facing court charges March 19.

Ninety Negro boycotters, including several ministers, pleaded not guilty at their arraignment last week, and none requested trial by jury.

Under Alabama law, persons charged with misdemeanors must demand jury trials before their cases are heard in court.

However, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter today offered to waive the technicality of the naw and allow the defendants to have a trial by jury.

Gray said his clients preferred a non-jury trial.

The government has taken "under consideration" the unlawful practice case against Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray which Montgomery Circuit Court dismissed last Friday for lack of jurisdiction, U.S. District Atty. Hartwell Davis announced yesterday.

The state case against the 25-year-old boycott attorney, which grew out of an anti-segregation suit he filed in federal court in behalf of five Negroes, was dismissed by Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford who said the state did not have jurisdiction.

Gray was indicted on a grand jury charge that he had not been employed by one of the plaintiffs, Jeanetta Reese, to file her name on the suit.

Gray's Trial Slated Friday

A Negro lawyer charged with unlawful practice in the filing of a suit in connection with bus segregation laws will be tried Friday in Circuit Court.

Fred Gray, legal spokesman for local boycott leaders, was the first of more than 90 Negroes indicted by the grand jury in connection with the current bus boycott. Gray is charged with filing an antisegregation suit in federal court without consent of one of the five Negro women who signed the complaint.

The suit challenges the constitutionality of Montgomery and Alabama laws which require separate seating facilities for the races.

Gray's indictment was based on a statement by Jeannette Reese that she put her signature on the court petition without knowing what she was signing. The statement was made in the presence of Mayor W. A. Gayle and a newspaper reporter.

The Negro attorney insisted the woman knew what she was signing and the purpose for which the suit was entered.

Gray was indicted under an Alabama law which prohibits a lawyer from representing a client without consent. Maximum penalty is a $500 fine and suspension from practice.

Trials of the boycott defendants have been set to begin March 19.

Bus boycott figure loses clergy status, reclassified 1-A

News p.27
Thurs. 2-9-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 9—(AP)—Fred D. Gray, young Montgomery Negro attorney and leader in the city lines bus boycott, has been classified 1-A by his local draft board.

Birmingham, Ala.

State Selective Service Director James W. Jones yesterday confirmed a report that the 25-year-old lawyer, who has been exempt from military service as a "practicing minister," had been reclassified.

Jones said he ordered the local board to reexamine Gray's case recently.

WHEN THE attorney was put in a 4-D classification, he explained, he was the only pastor of his church, the Holt Street Church of Christ. Now the church has a fulltime minister and Gray is assistant pastor.

Since Gray now devotes more than 50 per cent of his time to practicing law, Jones said, he forfeited his right to the exemption as a minister.

Two days later, things began to happen. First, he received a letter advising him to report to the draft board for a personal interview regarding his draft status.

He went for the interview and two days later received notice from his draft board that he had been reclassified 1-A.

F. A. Miller, white, is his local draft board chairman.

"OF COURSE, I plan to appeal the reclassification," Mr. Gray told the AFRO, Friday. "It seems odd that I was 4-D in January, but 1-A a few weeks later."

One of the main questions asked in the questionnaire was how much time he spent in law compared to the amount of time he spent as a minister.

He listed 25 hours per week for church work and 35 hours for law, he said. In 1955, he listed 35 hours for law and 20 for church work.

AT THE RESENT time, the Rev Mr. Gray serves as assistant minister of the Holt Street Church of Christ.

He is a graduate of the Nashville Christian Institute, Alabama State Teachers College and Western Reserve University School of Law, and traveled with Marshall Keeble for three years as one of his "boy preachers."

He is a native of Montgomery, and a member of the Ohio as well as Alabama bar.

Reclassify bus boycott attorney as 1-A draftee

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — In what is an obvious attempt to "punish" him for his part in filing the "Umbrella" suit in the 11-week-old bus boycott, Fred D. Gray, Montgomery attorney, has been reclassified 1-A by his local draft board.

The youthful looking, but serious-minded lawyer, who is 25 and single, has been 4-D on the draft list for two years. He is a minister as well as a lawyer, one of the major factors in his 4-D classification.

In early January, Mr. Gray was sent a questionnaire on his draft status and at that time classified 4-D, just as he had been for the two previous years.

THEN ON Feb. 2, he filed the suit asking that the state law and city ordinance requiring segregated seating in buses be declared unconstitutional.

Attorney-Minister's Status Is Changed

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 8 (AP)—A 25-year-old Negro attorney who has been active as a legal adviser in the nine-week-old city bus boycott has been classified 1-A by his draft board.

Fred D. Gray, who had been exempted from military service as a Church of Christ minister, said he hadn't been notified of his changed draft status and declined comment.

James W. Jones, State Selective Service director, confirmed reports that Gray's classification had been changed from 4-D to 1-A after he ordered the local board to re-examine Gray's case.

At the time the attorney was classified 4-D, Jones said, Gray was the only pastor of his church. Now the church has a full-time minister and Gray serves as assistant minister.

Jones said since Gray now spends more than 50 per cent of his time as a practicing attorney he no longer is entitled to the exemption as a minister.

Selective Service sources declined to say whether the lawyer is likely to be called up for service in the armed forces any time soon.

Case against boycott lawyer is dismissed

Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 2—(AP)—A charge of unlawful practice against Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray, legal spokesman for bus boycotters, was dismissed in Circuit Court today when the state admitted it does not have jurisdiction.

The action nol prossing the case came at the outset of Gray's scheduled trial. Circuit Solicitor William T. Thetford said the state could not prosecute the young attorney because the offense for which he was indicted took place in a federal building.

Thetford said the issue would be brought to the attention of U. S. Dist. Atty. Hartwell Davis for federal prosecution if he sees fit. Davis said he has not been officially notified of the action and could not say if he would investigate.

Gray said he had no prior knowledge the charges against him would be thrown out of Circuit Court. But he said he had come to the courtroom prepared to file motions challenging the state's jurisdiction.

"Naturally I'm pleased," the young attorney said, "but I haven't really been worrying about the outcome."

Negro Accused Of Illegal Representation

ACTION IN MONTGOMERY

Memphis, Tenn.

By The United Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 2.—A Negro attorney accused of illegally representing a woman in a segregation suit filed in connection with Montgomery's bus boycott was freed of state charges Friday.

Lawyer Fred Gray, 25, went to Circuit Court but Solicitor William Thetford immediately asked Judge Eugene Carter to dismiss the charges on grounds the court did not have jurisdiction.

Reason For Charge

Mr. Thetford said the charge grew out of a suit filed in Federal Court here, on Federal property, and under a state law the Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over crimes committed on that property.

He said the case would be turned over to the U.S. attorney for prosecution if he sees fit.

Gray, a legal spokesman for the boycotters, is scheduled to represent many of the 90 defendants indicted by a grand jury under Alabama's Anti-Boycott Law.

He was indicted by the same grand jury in connection with a suit he filed in the name of five Negro women asking that city and state bus segregation laws be declared unconstitutional.

Didn't Know Why

One of the Negro women, Jeaneatta Reese, said she didn't know what she was doing when she signed to become a party to the suit, but Gray said he had explained the implications of the action to the woman in the presence of several other persons.

The boycott defendants are scheduled to be tried beginning March 19.

Gray and other Negro attorneys filed demurrers Thursday contending the law under which they are charged is a violation of constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech, religion, assembly and "due process of law."

The state law makes it a misdemeanor for two or more persons to conspire to prevent others from carrying on their business.

Is It Illegal To Practice Law In Ala.?

Alabama attorney arrested

P. 1 Afro-American Sat. 2-25-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Fred D. Gray, 25-year-old attorney, who on Feb. 2 filed the "umbrella" suit contesting the constitutionality of Alabama's segregation transportation laws, Saturday, was indicted, arrested and released on $300 bond.

Mr. Gray was indicted on a charge of representing clients without their consent. The indictment was handed up to Judge Eugene B. Carter by a Montgomery County grand jury which last Monday began investigating the "legality" of the bus boycott.

The bus protest which began Dec. 5 is now in its twelfth week and there was no indication Saturday as to when it would be ended.

Baltimore, Md.

EARLY IN the month when local authorities instituted a "get-tough policy" in an effort to get the colored riders back on the buses, Mr. Gray, with Charles D. Langford, filed in Federal District Court a suit described as an "umbrella" suit.

The petition attacked the constitutionality of the State and city laws requiring segregation on all public transportation vehicles, and asked the court to enjoin the city from enforcing the laws.

The local laws require segregated seating on all public transportion. The bus protest is the outgrowth of a long series of complaints of discourtesy by bus drivers and police in carrying out the law.

The bus protest leaders asked for a seating arrangement on a "first - come-first-served basis without disrupting the segregation law, but city officials and bus company authorities refused to grant them their request.

* * *

LAST WEEK Judge Carter ordered a grand jury probe of the bus protest to determine what he said was the "legality" of the boycott.

All of the plaintiffs in the "umbrella" suit as well as Mr. Langford were among the scores of persons summoned to appear before the grand jury.

Also called to testify before the grand jury was Mrs. Jeanetta Reese, one of the five original plaintiffs in the suit, who later asked that her name be withdrawn as a party to the petition. P. 2

After the suit was filed Mrs. Reese told Mayor L. A. Gayle that she "didn't know what she was signing" when she put her name on the court petition.

The indictment charges Mr. Gray "unlawfully and knowingly" appeared as an attorney for Mrs. Reese without being employed by her and without her consent.

Baltimore, Md.

No trial date has been set for Mr. Gray though court action is expected within a week or two. Mr. Gray will plead not guilty.

JUDGE CARTER dismissed a contempt charge against a service station operator who admitted he sold gasoline in a car pool to aid in the protest against the city buses.

Other filling station operators, parking lot workers and several ministers also have been called before the grand jury.

The indictment against Mr. Gray was the first action of the grand jury after it began its probe of the bus protest, but it was continuing the investigation.

Mr. Gray was arrested at his office Saturday morning, and taken to county jail where he spent about 20 minutes. He was photographed, fingerprinted and then posted bond.

If he is convicted on the charge, he faces a $500 fine and probable disbarment in the State.

Alabama has a similar case on record. In 1940, a colored attorney was similarly accused in connection with the voting registration cases, convicted and subsequently disbarred.

RECENTLY Mr. Gray, who also is a minister, was reclassified 1A by his Montgomery draft board. He had been exempt and classified 4D on the basis of his ministerial work as assistant pastor of the Holt Street Church of Christ.

He has appealed the new draft reclassification.

Final report expected Monday—

Montgomery jury indicts attorney; final action in bus boycott pending

BY REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 18 —(AP)—A Negro attorney who filed an anti-segregation suit growing out of Montgomery's bus boycott has been arrested on an indictment returned by a Grand Jury investigating the boycott.

Ala.

The Grand Jury may write other indictments early this week charging actual violation of Alabama's boycott law, a statute originally aimed at labor disputes.

Fred Gray, 25-year-old Montgomery lawyer, was among the defendants named in 114 true bills handed in by the jury late Friday in a partial report. The final report is expected Monday or Tuesday.

Gray was charged with unlawfully filing an anti-segregation suit in U. S. District Court last month without the consent of one of the five Negro women whose names appeared on the complaint.

The suit, an outgrowth of the racial boycott against Montgomery City Lines buses, seeks to knock out city and state laws which require segregation on all public transportation.

TH EATTORNEY was released on $300 bond after his arrest. He declined to comment on the indictment which was returned under a state law, which makes it a misdeameanor to file a court suit without authority. Violation is punishable by a $500 fine and suspension from practice.

The indictment charges Gray "unlawfully and knowlingly" appeared as an attorney for Mrs. Jeanetta Reese without being employed by her and without her consent in the Federal Court action.

Mrs. Reese was one of five Negro women who signed the petition as plaintiffs against the city commission and the bus company asking an end to racial separation on buses.

FRED D. GRAY
. . . Boycotter indicted

After the suit was filed, the Negro woman told Mayor L. A. Gayle in the presence of two newspapermen that she "didn't know what she was signing" when she put her name on the court petition.

GRAY REPLIED at that time that Mrs. Reese did know what the paper was she signed.

The Grand Jury's final report next week will climax a detailed investigation of the bus boycott which has continued unbroken for 12 weeks.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter charged the jury of 17 white men and one Negro last Monday to determine if the 12-week-old boycott against segregated seating on Montgomery City Lines buses is unlawful.

If the jury finds the mass protest was organized and carried on without "just cause or legal excuse," it can return indictments under a state law rarely if ever used before except in labor strife.

The statute was enacted in 1921 as an outgrowth of labor unrest in Birmingham which included boycotts and blacklisting along with physical violence in the strike-ridden coal mines there.

The late Gov. Thomas E. Kilby told the Legislature that the old laws were "inadequate" to deal with conditions which had developed.

Responding to his request, the Legislature wrote the present law which prohibits two or more persons "without a just cause or legal excuse," from entering into "any combination, conspiracy, agreement, arrangement or understanding for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or preventing any other persons, firms, corporations or associations or persons from carrying on any lawful business."

Maximum penalty for violation is six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Officials of the Montgomery City Lines, a subsidiary of National City Lines of Chicago, have declined to say publicly how the boycott has affected the company financially. But a 50 per cent increase in bus fares—from 10 to 15 cents—and curtailed operations have offset the loss of business to some extent.

Before the boycott began last Dec. 5, approximately 65 per cent of the bus lines' passengers were Negroes. Since then, an estimated 75 per cent or more of the Negro customers have stopped riding.

Car pools operating with military precision have been organized to get Negroes to and from work. Negro taxicabs have done a thriving business. Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers says Negroes have complained they were threatened with harm if they rode the buses.

The mass protest against seating of white and Negro passengers began on the day that Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 in City Court. She was arrested after refusing to move to the colored section of a bus.

Negro leaders led by a 27-year-old Baptist minister, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., demanded a "first come, first served" arrangement which would seat Negroes from the rear and white passengers from the front until all seats were taken.

Meanwhile, five Negroes filed a suit in U. S. District Court attacking as unconstitutional the city and state laws requiring segregation in all public transportation. No hearing has been set.

The suit also asked that city officials be prohibited from "interfering with Negroes, or using force, threats or other intimidation" to compel them to ride the segregated buses.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — A Negro attorney active in efforts to end racial segregation in public transportation at Montgomery was indicted Saturday for representing an individual without his consent.

Attroney Arthur Gray was arrested and freed upon posting $300 bond. Sun. 2-19-56

The Grand Jury that returned the idictment will resume its study of a boycott of city buses by Negroes on Monday.

The action brought from a Negro leader the pledge that members of his race will be more determined than ever to maintain their refusal to ride city buses until "jim crow" seating is abolished.

There was no sign if other indictments have been returned in the racial cotnroversy since Alabama law does not permit announcing names of accused until they are served with the indictments.

Gray and Charles Langford were the attorneys in a suit filed two weeks ago in Federal Distric Court at Montgomery seeking an end to segregation in public transportation.

PLAINTIFF WITHDRAWS!

Five plaintiffs were listed in the suit. One of them Mrs. Jenetta Reese, later withdrew because, she said, of the threats made against her.

It was believed she was the individual Gray was accused of representing without her consent.

The law reportedly has brought only one previous indictment in Alabama history. That one resulted in the conviction in 1940 of a Montgomery Negro lawyer who was active in opening registration lists to Negroes.

If convicted, Gray would be automatically barred from law practic and would face a minimum fine of $500. No maximum fine is set by the law. Gray, a native of Montgomery, has been practicing law for 18 months. He is a graduate of Western Reserve at Cleveland, Ohio.

"FOUR WILL BE FAITHFUL"

Of the attempts to end racial segregation in Montgomery, Gray said:

"The suit will go on regardless of what happens to me as long as there is one plaintiff. I think the other four will stick."

The Grand Jury began its study lost Monday into the bus boycott that was launched Dec. 5, in protest of "jim crow" regulations. The long boycott has been marked by tensions that reached a peak two weeks ago when the homes of two Negro leaders were bombed.

One of those leaders, the Rev. M. L. King, a Baptist minister, said of the Gray indictment:

"It seems to me our boycott has grown more effective instead of losing effectiveness as time goes on and this might make our people more determine than ever."

VISITS ATLANTA

Rev. King, visiting his father, also a Baptist Minister, in Atlanta, said the Montgomery Grand ury is "seeking to declare the boycott illegal, but there is no way to moke people ride the buses.".

He estimated that "less than one per cent" of the city's usual number of Negro bus riders is still riding them.

Declaring the Gray indictment as a "subtle and insidious attempt" to have Gray disbarred, King add-ed:

"Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes are standing behind him with all the strength and influence they have as well as many white friends of goodwill."

The Rev. King said he felt the Grand Jury activ'ty "will increase tension" in the city, but added:

"I believe these tensions utimately will lead to greater harmony between the race in Montgomery None of us enjoys the tensions."

Boycott Attorney Indicted By Jury

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 2-19-56

A Montgomery Negro attorney who has acted as legal arm of the Montgomery bus boycott cases yesterday was arrested on a grand jury indictment charging "unlawful apperance as an attorney" for a person without being employed by that person.

Fred David Gray, 25, was charged specifically with representing Jeaneatta Reese of 1454 S. Holt St., an elderly Negro housemaid in a suit filed in federal court to end segregated travel, without being employed by the woman.

BOOKED AT JAIL

Gray was booked at the Montgomery County Jail at 10:55 a.m. He was fingerprinted and photographed.

The attorney refused to comment to reporters at the time of his arrest.

The grand jury released a partial report Friday charging Gray with violating Title 46, Section 55 of the Alabama Code of 1940. The misdemeanor section reads: "Attorney appearing without authority — any attorney appearing for a person without being employed must, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 and shall be incompetent in any court of this state."

The 1953 section supplement states that the word "appearing" is not limited to representation of a defendant but also includes a plaintiff.

Gray was held in custody for 30 minutes and released on a $300 bond.

FILED SUIT

Witnesses other than the Reese woman listed on the indictment were Q. P. Colvin, 622 E. Dixie Dr., and O. D. Street, clerk of the U.S. District Court.

Early this month, Gray and another Negro attorney, Charles Langford, filed a suit in U.S. Circuit Court seeking to abolish segregated travel on public conveyances in Montgomery and Alabama.

The Reese woman, along with Aurelia S. Browder, Susie McDonald and Claudette Colvin by her next friend, Q. P. Colvin and Rosa Parks were listed as plaintiffs.

WITHOUT AUTHORITY

The grand jury charged that Gray "did unlawfully and knowingly" appear as attorney for Jeaneatta Reese all without authority from the woman and without being employed to do so by the woman.

The Reese woman told Mayor W. A. Gayle the day after the suit was filed she didn't realize what she had signed her name to when the suit was filed. She said she wanted to withdraw her name.

Gray denied the woman's statement and said she knew what she was signing.

A graduate of Western Reserve University, Gray is a member of the Alabama Bar Assn. His draft status was changed recently from porations or associations or persons from carrying on any lawful business."

STARTED IN DECEMBER

The mass protest against seating of white and Negro passengers began on the day that Mrs. Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 in city court. She was arrested after refusing to move to the Negro section of a bus.

Negro leaders led by a 27-year-old Baptist minister, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., demanded a "first come, first served" arrangement which would seat Negroes from the rear and white passengers from the front until all seats were taken.

Under the present arrangement, the dividing line is determined by the driver. Bus company officials rejected the "first come" proposal.

City officials tried unsuccessfully to find a solution and then, after seven weeks of the boycott, announced they were "through pussyfooting around."

WHO CARES?

Ledger 2-19-56

The City Commission abandoned all attempts to settle the differences; told the Negroes it didn't care if they never rode the buses again.

In the same announcement, all three members of the Commission disclosed they had joined the pro-segregation Central Alabama Citizens Council which claims more than 12,000 members in Montgomery and six surrounding counties.

Negro boycott rallies have grown, too, with the meeting places jammed night after night.

Acts of violence have been reported against both the bus company and two Negro leaders, but no one has been injured. Dynamite bombs were exploded at the homes of the Rev. King and E. D. Nixon, former state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Gunshots were fired at some buses while making their rounds through Negro sections of Montgomery in the first week of the protest. Others were targets of rock throwing.

5 FILE SUIT

Meanwhile, five Negroes filed a suit in U.S. District Court attacking as unconstitutional the city and state laws requiring segregation in all public transportation. No hearing has been set.

The suit also asked that city officials be prohibited from "interfering with Negroes, or using force, threats or other intimidation" to compel them to ride the segregated buses.

The Rev. King has called the boycott a part of "something that's happening all over the world" — a revolt against oppression.

"The oppressed peoples of the world are rising up," he told a news conference in Chicago last week.

As the boycott gained force, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal announced a rigid enforcement campaign against overcrowding of automobiles — as a safety measure.

KING ARRESTED

Three days before the bomb exploded at his home, the Rev. King was arrested by city policemen on a speeding charge. The officers said he was going 35 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone; King said he wasn't. The judge fined him $14.

Another Negro prominently identified with the boycott, Atty. Fred Gray who filed the anti-segregation suit on behalf of the five Negroes, was exempt from the military draft when the boycott began. The 25-year-old lawyer was classified 4D as a "practicing minister."

But his draft board reclassified him 1-A last month without mentioning the racial disturbance. State Selective Service Director James W. Jones, who said he ordered Gray's status reviewed, explained the attorney forfeited his right to deferment when his church acquired a fulltime minister.

A state law originally aimed at labor disputes may be used next week to indict some of the participants in the continuing Negro boycott of Montgomery city lines buses.

The Montgomery County Grand Jury, with authority to recommend stiff fines and jail sentences, is expected to make a report Monday or Tuesday climaxing a week-long investigation of the anti-segregation protest.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter charged the jury of 17 white men and one Negro last Monday to determine if the 12-week-old boycott against segregated seating on Montgomery city lines uses is unlawful.

Grand Jury indicts Negro leader in bus boycott case

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 18 —(AP)—Negro Atty. Fred D. Gray, who filed a Federal Court suit seeking to end segregation on city buses recently, was arrested today for unlawful practice.

Gray was arrested under a Grand Jury indictment charging he filed the suit unlawfully and without being employed by one of the plaintiffs, Mrs. Jeanetta Reese.

The 25-year-old attorney was released on $300 bond.

Under this statute, Gray, if convicted, would be required to pay a $500 fine and would be prohibited from practice in any state court.

Shortly after the Federal Court suit was filed, Mrs. Reese gave a statement to the effect that she wanted to withdraw from the action because she didn't realize what she was doing when she signed the petition. Gray denied this.

Recently Gray was reclassified 1-A by his local draft board. He had been exempt as a minister with 4-D classification.

TENSE ATMOSPHERE

Grand Jury Action Looming For Others In Bus Boycott

In a tense atmosphere, a grand jury which has already indicted one spokesman for Montgomery's Negro bus boycott may bring charges early this week against other participants.

The 18-man jury, with one Negro among its members is expected to make its final report late today or Tuesday after questioning scores of witnesses in the week-long investigation.

Meanwhile, Mayor W. A. Gayle, proclaiming Brotherhood Week in the Cradle of the confederacy, said "certain events have caused a tension which should not exist."

Gayle, a member of the pro-segretation central Alabama Citizens Council, urged the people to "do everything possible to relieve said tension and live up to the obligations implicit in the brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God."

EARLY SOLUTION SOUGHT

The mayor and the other two city commissioners, also members of the Citizens Council, sought to settle the anti-segregation boycott in its early stages, but abandoned their efforts last month with a statement that they were "tired of pussyfooting around."

They said they didn't care if the Negroes never ride the buses again.

The boycott began Dec. 5 after a Negro woman, Rosa Parks, was arrested and fined $14 for refusing to move to the colored section of a Montgomery City Lines bus. City and state laws require segregated facilities on all public transportation.

An estimated 75 per cent or more of the Negroes who formerly rode the buses have found other means of tansportation since then. A car pool organized almost with military precision has given rides daily to many of the protesting boycotters.

SUIT FILED

Although the boycott leaders offered at the outset to accept a "first come, first served" segregation arrangement on the bus line, a suit was filed later in U.S. District Court attacking all segregated transportation in Alabama as unconstitutional. No hearing has been set.

Fred D. Gray, 25-year-old Negro attorney who filed the court action in the name of five Negro women, was indicted by the grand jury last Friday on a charge of unlawfully representing one of the women. Arrested Saturday and released on $300 bond, he declined to comment on the charge.

The indictment was based on a statement by Mrs. Jeanetta Reese, one of the five women who signed the petition filed in court. Mrs. Reese told Mayor Gayle in the presence of two newspapermen that she didn't know what she was signing.

ACTION DENOUNCED

Gray insisted at that time that she did know.

Another leader in the lengthening boycott, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., denounced the grand jury's action against Gray as "a subtle and insidious attempt" to have the attorney disbarred and thus hinder the cause of racial integration.

Rev. King, pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church in Montgomery, issued a statement Saturday in Atlanta where he had gone for a speaking engagement.

The clergyman said "50,000 Negroes of Montgomery . . . as well as numerous white Montgomerians of good will" are behind Gray. He expressed confidence the attorney will speedily be acquitted "when this issue comes before fair-minded men in the courts."

If convicted on the indictment, the attorney could be fined $500 and suspended from law practice.

The grand jury, charged by Circuit Judge Eugene Carter to investigate the bus boycott and find out if it violates the law, can return further indictments this week under an old state statute originally aimed at labor disputes.

The anti-boycott law enacted in 1921 and rarely if ever used except in labor strife, makes it unlawful for two or more persons to organize a boycott "without a just cause or legal excuse."

It prohibits any such "combination, conspiracy, agreement, arrangement or understanding" which is aimed at "hindering, delaying or preventing" anyone from conducting a "lawful business."

Maximum penalty is $1,000 fine and six months in jail.

The 12-week-old mass protest against bus segregation has produced several outbursts of violence, but no one has been injured. Rev. King's home was damaged by a dynamite bomb the night of Jan. 30, and 48 hours later another explosion was set off at the home of E. D. Nixon, a former state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Earlier in the boycott, some buses were fired on while making their rounds through Negro sections of Montgomery.

Bus-Boycott Trial Hears Negro Tell of Car Pool

Tribune

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar. 20 (AP).—A Negro leader told today how a smooth-running motor pool provides transportation for bus boycotting Negroes protesting racial segregation. P. 8

Other witnesses testified that a newly organized Montgomery Improvement Association, which came into being the day the boycott started on Dec. 5, arranged for the car pool and has paid for gasoline and other expenses of the drivers.

Herald 3-21-56

The testimony highlighted the second day of the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., first of ninety Negroes brought to trial on boycotting charges.

Heads Association

New York, N.Y.

Mr. King is president of the Improvement Association, and the state is endeavoring to link him to a "conspiracy" to hinder the operation of the racially segregated Montgomery City Lines, Inc., a privately operated company which has a franchise for city bus service.

The indictments against Mr. King and fifty-nine other defendants still awaiting trial charge violation of a state law that prohibits any conspiracy or other agreement, "without cause or legal excuse," to impede the operations of a lawful business.

At one point in the proceedings today, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who will decide Mr. King's guilt or innocence in the absence of a jury, said he tought the state had already established "a prima facie case of conspiracy." But he did not say the prosecution had succeeded in linking Mr. King to it.

How It Operated

Rufus Lewis, chairman of the Improvement Association's transportation committee, told the court how the committee started the car pool soon after the Negroes stopped riding city buses in protest against segregated seating facilities.

Mr. Lewis said the committee arranged to pay volunteer drivers $4 a day for the use of their cars and bought gasoline for some. He said 200 Negro motorists volunteered for the assignments of getting other Negroes to and from work.

Says He Was Fired On

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Mar. 20 (AP).—A white bus driver testified today he was fired on six times the day Negroes began boycotting the the city transit system.

George Henderson said he was fired on Dec. 6 while driving through a Negro residential area. He said two of the six shots pierced a window "two or three feet behind me." He said he saw gun flashes either on the porch or in the sun room of the house of a Negro.

Car Rides for Negroes Told In Boycott Trial

Forming of Motor Pool With Paid Drivers Related In Court; Thousands Reported Spent

Louisville, Ky.

From Wire Dispatches

Montgomery, Ala., March 19.—State's attorneys produced testimony today that a newly formed Negro organization spent several thousand dollars to make automobile rides available to Negroes during the boycott against segregated City buses.

The evidence came during the trial of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., first of 90 defendants called to answer for the mass Negro protest.

Only three prosecution witnesses were called the first day. The trial will resume tomorrow.

Mr. King was identified as president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, which was organized December 5, day the boycott started. The Baptist minister's signature was on numerous checks introduced as evidence.

Purpose Is Noted

Another clergyman, the Rev. A. W. Wilson, a member of the association's executive committee, said the purpose of the new organization was to improve the "general status of the colored people in Montgomery."

As far as he knew the association has done nothing besides seek "better treatment" on the buses, he testified.

Another witness, Mrs. Erna Dungee, financial secretary of the association, identified bank-deposit slips totaling about $30,000.

She also identified photostatic copies of checks signed by herself and Mr. King and another officer, totaling about $4,800 for gasoline.

Motor Pool Formed

Mrs. Dungee said the gasoline was "used to ride colored people, people who wanted to ride."

She also testified Negroes received weekly salaries of $24 as drivers in a motor pool that has provided transportation for the boycotting members of her race.

At one point during the opening day of the first of a series of trials, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter observed that the State had presented sufficient testimony to show that a conspiracy could have existed to boycott Montgomery City Lines, Inc.

Prohibits Conspiracy

The State law under which the mass indictments were returned prohibits a conspiracy or any other agreement to hinder the operation of a lawful business unless there is "just cause or legal excuse" for the agreement. The law provides maximum penalties of a $1,000 fine and six months in jail.

The indictments withstood their first court test earlier today when Judge Carter overruled a defense petition attacking them as unconstitutional.

Mr. King was called to trial as the first defendant after the Negroes asked for separate trials.

Few spectators were admitted to the courtroom, which holds 238 persons, because of the large number of defendants and witnesses—30 for the prosecution and 46 for the defense. The trial was covered by over a score of newsmen.

About 500 Negroes and a few whites sought admission to the courtroom as spectators. They stood in the corridors and stairways of the century-old Courthouse or crowded open windows that offered a view of the courtroom across a courtyard.

Mr. King, 27, whose home was bombed in the early weeks of the boycott, was singled out by Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford as one of the boycott leaders.

Louisville Ky.

But Thetford ran into difficulty at the outset of the trial in trying to link the Baptist pastor to a "conspiracy" to hinder operations of Montgomery City Lines buses.

Objections Sustained

Carter allowed the first witness, bus-company Manager J. H. Bagley, to identify Mr. King as one of several Negroes he conferred with at the onset of the boycott last December, but he sustained defense objections to some other questions.

Judge Carter upheld defense objections when Thetford asked Bagley what caused a "falling off" of his company's business since December 5. The bus-line official said 90 to 95 per cent of the Negroes who formerly rode City buses have stopped using them.

Bagley was allowed to testify that Mr. King and another defendant, Mrs. Jo Ann Robinson, told him they thought the Negroes would resume riding the buses if certain demands were met.

To Contest Decision

The eight defense attorneys, led by Arthur D. Shores, Birmingham, said they would contest Judge Carter's decision in overruling demurrers that said the defendants have committed no unlawful act and therefore can't legally be brought to trial.

Shores, arguing for the demurrers that covered all 90 defendants, said the indictments, under a rarely used State law which prohibits organized boycotting, violated the Negroes' rights of free speech, freedom of worship, and peaceful assembly.

The Negro attorney, who represented Autherine Lucy in her successful court battle for admittance to the University of Alabama before she was expelled, said previous courts have upheld the right of people to refuse to patronize business places.

The number of defendants was reduced to 90 today when the solicitor dismissed three indictments because he said further investigation has thrown "considerable doubt on their guilt."

Paging Adam Powell

Defender 4-9

In Chino, California, nine Negroes who walked off their jobs at an aircraft company to pray were fired.

At first glance this would seem to be a prima facie case of interference with freedom of worship, but a second look-see tells us that somebody got the signals crossed on this prayer day demonstration.

The nine should take their grievance to Congressman Adam Clayton Powell for failure to inform them that he had done a switcherno on his first brash proposal to call a nation-wide work stoppage of Negroes in sympathy with the Montgomery bus boycott.

Chicago Ill.

The idea was a typical example of Powell impulsiveness — jumping into headlines first and then deciding later that this is the wrong thing to do.

4-7-56

The nine should have remembered that one can talk to God on the job as well as off and you don't have to grab a prayer rug and go dashing off to some secluded spot to let "the Man upstairs" know how you feel about a subject.

It would have been much more sensible and helpful to donate an hour's wages as this newspaper suggested and follow the admonition of the old spiritual, "Every time I feel the spirit moving in my heart, I will pray."

Well, all that's water under the bridge now. And we agree that anybody can tell you what you shoulda done after the damage is made; so what we're passing out now is some advice on what to do next and that is: Tell it to Adam.

His office is Suite 459—Old House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C. If the nine can find him, maybe he can fix it up with the company for the boys to work and pray together!

Atlanta Ga.

NEW YORK — (NNPA) — Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat, of New York, Wednesday night called for a "crisis program" to fight any incident of racial intolerance thru the type of passive resistance being used in the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

The program he proposed would be "only led by clergy, quartered only in churches, propelled only by prayer and ready at any hour of the day or night to counteract men

Mr. Powell, pastor of the Abyssiiann Baptist Church here, spoke at an interracial, interfaith National Deliverance Day of Prayer meeting in the Manhattan Center, attended by 3,500 persons, and later to an overflow crowd of 500 in the grand ballroom of the Hotel New Yorker.

The Harlem Congressman also called for a conference of religious leaders with President Eisenhower to supply spiritual support to the forces of integration.

Mr. Powell initiated the "National Deliverance Day of Prayer." The movement was supported by clergymen in local areas scattered across the country.

Under the chairmanship of the Rev. Dan M. Potter, executive secretary of the Protestant Council of New York, the Manhattan Center meeting was conducted as an extension of a church service. The seven hymns sung during the two-hour meeting were those sung every Monday and Thursday at prayer meetings in Montgomery.

B. D. Nixon, treasurer of the Montgomery Improvement Association that is directing the bus boycott, said:

Negro Pastors Say Politics Behind Powell's Move

New York, March 16 (AP) — A group of Negro pastors of more than 50 Long Island Baptist churches has charged Representative Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) was politically motivated in promoting a "national deliverance day of prayer."

Powell, a Negro, also is pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church in Harlem. He has called for a day of prayer March 28 in connection with race tensions and violence in the South.

The Baptist Ministers Fellowship, composed of ministers of churches in Negro communities in Gueens, Nassau, and Suffolk counties, reported today that the charge against Powell was made at a meeting of the fellowship this week.

NEGROES FIGHTING BIAS WITH PRAYER

Fill City Churches to Hear Plea for Rights, Especially in South—Powell Speaks

Mar. 3-5-56

By MURRAY SCHUMACH

Thousands of Negroes gathered in city churches yesterday to fight segregation with prayer and contributions.

With fervent hymns and "Amens" they called on Americans everywhere to join the struggle for Negro rights, particularly in the South.

Zero start

Montgomery, Ala., and the plight of Miss Autherine Lucy, who is trying to be admitted to the University of Alabama, were cited in pleas by ministers, some of whom touched on politics.

The biggest assemblage was at Williams Institutional Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, Seventh Avenue near 132d Street. Its 2,200 seats were filled and standees overflowed the lobby into the street.

Beneath a banner reading "Christ Can Change the World with You!" they listened to four ministers, including the Rev. Dr. Adam Clayton Powell Jr., Democratic member of the House of Representatives.

Similar meetings were held at Holy Convenant Baptist Church, Lewis and Lexington Avenues, Brooklyn, and Victory Baptist Church, 1001 Union Avenue, the Bronx.

Mr. Powell briefly criticized President Eisenhower and Adlai E. Stevenson, Democratic aspirant for the Presidency, but the theme of his speech was religious.

"We are going to shame the wrong elements of the white South so that they are going to get down on their knees and cry out: 'Oh, God, what must I do to be saved!'"

While the congregation called out and prayed, Mr. Powell asked for the "delverance of all people in America who are victims of prejudice."

He said Montgomery must bring home to the United States the lesson that "we can't buy friends in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, and that we can win out against communism only if we make democracy work because too many people all over the world are watching us to see if we practice at home what we preach abroad."

Hopes to See Spellman

The Representative, who is minister of the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 West 138th Street, said he hoped to discuss the movement against racial prejudice with Cardinal Spellman this week. He added that he hoped to persuade President Eisenhower to meet with clergymen of various faiths March 28 for a few minutes of prayer.

Mr. Powell is a leader of a movement to ask for prayers that day to end prejudice as part of National Deliverance Day.

The Rev. Lewis S. White, pastor of Williams Institutional Church, added a touch of humor when, after the collection, he asked those present not to leave before a final prayer.

"You don't leave a ball game until the last man is out," he observed. "Not even a doubleheader."

In the closing prayer Mr. Powell said:

"Deliver Miss Lucy from the hands of a maddened mob. Save us now in this hour of peril by cleansing our hearts. Strengthen the heart of President Eisenhower not only physically but morally that he may speak like a Lincoln."

Faithful Drawn to Churches

Courier 4/4 Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 4-7-56

(By Courier Press Service)

Ministers of all faiths are rejoicing this week in the wake of the National Deliverance Day of Prayer which was held in support of the Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott.

Numbering in the hundreds of thousands, the faithful flocked into thousands of churches across the length and breadth of the United States to "pray for racial justice to be achieved in our time in every area of our country, in every sphere of life."

In addition, labor organizations, civic groups, and various concerns joined in the observance.

CHICAGO HAD an estimated turnout of 28,000 as scores of the city's Baptist churches threw open their doors. At least 12,000 workers at major and independent meat-packing plants stopped their labors for a five-minute observance and prayer.

Employes of the Supreme Liberty Life Insurance Company also bowed their heads in solemn participation.

In New York City, 5,000 persons turned out at a giant rally held in Manhattan Center where the Rev. Adam Clayton Powell, who originally geared the "Prayer Day" proposal, led services. An overflow from this crowd took seats in the ballroom of the Hotel New Yorker.

Over fifty Baptist churches, the Friendship House, a Roman Catholic organization of some 40,000 members, and various Jewish and Protestant groups joined in the observance in New York City.

IN COLUMBUS, Ohio, fifty-three Negro churches participated in the "Prayer Day." These churches represent a combined membership of close to 25,000 people.

The Rev. O. D. Dempsey, executive secretary of the National Deliverance Day of Prayer Movement, claimed that an estimated ten million people had prayed throughout the world.

The "Day" also struck responsive chords in Washington where no less than 28,000 churchgoers turned out . . . and in Boston where the Massachusetts State Legislature suspended all legislative activity for one hour and staged a march down the capitol steps. Commented House Speaker Michael F. Skerry, "It is entirely fitting and proper that we in Massachusetts . . . strike the blow . . . for the oppressed people of the South."

Also in Boston, Archbishop Cushing asserted, "Whenever racial intolerance shows itself in any part of our nation . . . then Christ is crucified again."

IN CALIFORNIA, Gov. Goodwin Knight designated the Day of Prayer by gubernatorial proclamation.

In Pittsburgh, Negro employes of the Levinson Steel Company took time out from their labors to join in the day of prayer after having donated an hour's pay to the Montgomery boycott.

Pittsburgh churches also joined in the observance.

Observances were also noted in New Orleans and Atlanta. But, throughout the South the observances were spotty and not as well-organized as in the North.

Commenting on this paradox, one Southerner told The Courier, "Every day down here is 'prayer day.' It was all right for the people in the North to pray for us, just like we prayed for the men on the battlefields during the war. But like the men at the front, here you never stop praying."

"National Deliverance Day of Prayer" was observed in Memphis with almost 400 persons jamming the Beale Street IBPOE Rest. The event was sponsored by the Lincoln Republican League headed by W. C. Weathers.

Negro Church Prayers Here Seek Divine Interposition In Alabama

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.

Cite Spirit Of Daniel

Prayers in the spirit of the prophet Daniel were offered three times yesterday by small groups meeting in 11 Negro churches of the Louisville area.

The prayer meetings were part of a "national deliverance day of prayer" proclaimed by Negro leaders to ask for "Divine interposition" in the racial upheaval in Alabama.

Prayer services here were at 3 a.m., noon, and 6 p.m. in churches of the National Baptist Convention.

28,000 Attend In Chicago

(An estimated 28,000 persons attended the prayer service in 300 Chicago churches. The largest single meeting was in New York, where 3,500 persons offered prayers for support of the 17-week-old Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

(In Washington, 600 Negroes attended a service where one of the indicted boycott leaders, the Rev. E. N. French, Montgomery, said his city's 50,000 Negroes "decided almost simultaneously that we're tired, we can't take it any more."

(Chairman of the day of prayer was Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., Negro congressman from New York.)

All the services here drew a devotional reading from the Ninth Chapter of Daniel, in which the prophet confesses the sins of his people and asks for the restoration of Jerusalem.

Outlines One Purpose

"O my God," prayed Daniel, "incline Thine ear and hear; open Thine ayes and behold our desolations, and the city which is called by Thy name, for we do not present our supplications before Thee for our righteousness, but for Thy great mercies."

At Beargrass Baptist Church, 201 S. Jane, two women and the pastor sang hymns without accompaniment at the noon meeting.

The Rev. W. H. Sullivan knelt and prayed quietly for 10 minutes.

"We have come here for one purpose," he said. "We've been told and we hear of people in the South—in the city known as Birmingham—where the races are in trouble, the white and the colored."

He spoke of how God created man—"You breathed breath into him . . . and made all of us alike, sons of one God."

"The white," he went on, "feel that they are superior and want us to humble to them. So we come to Thee. Fix our minds right. If we are wrong, lead us to the right."

Referring to the persecution of the children of Israel, he said:

"We are being mistreated, not because we are Israelites, but because we are different in color . . . We don't pretend to be anything but what You would want us to be, humble servants. So hear what is being said today in this hour in many churches.

"We are asking for mercy. Help the people not to be unruly, selfish, and har dot control, but yielding to the right.

"We don't know what to do. We are ignorant of the facts. But we come to you."

Lay Off To Pray, 9 Fired

CHINO, Calif.—One hour's prayer has cost nine Negroes their jobs with a local concern.

The men, who stopped working for one hour, in compliance with the call for a "National Deliverance Day of Prayer," have appeal to their union and the NAACP against their dismissals.

The workers protested the firings as "unjustified" because they were only participating in a "religious observance" at no cost to the company.

One of the workers, Percy Strickland, said the machinists' union would protest the action and that the NAACP had been informed.

Strickland said, "We were warned . . . that if we took the hour off to participate in the Day of Prayer we would be fired; but it was very important to us."

* * *

RALPH SIMPSON, employment manager of the plant, said the company could not condone any such action.

"We regret losing some of our oldest employes. We did everything possible to work out a solution," Simpson said.

About sixteen other Negroes employed by the company did not take part in the observance.

Strickland said the company got in touch with every Negro employed in the plant individuallly after they asked for the hour off.

PRINCETON CLERGY PRAY FOR NEGROES

New York

Town and University Join in Petitioning Also for White Ministers in South

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., March 2—Clregymen of town and gown joined this afternoon in a service of intercession for Negro ministers leading the bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala.

The srevice was held in the chapel of Christ Presbyterian Church, founded here in 1751. Sponsored by the Princeton Pastors Assocation, it was one of a growing number of expressions of sympathy by Protestant groups for the Negro cause in Montgomery.

A similar service was held yesterday by students at Princeton Theological Seminary. They expressed their sympathy for the Negro pastors, in a letter sent this afternoon to Montgomery.

Twenty-one clergymen associated with local churches or Princeton University and a rabbi attended the service this afternoon. Scripture reading was shared by white and Negro ministers.

The short prayer of intercession asked that the white clergymen in the South be granted "integrity and wisdom for difficult times." It concluded:

"Let us pray for our Negro fellow ministers in the South—and particularly in Alabama—that God may preserve them and their loved ones from danger, that He may sustain in their hearts the spirit of forgiveness and trust, and that their witness may be made effective in His cause."

At the service $84 was collected and $125 more is expected. The money will be sent to the Negro ministers in Montgomery.

The Rev. Dr. John Bodo, minister of First Presbyterian, explained that the service had been limited to local clergymen so that a sincere expression of prayer and support could be made without "a lot of Yankees getting on their high horses at a safe distance."

Letter Sent by Students

The letter sent by seminary students this afternoon to all clerfymen in Montgomery expressed concern over the "extreme difficulties" faced by the white ministers. It also said:

"To you our Negro brethren who have taken active leadership in the present struggle of your people for justice in our common life, we wish to express our sharing with you in your present sufferings.

"That you have chosen to guide your people in a peaceful and not a violent search for freedom has caused us to rejoice in the wisdom and Christian aspiration of your seeking to do God's will."

The letter was signed by 127 of the 500 students at the seminary. Two are Negroes. It was noted that "no qualified Negroes have ever been excluded" from the seminary.

The letter was available for voluntary signing in the dining hall last night and this noon. Those who signed included students from both the North and South.

Support for the Negro clergymen in Montgomery has been expressed recently by the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. Other expressions of sympathy and support have come from Union Theological Seminary and several clergymen in New York.

The West Virginia Council of Churches is among the Protestant groups in other states that have declared their support this week for the Negro cause in Montgomery.

April 11 Event To Aid Boycott

Defender Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 4-7-56

Chicago labor leaders are going all-out in mobilizing support for the April 11 "Hour of Prayer" and mass rally in support of the bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala., and the embattled Negroes of the South in their fight for justice and first class citizenship.

The mass rally will be held at 7 p. m., Wednesday, April 11, at the Chicago Coliseum, 15th st., and Wabash ave.

All is under the auspices of the Chicago Branch of the NAACP supported by numerous labor, church, civic and community organizations.

LABOR COMMITTEE

The Labor Committee of the NAACP headed by James Kemp and Lucius Love made a strong appeal for attendance.

A special committee-"The NAACP Funds for the South Labor Committee," co-chaired by George F. McCray, chairman of the Civil Rights Committee of the Illinois Industrial Union Council, CIO, and Mark Allen, secretary-treasurer, Amalgomated Meat Cutters Union Local 547, AFL is organizing the campaign for support by labor.

Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, indicted leader of the heroic movement of the 50,000 Montgomery Negroes against the buses, will give a first hand report of the bus boycott. Roy Wilkins, national executive secretary of the NAACP, will give an up to the minute picture of the struggle of the embattled Negroes of the South for dignity, justice and freedom.

ALL FAITHS HELP

The "Hour of Prayer" will be conducted by the ministry of Chicago with representatives of all denominations and religious groups participating. The "Hour of Prayer" is co-chaired by Rev. A. Lincoln James and Rev. Archibald J. Carey, jr.

"Negroes in the South are giving us and the rest of the world an inspiring performance," said the labor leaders.

But they added, "We know from bitter past experience it will take more than raw courage by Negro leaders and the fighting spirit of their followers to stand up long against the superior political and economic power of White Citizens' Councils.

The NAACP and its Labor Committee are calling upon all workers to contribute at least one hour's pay to aid their brothers in the South. "Their fight is our fight, united we stand to march forward to an America free of segregation and discrimination, divided we will fall before the assaults of the Dixiecrats and race bigots everywhere," they declared.

"Every dollar raised for the fund will be expanded on behalf of the Montgomery Bus Boycott and to aid through the NAACP thousands of Negroes who, because of their courage, have been attacked and victimized by the White Citizens Councils in Southern states," said the labor leaders.

Strickland and his fellow workers walked off their jobs Wednesday for an hour of prayer in connection with the boycott of city buses in Montgomery, Ala.

Ralph Simpson, plant employment superintendent for the firm, Pacific Airmotive Co., said he had warned the men not to take the time off, but they disobeyed his orders. Therefore, he said, they were fired for insubordination.

Guy Voyer, the company's manager of industrial relations, added:

Representatives of all denomination and religious groups in the city will participate. Rev. A. Lincoln James and Rev. Archibald J. Carey, Jr., will co-chair the "Hour of Prayer."

Musical offerings will be by the robed choirs of Chicago churches under the direction of J. Wesley Jones.

Star attraction at the mass report meeting following the "Hour of Prfayer" will be Rev. Ralph D. Abehnathy, one of the two foremost leaders of the boycott and vice-president of the Montgomery Improvement Association which has conducted the mass protest movement against segregation and discrimination on the buses.

It was the 29-year-old Rev. Abernathy, who originated the bus boycotters slogan as they walk many miles rather than continue the humiliation of Jim Crow and Brayality on the buses, "We'll walk with God."

Attorneys Granted 10 Days For Appeal To Higher Court

Advertiser Wed. 6-20-56

Montgomery, Ala.

By FRANK McARDLE

A federal three-judge panel issue a permanent injunction yesterday against segregation on Montgomery transportation vehicles, although the order was suspended for 10 days to allow in appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, city buses continued operating practically without Negro passengers today, now under the aded burden of conflicting court orders—the federal court injunction requiring desegregation, and a circuit court injunction ordering maintenance of separate seating of the races.

The injunction order, which puts into effect a decision by the panel two weeks ago outlawing bus segregation, also provides an indefinite period of suspension of the order pending completion of the appeal.

If the appeal is filed within the 10 days, the panel said the suspension will remain in efect until a new rder can be written to continue the stay of the execution.

The federal injunction, another 2-12-1 majority decision, came only a few hours after city attorneys had submitted written recommendations to the panel, requesting a stay of execution on the original decision of June 5.

Judge Frank M. Johnson, f the U.S Middle Districe of Alabama signed the injunction order along with Judge Richard T. Rives of the U.S. Fifth Circuit of Appeals.

The dissenting vote was again cast by Judge Seybourne H. Lynne of the U.S. Northern District of Alabama. Lynn, who also voted against the original decision, favored the suspension provisions of the injunction.

The action in settin local bus desegregation into motion followed a conferenct late yesterday between Judges Johnson and Rives. Judge Lynne, at his office in Birmingham, was contacted earlier for his decision in the ruling.

Any further prolongation of the seven-month old bus boycott was assured with the suspension provisions of the injunction order. Rev. HM. L. King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, sponsors of the boycott, said earlier Negroes would continue their protest by not riding buses until appeal action is completed.

King said although he had not conferred with Negro attorneys, "the predominant feeling of the Negroes I am sure, would be to continue the bus protest movement until appeal action has been completed."

TWO COURT ORDERS

The city bus lines were placed in the peculiar position of being under conflicting orders of two courts. Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones recently granted the city an injunction against the bus firm to require the continued maintenance of separate seats for white and Negro passengers.

Acting on a misinterpreted federal decision in a South Carolina bus segregation case, the National City Lines Inc., of which the local bus firm is a subsidiary, ordered its drivers to discountine requiring Negroes to move to the rear of buses.

Alabama Attorney General John Patterson yesterday filed a recommendation with the three-judge panel asking the order abolishing segregation be stayed pending an appeal to the Supreme Court. Patterson acted on behald of the Public Service Commission, one of the defendants in the original suit against segregated buses.

The injunction order, released by Judge Johnson without comment, ruled, in effect, that the defendants in the action, the City of Montgomery, Montgomery City Lines Inc., Alabama Public Service Commission, and the individual parties named in the suit, are "hereby permanently enjoined and restrained from enforcing the aforesaid statutes and ordinances or any other statutes which may require plaintiffs or any other Negroes similarly situated to submit to segregation in the use of bus transportational facilities in the City of Montgomery. . .and from doing any acts or taking any action to require Montgomery Bus Lines Inc., or its drivers to enforce such statutes or ordinances requiring segregation of white and Negro passengers."

The latent effect of the ruling was provided in the following clause, "the injunction granted by this judgment is suspended for 10 days from the date hereof, with such injunction to be further suspended until an additional order can be entered suspending the injunction during the appeal."

PREFERRED CASE

Judge Rives said an appeal to the Supreme Court, now in recess until October, would be a preferred case since the injunction is suspended.

"It's very likely the Supreme Court will consider the case by early next year," Rives said. "A decision will probably not be made before that time at the earliest, I would think."

An appeal from the suspension of the injunction would go to Justice Hugo Black in his capacity as circuit judge. Black is a former Alabama senator.

Neither City Atty. Walter Knabe nor Alabama Atty. Gen. Patterson would say immediately what their next step would be. Knabe said he would make a statement after conferring with the City Commission.

Negro Atty. Charles Langford said his next move in uncertain. He and other Negro lawyers can ask the Supreme Court to set the suspension order aside without waiting for the high court to review the desegregation decision on its merits.

The Supreme Court is in recess for the summer, but the Negroes can appeal directly to one of the justices.

Suit Challenging Bus Segregation Set For May 11

Post-Herald Thurs. 4-5-56

MONTGOMERY, April 4 (AP)—A federal suit challenging constitutionality of Alabama's bus segregation laws will be heard here May 11 by a three-judge panel. Birm, Ala.

U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., a member of the panel, said evidence in the case will be heard before any ruling is made on motions by the defendants to dismiss the suit.

The action was filed by four Negro women as an outgrowth to the bus boycott by Negroes which has continued here since last Dec. 5. It attacks the legality of bus segregation laws under both the state and U. S. Constitutions.

The defendants include members of the Montgomery City Commission, the Alabama Public Service Commission, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, Montgomery City Lines Bus Co., and two drivers for the bus company.

also from the other two plaintiffs, Mrs. Aurelia Browder and Mary Louise Smith.

City Atty. Walter Knabe tried to show through cross-examination that the Negroes made no attack on the segregation laws until after the bus boycott started. The mass refusal to ride city buses has continued without letup for nearly six months.

The suit heard today was filed on Feb. 1, about seven weeks after the boycott began.

Mayor W. A. Gayle and Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers of Montgomery, both members of the suit, testified that in their opinion an end of segregation would bring "violence and bloodshed."

But Negro attorneys Robert Carter of New York and Orzell Billingsley of Birmingham pointed out that segregation has been abolished at federal buildings and various installations in Alabama without violence.

In fact, they noted the absence of segregation in the federal courtroom where the hearing was in progress.

Negroes at Mass Meeting Vow To Continue Boycott

Courier-Journal Fri. 2-24-56

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 23 (AP)—Shouting, hymn-singing Negroes vowed tonight to continue their mass protest against "oppression" and dedicated themselves to a swelling movement of "passive resistance."

They cheered wildly when their leaders promised that "nothing will change" i nthe 11-week-old boycott against city buses even though close to 100 of them face possible jail sentences for their part in the boycott. P. 23

But they chorused "amen" when first one clergyman then another cautioned them against violence and prayed for divine guidance for "those who hate us." Louisville, Ky.

Every Seat Taken

Every seat and almost every inch of standing room was jammed at the Negro First Baptist Church where the Negroes had been summoned to a mass prayer meeting.

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, the pastor and one of 24 ministers indicted, estimated the crowd at about 5,000. Loud-speakers carried the program to several hundred outside the church who couldn't find room inside.

The crowd also promised, at the suggestion of their leaders, to join tomorrow in a city-wide "pilgrimage" of walking to and from work, shunning even the use of their private cars.

To Join Nonriders

"We will demonstrate to those people who don't have cars and have walked for the past 80 days (the bus boycott began December 5) that we are willing to walk with them," Mr. Abernathy said.

"It is not expected that a race-loving Negro will turn the switch on his car or touch the starter, and you know nobody is going to ride the buses."

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and another defendant in the boycott prosecutions, appealed to the vast throng to shun any form of violence.

"If we are arrested every day, if we are exploited every day, if we are trampled down every day," he cried, "let nobody pull you so low as to hate them.

"We must use the weapon of love. We must have compassion and understanding for those who hate us. So many people have been taught to hate, taught from the cradle. They are not totally responsible."

'More Than A Boycott'

King said the uprising is "more than a boycott." Instead, he said it can be more adequately described as a mass protest by a people who are "tired of the conditions they experienced for so many years."

"It is not a conflict between the white race and the Negro race," the minister declared. "It is a conflict between justice and injustice."

Abernathy called the mass protest a "show of Negroes all over America, a show of all freedom-loving peoples all over the world."

The mass prayer meeting came on the eve of the first scheduled court appearance of those named in the grand-jury indictments.

FOUR OPEN TEST OF SEGREGATION

Montgomery Women Seek to Enjoin Practice

By REX THOMAS

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 11 (AP)—City attorneys resisted an attack on Alabama's segregation laws today with a persistent effort to show that complaining Negroes were willing to live under them until recent weeks. P. 12

But the four Negro women who filed a suit in federal court contesting the racial barriers on city buses as unconstitutional insisted they are opposed to segregation in any form and always have been.

One of the plaintiffs, Claudette Colvin, explained that "some of us didn't have the guts to stand up" before.

New Orleans

Heard by Three-Judge Court

A three-judge panel heard three hours of testimony during the morning and then called for arguments from opposing lawyers after a lunch recess. Testimony was completed shortly after noon.

Another issue given prominent attention was whether city officials and Montgomery City Lines, Inc., are enforcing state as well as municipal segregation laws. The judges hearing the suit had announced earlier that there would be no immediate decision on the segregation issue or the question of jurisdiction.

Judge Richard T. Rives of the 5th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals said, "This is an important case and will be studied and deliberated."

Injunction Asked

In their suit, the Negroes are asking for an injunction to prohibit continued enforcement of segregation laws and a declaratory judgment holding them unconstitutional.

The decision on application of state laws will be a determining factor in the panel's ruling on whether it has jurisdiction to judge the segregation issue on its merits, or whether the suit must start again in another court.

If the three judges rule on the segregation issue, their decision can be appealed directly to the Supreme Court. But the enforcement of a state law must be involved before a panel such as the one presiding today can take jurisdiction.

City Laws Invoked

The city contends that only municipal ordinances have been in force, although Negro attorneys brought out during the hearing that some members of their race arrested for violating segregation ordinances have been charged also with state offenses.

The four Negro women who filed the suit all testified they were forced to give up their seats on city buses so white passengers could sit down. They all said they stopped riding buses last Dec. 5, the day the mass Negro bus boycott began, but that they would ride them again if segregation is abolished.

Montgomery City Lines abandoned segregation on April 24, but Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in state court two days ago ordered the integration policy rescinded. He held that city and state laws are still in effect despite a recent Supreme Court decision.

Woman Screams in Court

An unidentified Negro woman in the courtroom screamed and was led sobbing from the room this morning when the 16-year-old Colvin girl told of being arrested and taken to jail handcuffed on March 2, 1955, for refusing to give up her seat on a bus.

Another witness, 77-year-old Mrs. Suxie McDonald, testified she was forced by a bus driver to give her seat to a white passenger. Similar testimony came

89 Answer 'Not Guilty' At Bus Boycott Hearing

Sat. 2-25-56 P. 1

By TOM JOHNSON

Eighty-nine Negroes accused of fostering an unlawful boycott against Montgomery City Lines buses answered "not guilty" at arraignment proceedings yesterday in Circuit Court.

Judge Eugene Carter set the week of March 19 for trial of all cases.

Defense attorneys filed demurrers contesting the indictments which charged violation of the Alabama law against "illegal" boycotting.

Judge Carter withheld ruling on the demurrers which claim, in effect, that the state has failed to make a case even if the facts alleged in the indictments are true.

Meanwhile, it was difficult to gauge the success of "prayer and pilgrimage day," passionately proclaimed by Negro ministers on Wednesday.

Police officers reported no "marked" difference in Negro motor traffic.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers observed that there didn't "seem to be many more Negroes walking than usual."

MANY WALKING

A Negro taxi cab owner, Felix Thomas, said his business was "excellent" but that a "whole lot of Negroes" were walking.

Accurate estimates were hard to make in the absence of knowledge about what constitutes a "normal" movement of Negro traffic in the boycott.

Negro clergymen called for a mass 24-hour pilgrimage on foot to prove their willingness to walk if necessary to carry on the 11-week-old boycott.

It is part of what the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy called "passive resistance," a Ghandi phrase meaning stoic, unyielding, non-violent resistance.

Abernathy and Rosa Parks, whose arrest precipitated the bus boycott, were among the last to be called for arraignment—a legal formality of reading the indictments, taking pleas and setting trial.

Arraigned earlier were the Rev. M. L. King, Dexter Avenue Baptist Church; the Rev. L. R. Bennett, Mt. Zion AME Church; E. D. Nixon, a Pullman porter and former president of the state NAACP; and the Rev. Edgar M. French, Hilliard Chapel AME Zion Church.

INDICEMENT DROPPED

An indictment against one Negro, the Rev. A. W. Wilson, was dropped at the request of Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford because Wilson testified before the grand jury which returned the indictments.

P. 8-A

Judge Carter ruled that made him immune from prosecution.

Sixteen counts were dropped because of duplication. Ten indictments are outstanding, Circuit Clerk John Mathews said.

After yesterday's developments, it appeared that no more than 99 persons will be involved in the boycott trials, instead of 115, as earlier thought.

From the courthouse, the Negroes walked to King's church on Dexter avenue for a prayer meeting.

The ministers also came up with a proposed theme song, written to the tune of "Oldtime Religion."

Sample verse: "We are moving on to victory, we are moving on to victory, we are moving on to victory, with hope and dignity."

Following the prayer meeting, the group walked to the Capitol and were photographed in jubilant poses by an out-of-town photographer.

At one point, when the crowd tied up traffic, police cleared the streets.

Negro Lawmaker Calls For Boycott 'Support'

NEW YORK, Feb. 24 (AP)—A one-hour work stoppage and a day of prayer for every Negro in the nation was proposed today in support of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-NY), Negro pastor of a 15,000-member New York congregation, said Negro leaders have agreed on such a demonstration March 28—a Wednesday.

It would be known as "National Deliverance Day of Prayer," with no Negro of any age attending school or working between 2 and 3 p.m.

As a preliminary, one - hour prayer sessions will be held in New York Negro churches starting next week, and mass meetings will be held in key Negro churches.

Boycott Indictments Likened To 'Soviets'

CHARLESTON, S.C., Feb. 24 (AP)—Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said tonight the indictment of 100 Montgomery, Ala., Negro leaders under a state anti-boycott law was "the Soviet communism method."

"Here we have the police knocking on doors and taking men away," he said. "Here we have mass arrests. Here we have a grand jury. Delivering a general lecture on the observance of the segregation line. Precisely like the Communists."

NAACP PARLEY

Wilkins spoke at the Southeast Regional Convention of NAACP. In his prepared speech he criticized Thomas Waring, editor of the Charleston News and Courier for a recent Harper's Magazine article on the race situation in the South; attacked the White Citizens' Council for "creating the climate in which violence has occurred"; and said "United States senators cannot go about the country preaching lawless defiance of courts and constitutional government without sharing the responsibility for the violence that may ensue."

'CUPS RUN OVER'

Discussing the Montgomery bus boycott by Negroes, Wilkins said "Montgomery whites claim not to be able to understand 'their' Negroes. Well, I'll be glad to explain. 'Their' Negroes are sick and tired of segregation, of the insults and mistreatment and daily humiliations. It is that simple. Their cups have run over.

"The grand jury to the contrary, there was no 'outside interference' at Montgomery. Negro ministers there took the lead and guided their flocks toward dignity. The entire nation has been inspired by their quiet Chrisitan courage."

FREEDOM TIME

"The time has come for freedom," said Wilkins.

"And what do we ask when we say the time is here?

"We ask the acknowledgement of our status as citizens. We ask the rights and privileges and responsibilities of citizenship. We ask equality with other citizens under the law."

More Arrests Coming Today

For Leaders In Protest Move

Thurs. 2-23-56

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

Montgomery County deputies arrested 75 Negro political, religious and educational leaders here yesterday and expect to book a top "face card" today in a wholesale roundup of 115 persons indicted by a Montgomery County grand jury on boycotting charges.

The 115 Negroes from almost every walk of life were indicted Tuesday by an 18-man grand jury which included a Negro. The Negroes are accused of taking an "active part" in the 11-week-old racial boycott against the Montgomery City Lines buses.

The huge group will be arraigned Friday before Judge Eugene Carter who ordered the grand jury to investigate the boycott. Trial dates will be set by Judge Carter.

NO DIFFICULTY

No difficulty was reported or noted in the roundup of the 75 Negroes yesterday. They were jovial and in high spirits as they were taken through the arrest process at the county jail.

Only at one time, just before noon, was there any type of demonstrative attitude shown by Negroes. A crowd gathered around a Pittsburgh Negro reporter and sounded grievances and comments about the indictments. Sheriff Mac Sim Butler dispersed the crowd with instructions he would take stronger action if they grouped again.

Besides more than a score of Negro ministers, some of them nationally known, the big attention in the arrests was centered on Rosa Parks, a seamstress whose arrest sparked the boycott of the bus line on Dec. 5. She was booked at that time for refusing to move to the Negro section of the bus.

POINT OF PROTEST

Her arrest was the point of protest which Negroes claimed for the one-day boycott of buses on the day she was tried. But at a meeting later at the Holt Street Baptist Church, the Negroes voted to extend the boycott. It has been running about 11 weeks with only a scattering of Negroes riding the buses in any sections of the city.

Yesterday as she was arrested at the jail, she seemed rather quiet and reserved. Earlier Judge Carter had sentenced her to 14 days in jail in lieu of the $14 fine which she was assessed in city court for violating segregation laws. She appealed Judge Carter's decision to the State Supreme Court and immediately following her announcement went to the jail to be booked on the boycott charge.

All of those arrested were released on $300 bond. None remained in jail.

Three well known Negro political figures were among those arrested. They were E. D. Nixon, former state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and president of the Montgomery Progressive Democratic Assn., P. M. Blair, the "bronze mayor" of Montgomery, and Jo Ann Robinson, president of the Women's Political Council.

Advertiser 2-A

Another well known political figure, Rufus Lewis, who is president of the Citizens' Club, an organization of Negro voters, was brought in for arrest but later it was discovered he wasn't indicted. He had appeared as a witness before the grand jury. However, Lewis' name did appear on a four-page list of those indicted. But after the error was discovered, Lewis was released.

Lewis voluntarily came to the jail. And after being released, he remained there for several hours.

Most prominent in national religious circles and the oldest man to be arrested was Dr. M. C. Cleveland, pastor of the Day Street Baptist Church, chairman of the board of trustees of the Selma University, and chairman of the Home Missions Board of the National Baptist Convention. The 72-year-old minister was arrested late in the day.

Also arrested was the Rev. Roy Bennett, one of two persons who voted against 3,998 other Negroes to end the boycott Monday night. Bennett said he thought the boycott had served its purpose.

As the arrests went on, other developments in the boycott included an invitation of Gov. James E. Folsom to newspaper editors and publishers to discuss racial relations at a conference Friday, and an announcement on the appeal of Attorney Fred Gray who is seeking to regain a 4-L classification after being reclassified as 1-A.

In Washington, Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national director of Selective Service, said that even though the appeals board action in denying a relief from the reclassification was unanimous there are still two opportunities for review of Gray's case within the Selective Service system.

Hershey told a reporter that the Alabama state director on his own volition could take an appeal to the national director in the event of a protest to him, or he could take an appeal to the presidential appeals board. Hershey said he did not know whether the state director had decided to appeal. He declined to forecast what his own action might be if a protest is lodged with him, saying that, until he had studied the file, he would not know the facts.

FILED ANSWER

City attorneys also filed an answer in U.S. Circuit Court along with a motion to dismiss a pending suit seeking to outlaw city and state laws which require bus and railroa dsegregation.

It was that lawsuit which brought an indictment against Gray on unlawful practice. He was charged with filing the complaint without the consent of one of the five Negro women whose names were signed to the anti-segregation petition.

Court Upholds Parks Verdict

Advertiser 2/1
Montgomery Ala.

A Recorder's Court conviction against Rosa Parks, Montgomery Negro chared with violation of a city bus segregation ordinance, was upheld yesterday in Circuit Court.

Journ. 2-23-56

Judge Eugene W. Carter fixed a sentence of 70 days jail confinement, including 14 days for the lower court conviction and 5 days for Circuit Court costs.

A notice of appeal backed by a $100 bond was filed immediately by the Parks woman's attorney, Charles Langford. The Negro seamstress was arrested Dec. 1 following an incident on a City Lines bus. The defendant was charged with refusing to move to the rear of a Washington Park bus.

The Parks woman was fined $10 and costs, totalling $14, or 14 days in jail on Dec. 5, the date on which the current bus boycott originated in protest to the womans conviction.

A jury did not hear the defendant's case in Circuit Court yesterday.

Mass Indictment Sets Record For Montgomery County Jury

Montgomery, Ala.
Wed. 2-22-56

Montgomery County deputies will begin rounding up 115 persons early today on charges of participating in the Negro boycott against the Montgomery City Lines here.

The wholesale roundup will result from indictments returned by a Montgomery County grand jury which reported yesterday violence is inevitable if race relations do not improve here.

Names of the defendants and specific cases are kept secret until the accused persons are taken into custody.

The 115 arrests will include the largest group of people ever indicted by a grand jury on a single charge in the history of Montgomery County.

ENACTED IN 1921

The charge against the group is violation of a state law enacted in 1921. It originally was aimed at labor disputes. The law makes an organized boycott unlawful without a "just cause or legal excuse." Violations are punishable by $1,000 fines or six months in jail.

The grand jury reported it had discovered in its findings:

1. That the boycott originated with 18 members of what the jury called the Inter-Denominational Alliance composed mostly of Negro ministers. The 18 members, the jury charged, created the Montgomery Improvement Assn., which has directed the boycott.

2. That $18,000 has been spent by the association in financing the boycott against the bus line.

The jurors warned of "the growing tension" between the races and said that the atmosphere is creating "distrust, dislike and hatred."

11 TRUE BILLS

Only 11 true bills were returned in the grand jury's final report but an official source who wouldn't be quoted by name said 115 defendants were named in the multiple documents.

The grand jury included a Negro waiter, E. T. Sinclair, and the following white members: Zeb Collier, J. H. Cook, William F. Crenshaw, Cecil Frizzle, Jesse A. Gorrie, V. Van Metcalfe, Jack Milligan, Felder A. Miller, George Parker, James D. Rushing, Thomas W. Sewell, James C. Shepard, Evans D. Shine Jr., and Ben M. Wilbanks.

The boycott of local buses has continued here for 11 weeks and efforts to end the campaign against riding buses have met with complete failure.

Two groups, the Montgomery City Commission and a civic association, the Men of Montgomery, attempted to solve the strike but proposals by both groups were turned down by Negroes.

The Men of Montgomery proposal Monday night was given a resounding 3,998 to 2 defeat as Negroes vowed to continue walking until they receive broader concessions.

One indictment growing out of the boycott was returned by the jurors last Friday. A Negro attorney, Fred Gray, 25, was charged with unlawful practice growing out of an anti-segregation suit filed in U.S. District Court.

H Wentley

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that the NAACP will defend Gray. He added that "offhand" he thought the NAACP would take a part in defending any others indicted for violating the boycott statute.

p. 2

It was announced yesterday that Gray has been docketed for trial on Friday, March 2, before a Circuit Court jury.

Gray was accused of filing an anti-segregation suit in U.S. District Court without the consent of one of the five Negro women whose names were signed to the complaint. If convicted, he could be fined $500 and suspended from practice.

Gray filed the court suit as an outgrowth of the mass refusal to ride Montgomery City Lines buses. The petition questions constitutionality of city and state laws which require segregation on all public transportation. No date has been set for hearing on the suit.

ONE OF 114

The indictment against the Negro attorney was one of 114 true bills returned by the grand jury in its partial report, but none of the others were related to the bus protest, court officials said.

Several attempts have been made to settle the boycott since it began Dec. 5 in protest against the arrest of a Negro woman who had refused to move to the colored section of a bus. The defendant, Rosa Parks, was fined $14 in city court

The lengthening boycott has brought some violence but no injuries. Dynamite bombs were exploded at the homes of two of the leading figures in the Negro protest movement—the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and E. D. Nixon. King is pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church and one of the most outspoken boycott leaders. Nixon is former state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

In making its report, the grand jury stated it followed instructions of Circuit Judge Eugene Carter in making investigations and indictments for boycott activity.

Judge Carter had outlined the law which prohibits "conspiracies and combinations" in the organization of resistance or boycotting of business firms.

Presenting the cases to the grand jury were Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford and his assistant, Robert Stewart.

More than 200 witnesses were called in the eight-day proceedings held in the Montgomery County Courthouse.

BY 5 WOMEN

Meanwhile, attorneys for four city officials filed an answer to a segregation suit brought in Federal Court by five Negro women.

With the answer, was filed a motion for dismissal of the action, and denial of a declaratory judgment on the plaintiffs have been deprived of "rights, privileges and immunities" as a result of city and state laws requiring segregaton aboard buses.

Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioners Frank Parks and Clyde Sellers and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal were the city officials named in the suit, which was also brought against Montgomery City Lines Inc. and bus drivers James F. Blake and Robert Cleere.

Attorneys petitioned for dismissal on grounds the governor of Alabama, the attorney general and the Alabama Public Service Commission were not made parties to the suit.

The petition also contended that one of the Negro women, Jeanetta Reese, was made a plaintiff "without her knowledge or consent."

Other grounds listed as supporting dismissal of the suit:

That Mary Louise Smith and Claudette Colvin, who have previously been arrested in connection with violating segregation statutes, had opportunity in state courts to "adjudicate all matters" now before the federal court.

That the plaintiffs have suffered no irreparable injury.

That the federal court should decline to act on the constitutional issue until it is first determined in a state court.

That the federal court has "judicial knowledge that harmony between Negro and white races in this city depends upon continued segregation."

And that the "wrongs and damages" alleged by the plaintiffs occurred in the legal enforcement of city and state laws.

Attorneys for the city officials are Walter Knabe, Drayton N. Hamilton and Herman H. Hamilton Jr.

Boycotting Illegal Under Alabama Law

A state law on "boycotting and blacklisting" was the basis on which the grand jury indictments were returned.

Ttitle 14, sections 54-61, Code of 1940 makes misdemeanors of such practices as: "conspiracy, combination or agreement to interfere with or hinder business; loitering or picketing; printing or circulating notice of boycotts; using force or threats against persons engaging in lawful occupation."

Others include: "maintaining blacklist, misdemeanor; attempt or threat to injure or destroy property of another; taking possession of property or instrumentality of another, and teaching, printing books or papers or organizing persons to violate provisions of law."

Appeals Board Upholds Lawyer's Draft Status

The Appeals Board of the Middle District of Alabama yesterday upheld the decision of a local draft board in classifying Negro Atty. Fred David Gray as 1-A.

The decision of the board was announced last night by State Selective Service Director James W. Jones.

The action of the board came on a unanimous vote, thereby blocking Gray from any further appeal to higher authorities. Laws relating to the subject specify that a unanimous decision by an appeal board cannot be further appealed.

Gray had been classified as 4-D, the classification of a "practicing minister," since 1948. Under that classification he was exempt from military service. However, 10 days ago the local board reclassified the Negro as 1-A.

Gray's argument in support of his ministerial classification was that he was a part-time preacher at the Holt Street Church of Christ and had attended a church school in Nashville, Tenn.

The appeal board's action came only three days after Gray had been indicted by the Montgomery County grand jury on a charge of unlawfully representing a person without having been employed by that person.

This indictment stemmed from a suit Gray and another Negro attorney filed in a federal court here seeking to void Alabama's segregation laws on public vehicles.

Conviction of that charge automatically would provide for Gray's disbarment in Alabama

Negro Pastors Press Bus Boycott By Preaching Passive Resistance

Herald Tribune Mon. 2-27-56

'Integration Is Great Issue of Our Age,' Leader of Montgomery Fight Asserts—Sees Victory as One for Democracy

By WAYNE PHILIPS

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 26—Montgomery's Negro ministers—twenty-four of them under indictment in the current bus boycott—preached the doctrine of passive resistance today.

And in their churches special collections were taken up, as they have been for the last eleven weeks, to help support the car-pool that transports Negroes to and from work.

In the sermons today there was a new and stronger emphasis, however, perhaps the result of the solidarity the city's Negroes have shown in the face of last week's ninety arrests.

The boycott, which began as a protest against what was considered unfair segregation, now was being equated with an attack on all segregation.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. president of the organization that has led the bus protest, returned after two weeks out of the city to his pulpit in the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, a red-brick building almost at the foot of the State Capitol.

'A Great Struggle'

"Integration is the great issue of our age, the great issue of our nation and the great issue of our community," he told the 300 worshipers at his church.

"We are in the midst of a great struggle, the consequences of which will be world-shaking," he said. "But our victory will not be a victory for Montgomery's Negroes alone. It will be a victory for justice, a victory for fair play and a victory for democracy.

"Were we to stop right now, we would have won a victory because the Negro has achieved from this a new dignity. But we are not going to stop. We are going on in the same spirit of love and protest, and the same dignity we have shown in the past."

Reverend King's sermon was on the subject "Faith in Man"—condemning man's pessimism about himself and his future, and declaring that the Christian faith was faith in man's ability to rise above his own evil nature, his heredity and his environment.

"There is something deep down in our Christian faith that says that man, however low, can be lifted," Mr. King said. "No man will so exploit me, no man so trample me, that I will not believe there is hope in human nature.

"Even though there are men standing on the sinking sands of injustice, even though there are men standing on the sinking sands of exploitation, I will not believe that deep down within them there is no rock of human kindness. If you just keep on loving a man ultimately you will get down to the God in him."

Reverend King tolled off a list of leaders from Christ to those of today who had risen above their environment.

"Thank God there are some peopl ein America today," he said, "who can rise above their environment, above their community, above the backward opinions of their parents, above the teachings they've been brought up under—and stand up for what is right.

"I'm not worried about the death of oppression, I'm not worried about the death of segregation. I know segregation cannot survive for God will get into the hearts of men. Ultimately the most prejudiced mind in Montgomery, the most prejudiced mind in America, will become a loving mind. And twenty-four years from now men will look back and laugh, even at segregation."

In his appeal for funds to support the protest movement, Reverend King declared:

"We have to be very careful that no one exploits this movement.

"We all know," he said, "that the Till case was exploited too much. We need money, but we're not going to do anything and everything to get it. No one is going to get fat on this, and no one is going to get any handouts."

Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, chairman of the negotiating committee that failed in the last attempts to settle the boycott, told his congregations of supporting telegrams and financial contributions that had come from all over the country.

"The telegrams told us to hold out, keep the faith and keep moving," he said. In the morning's mail, he added, there had come $1,200 in contributions to help support the protest, some of it from northern white people.

250 At Church Services

"Our white friends are with us, you don't have to make this fight alone," he told the 250 worshippers at the Negro First Baptist Church.

"Our method is one of passive resistance, of non-violence, not economic reprisals," he declared. "We have nothing against the bus company. It can run buses as long as it wants to—but it will run them without Negroes until it gives us justice.

"Let us keep love in our hearts, but fight until the walls of segregation crumble. And when they crumble, I don't intend to be in heaven, but right here in Montgomery."

The Negro Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, headed by the Rev. L. Roy Bennett, pastor of the Mount Zion African Methodist Episcopal Church, has played a leading role in organizing the bus protest. The actual direction of it, however, has been through the Montgomery Improvement Association headed by Reverend King.

The contributions taken up in the churches are used to buy gasoline and service the fleet of 300 automobiles organized to transport Negroes. The automobiles make regular runs from forty-six pick-up stations in the Negro districts.

The church-collection method of financing the car-pool was adopted to avoid a city ordinance that would require the licensing of vehicles carrying passengers for hire. Negro passengers in the car-pool pay nothing.

115 Indicted In Bus Row

Herald Tribune Mon. 2-22-56

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 21—A grand jury indicted 115 persons involved in Montgomery's Negro bus boycott Tuesday. The grand jury warned that violence is inevitable unless race relations improve.

Only 11 indictments were returned, but an official source said 115 defendants were named, several of them on each indictment.

The boycott began Dec. 5 in protest against the arrest of a Negro woman who had refused to move to the colored section of a bus. The defendant, Mrs. Rosa Parks, was fined $14.

Over 50 Undergo Arrests; All Win Freedom With Bond Of $300

Herald Tribune Birmingham Ala. Fri. 2-24-56

BY PAT J. McDONNELL

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — Negro ministers, political leaders, volunteer car-pool operators and the woman whose arrest touched off a mass boycott against Montgomery city bus lines were the victims of mass arrest Wednesday.

By mid-afternoon 53 Negroes, including 14 ministers, had been taken into custody or had surrendered on Grand Jury indictments, charging violation of an anti-boycott law. In the indictments issued Tuesday, the grand jury branded the Boycott illegal and an incitement to "racial tension and violence." At 11 P. M. Wednesday, all those arrested were out on bond.

Among those picked up Wednesday afternoon were P. M. Blair, unofficial "Mayor" of the city's Negro population; Jimmie Parks, head of a Negro High School and Dr. M. C. Cleveland, of the Day Street Baptist Church.

Dr. Cleveland is also chairman of the Foreign Mission Board of the National Baptist (Negro) Convention.

Mrs. Rosa Parks, whose arrest last Dec. 1 over her refusal to change seats in a city bus at the driver's request touched off the 12-week-old boycott, was among those taken into custody.

The arrests were to continue into the night.

Sheriff Hamilton Butler said that while there were 113 separate boycott charges, he estimated "about 80 individuals" would have been booked when the work was completed.

The boycott, which began Dec. 5, continued in full force on Montgomery's bus lines as the victims were booked.

AMONG THOSE ARRESTED

Hundreds of Negroes and whites lined the driveway leading to the jail as the following persons were arrested or surrendered:

Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, pastor of the First Baptist Church, the first man to be apprehended.

E. D. Nixon, president of the County Negro Democratic Association, whose home was bombed during the boycott.

Rev. M. L. King, whose home was also bombed, was out of town and reportedly not among those indicted.

Rev. J. W. Hayes and Dr. S. S. Seay, respectively presiding elder and executive secretary of the Home Missions Board of the A. M. E. Zion Church.

R. James Glasco, secretary of the Negro Ministerial Alliance, where the grand jury charged the boycott originated.

Rev. Leroy Bennett and Rev. A. W. Wilson, of the Holt Street Baptist Church, where the first boycott meeting was held.

Rev. Aaron Hoffman, a Baptist minister.

W. J. Powell, pastor of the Old Ship Methodist Church.

Mrs. Joan Robinson, president of the Women's Political Action Council of Montgomery.

LABOR LAW ARRESTS

The Montgomery County police carried out the arrests under a 1929 labor law banning boycotts, the law carries jail sentences of six months and fines of $1,000.

Meanwhile, across the street, at the Montgomery Court House, Circuit Judge Eugene Carter upheld the original traffic court fine which launched the boycott.

Police announced Tuesday night that 115 persons had been indicted by the grand jury but it was not yet certain whether all of them will be arrested in connection with the boycott. Under Alabama law names are kept secret until arrests are made.

LAW OF THE LAND

Dr. Abernathy, who made bond of $300 and was released, said:

"We are law abiding citizens. We are ready to be governed by the law."

Asked if he referred to Alabama's segregation laws, he snapped:

"Oh, No. No. By the law of the land."

Tearful women embraced Dr. Abernathy as he emerged from the jail with cries of:

"God bless you. God bless you."

Dr. Abernathy declared that "only the people" could halt the boycott and Negroes in the crowd confirmed his views with such opinions as:

"This will not stop it. It's ridiculous putting people in jail for a tenent bus ride."

Five Lawyers Ready Defense Of Boycotters

Advertiser P. 9
Sun. 3-18-56
Montgomery, Ala.

By STEVE FESHER

Five Negro attorneys will defend 93 Negroes who stand trial here at 10 a.m. tomorrow on charges of advocating an illegal boycott of Montgomery City Lines buses by 40,000 Montgomery Negroes.

Among the 93 are 25 Negro ministers. At their arraignment here recently, 89 Negroes pleaded not guilty. Four others have been arrested since the grand jury returned 11 indictments naming 113 Negroes who allegedly have instigated the illegal boycott.

BEFORE JUDGE

Defending the Negroes will be Arthur Shores, Orzell Billingsly Jr. and Peter Hall, all of Birmingham, and Fred D. Gray and Charles Langford of Montgomery. Shores gained notoriety as the attorney for Autherine J. Lucy, 26-year-old Negro woman who twice was ordered admitted to the University of Alabama by a federal court, only to be expelled for unfounded charges she made against the university. Gray recently was cleared of charges of conducting an unethical practice.

The Negroes will appear before Judge Eugene W. Carter in Circuit Court. The attorneys for the defense have waived trial by jury and will allow the judge to rule in each case. Reasons for this move were not revealed yesterday by the defense

FREEDOMS VIOLATED

Carter, who had directed the grand jury to investigate the bus boycott, must rule on defense demurrers before the trials begin. The demurrers claim in effect, that the freedoms of speech, wormitted no unlawful act, that the boycott law is unconstitutional and thatt he freedoms of speech, worship and peaceful assembly have been violated. Sun. 3-18-56

The law, which has been used only in labor disputes in the state, was upheld in 1942 by the Alabama State Supreme Court. The defense apparently plans to appeal to federal courts in the event of convictions by calling the law a violation of the U.S. Constitution. Montgomery, Ala.

Circuit Solicitors William F. Thetford, Robert Stewart and Maury Smith plan to meet today to discuss their strategy. Yesterday, they gave no indication as to which of the 93 they would call for prosecution first. Similarly, the defense would not reveal if the Negroes would call for separate trials, which would stretch the proceedings out over a period of several weeks, or if they would stand trial together. All defendants are charged with exactly the same misdemeanor, which carries a penalty of not more than $1,000 and not less than $100 in fines plus not more than six months in the county jail.

Circuit Clerk John Mathews said yesterday that subpoenas have been issued for 77 witnesses — 45 for the defense and 32 for the state. Included among those subpoenaed are City Commissioners W. A. Gayle, Clyde Sellers and Frank Parks; Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, the Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of an all-Negro church, and Montgomery City Lines Manager J. H. Bagley. Nine bus drivers also have been subpoenaed.

The boycott began last Dec. 5 after Rosa Parks, a Negro seamstress, was fined $14 for refusal to move to a Negro section when white passengers entered a city bus. At mass meetings in local Negro churches, Negro ministers and other leaders urged the city's 40,000 Negroes not to ride the buses.

They complied virtually 100 per cent and either walked, rode taxicabs or formed car pools. Boycott leaders at first did not demand an end to segregation but insisted that bus seating be on a "first - come, first-served" basis, starting with the back seats for Negroes and front seats for whites.

Company officials refused to drop a requirement that the 10 front seats be reserved for whites. Negro leaders also demanded Negro drivers for predominantly Negro routes.

Later, however, Atty. Fred Gray filed a petition in Federal District Court to declare bus segregation illegal. Gray was then accused of filing the suit without the consent of one of the five Negro women listed as plaintiffs. He was cleared by Judge Carter.

The boycotters here won support from Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr. (D-NY), pastor of the (Negro) Abyssinian Baptist Church in New York and leader of a civil rights bloc in the U.S. House. He urged federal protection for Montgomery Negroes involved in the boycott.

Powell proposed that Negroes throughout the U.S. support Montgomery Negroes by joining March 28 in a "National Deliverance Day of Prayer." He said no Negroes should work or attend school between 2 p.m. and 3 p.m. on that day.

Powell reniged when a spiritual leader of 5,000,000 Negroes said he would "not go along with a national economic boycott. Powell replied immediately that he had not intended a work stoppage but that he was "interested in prayer only."

So the boycott has raged for 16 weeks without noticeable violence on either side. Montgomery has become the center of political battles on local, state and national levels. It has been the congregating place for more than 50 newsmen from all over the globe.

The 16-week-old battle will reach its first climax in court tomorrow.

FIRST NEGRO TRIED IN BUS BOYCOTTING

Pastor Leads Alabama Fight —3 of 93 Cases Dropped

Tues. 3-20-56

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 19—The leader of the Negro protest against the segregation policies of the Montgomery city bus lines went on trial today on a charge of conducting an illegal boycott. New York

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was the first of ninety-three persons, including twenty-five ministers, arrested in connection with the movement to be tried. He is the president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, which is directing the protest.

During the protest movement, which began Dec. 5 over the arrest of a Negro woman for refusing to give up her seat to a white person, most Negroes have refused to ride the buses. They have demanded seating on a "first come, first served" basis.

Charges against three of those arrested were dropped today by Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford. He said further investigation had raised a substantial question as to their guilt. The remaining defendants were not expected to be tried until all appeals had been exhausted, should Mr. King be found guilty.

N. A. A. C. P. Awaits Result

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has announced that it will await the settlement of the boycott charges before deciding whether the passive resistance pattern developed here could be applied elsewhere in the fight on sgregation. New York

Mr. King, 27-year-old pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church at the foot of the State Capitol here, generally is credited with having applied that policy to the racial struggle in the South. He has a Doctor of Philosophy degree from Boston University.

Eight Negro lawyers were on hand to defend Mr. King today. They included the two young lawyers of Montgomery, three from Birmingham, one from Louisville, Ky., one from Chicago, and one from the New York office of the N. A. A. C. P. The attorneys waived the right of the defendants to a jury trial.

Present as "an interested spectator" was a Negro Representative, Charles C. Diggs, Democrat of Michigan, together with his legal adviser. He brought with him a contribution of "over $5,000" to support the protest movement.

Few spectators were admitted to the courtroom, which holds 238 persons, because of the large number of defendants and witnesses—thirty for the prosecution and forty-six for the defense. The trial was covered by more than a score of news men from India, France, and England as well as various parts of this country.

Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter upheld the indictments under a 1921 statute that outlaws boycotts of legal businesses "without legal excuse or just cause." The statute was designed to be used in labor strife, and never has been applied otherwise. The penalty is $1,000 fine or six months in jail.

The judge also ruled against a demurrer challenging the constitutionality of the law. He upheld the contention of Mr. Thetford that this had been passed on in previous cases.

Arthur D. Shores of Birmingham, in arguing the demurrer, contended that the form of the indictment was so vague the defendant could not tell the nature of the charge. He also argued that the indictment violated the rights of free speech, freedom of worship, peaceful assembly, and equal protection under the laws.

"The indictments seek to do indirectly what they cannot do directly," he said, "by violating constitutional rights."

It was generally agreed that the reason for raising the constitutional questions at this point was to lay the foundation for appealing the decision, should it be a conviction, to the Supreme Court.

Mr.Thetford and his deputy, Robert Stewart, ran into heavy weather with the three witnesses called today. The Negro attorneys raised objections to nearly every question and challenged every document offered as evidence. One witness Mr. Thetford described as "necessary" failed to appear.

Judge Carter upheld many of the objections, refusing a admit testimony not directly relating to Mr. King.

Those who testified today were James H. Bagley, transportation superintendent of the Montgomery City Bus Lines; the Rev. A. W. Wilson, a member of the executive board of the Montgomery Improvement Association, and Mrs. Erna Dungee, financial secretary of the association.

New Witnesses Are Called In Trial Of First Of 90 In Protest

Daily Mored P. 1 Wed. 3-21-56

Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — A three-man board of Federal judges has been named to hear a case which attacks the constitutionality of the Montgomery city laws and Alabama state laws requiring racial segregation in public transportation.

The suit was brought on February 1 by five Montgomery Negro women. Montgomery has been the scene of a prolonged bus boycott by Negroes protesting segregation on the vehicles.

Attorneys for the five women are at present representing 93 Negro leaders in state court at Montgomery accused in connection with the boycott.

JUDGES NAMED

Named to the board were U. S. Circuit court of appeals Judge Richard T. Rives and District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., both of Montgomery and District Judge Seyh. Lynne of Birmingham, Ala.

The law has been used only in labor disputes and in '2 was upheld by the Alabama Supreme Court. The defense in the bus trials has announced plans to appeal any adverse verdicts to federal courts under the Fifth and Fourteenth amendments.

CHARGES DENIED

In Tuesday's trial A Montgomery Negro leader denied that an organized car pool was operated for the purpose of preventing any one from riding the city's buses.

Rufus Lewis, chairman of the transportation committee of the Montgomery Improvement Association, tsetified for the State and described details of the pool established soon after a bus boycott began last December 5.

Asked directly if the pool was not set up to keep Negroes from using buses, Lewis said:

"It is not to keep them from riding buses—it is to give transportation to those who won't wish to ride the buses."

The state was attempting to connect operation of the pool to an alleged conspiracy of Negro leaders to boycott Montgomery city lines' buses.

The Rev. M. L. King, Jr., is on trial. the first of 90 to be tried on charges of violating an old state anti boycott law.

Lewis said his committee arranged to borrow cars, pay drivers $4.00 per day, and set up dispatch stations and pickup stations.

BUS DRIVERS

In a second action Tuesday testimony of a bus driver who was shot at six times went into the record of the trial over the repeated objections of defense attorneys.

Driver George Henderson said that on the night of December 6, one day after the boycott began, "I was shot at six times—the first two shots hit the bus two feet behind me. I saw the flash and the shots came out of a house where colored people live or from the porch of the house."

Defense lawyers protested that Henderson's testimony was in no way connected with the defendant, the Rev. King.

In still another action a city detective told over strenuous defense objections——of questioning motorists who said they were driving in a car pool for the Montgomery improvement Association during the city's lengthy bus boycott.

Daily World

Detective K. W. Jones was the ninth state witness in the trial of the Rev. M. L. King, Jr. first of the 90 Negroes to be tried on charges of conspiring unlawfully to foster a boycott.

P. 6

Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter overruled defense objections in permitting the detective to tell of interviews he had in January with several drivers who pulled out of a car pool uickup station with their cars loaded with Negro passengers.

One driver, Jones related, "told us he hauled for two or thre hours a day, was getting four dollars a day and gasoline and said the Montgomery Improvement Association paid for it."

Similar conversations with other drivers were reported

The 100 year old courtroom was only about half-filled with all but a dozen of the spectators being Negroes.

The state attempted to show through testimony given Tuseday that the Montgomery Improvement Association created a car pool in order to sustain the boycott protest against segregated seating rules. The protest started last December 5.

NEGRO BUS TRIAL UPHELD BY COURT

Times P. 28-C Wed. 3-21-56

Judge Finds a Prima Facie Case Established in the Montgomery Boycott

New York, N. Y.

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 20—Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter ruled today that the state had established a prima facie case of conspiracy in the trial of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Negro minister.

Dr. King is one of ninety Negroes charged with carrying on an illegal boycott of the Montgomery City Bus Lines. Indictments against three others had been dropped.

Most of Montgomery's 50,000 Negroes have refused to ride the city buses since Dec. 5, in protest over the arrest of a seamstress for refusing to give up her seat to a white person.

All the arrested Negroes are charged with violating a 1921 statute that forbids boycotting a legal business "without just cause or legal excuse." The penalty for violation is a $1,000 fine or six months in jail.

A succession of prosecution witnesses today connected Dr. King with the Montgomery Improvement Association. He heads this group, which was organized to direct the bus protest.

Others sketched the highly organized car pool operations set up by the association to transport Negroes who are not patronizing the buses. More than 300 private automobiles are being used in the pool.

Toward the conclusion of its case, the prosecution introduced a number of bus drivers and others to testify about acts of violence against them by Negroes, and presumably resulting from the bus protest movement.

Judge Carter made his ruling when the defense challenged the testimony of a city detective who had been assigned to the circuit solicitor to investigate the protest.

He ruled also that the testimony as to incidents of violence should be in the record, though not directly connected to the Montgomery Improvement Association, as evidence of the possible consequences of a conspiracy.

The association's leaders, and Dr. King in particular, have been consistently describing the protest as a peaceful movement of passive resistance.

Financial Set-Up Described

Mrs. Erna Dungee, financial secretary of the association, identified in her testimony deposits of about $30,000 to the bank account of the association and checks issued in payment of gasoline, repairs, and the use of automobiles.

She explained also that a cash withdrawal of $5,000 by Dr. King was for transfer to an association account in a bank in Atlanta. Dr. King declined to tell reporters the reason for the transfer. He formerly lived in Atlanta.

Many of the 150 Negro spectators in the court wore cloth crosses on their left lapels reading, "Father, forgive them."

Rufus Lewis, chairman of the transportation committee that operates the car pool, explained how the committee had arranged a system of free transportation for Negroes financed by contributions made at church services and mass protest meetings.

George Henderson, a driver for the Montgomery city lines, was the first called to testify on violence. He told of being fired at six times on the night of Dec. 6 while driving through a Negro section.

Six other bus drivers told of shootings and of rocks being thrown at their buses. Judge Carter ruled out the testimony of two of these as too vague.

Three Negroes were called to testify on intimidation. Judge Carter ruled out the testimony of one. He accepted that of a Negro man who said he had been pulled from a bus, and that of a woman who said she had been beaten because she persisted in riding the buses.

U. S. Funds Denied for Airport Bias

Post & Times Herald

The Civil Aeronautics Board, in a delayed action move, made public yesterday a new policy denying Federal funds to airports for construction or rebmodeling or segregated rest rooms, dining rooms and other facilities.

Washington,

The new policy, first issued in a memorandum April 6 but not publicized, is designed "to prevent the use of Federal funds to further or increase rasial segregation in airport buildings."

D. C.

The memorandum was signed by Board Chief C. J. Lowen.

The Government will, however, continue to give money to reports for facilities that no not invole segregation. Where segregated facilities are to be constructed, the Government will allot its funds on a basis of square feet in the building and deduct the amount which would be used to create a segregated area.

Sat. 5-5-56

Powell Broke News

The CAA released the memorandum when Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N. Y.) revealed to reporters that the policy was formulated Oct. 1 and issued in an April memorandum to CAA field personnel.

A CAA spokesman said it was not published because it was "a matter of internal administration."

The new order apparently will havev little effect in this area. There is no airport segregation in Maryland and a State Air official in Virginia said he knew of none in that state. Separte rest rooms are maintained at Richmond Airport but segregation is not enforced.

Washington's National Airport has no segregation.

The CAA said it has received applications for airport construction from three Maryland and Seven Virginia airports but only five involve buildings. The others are for sidewalks, roads, etc.

Statement Required

The Maryland building project is at Baltimore's Friendship Airport. The Virginia Applications came from Mt. Jackson, Norfolk, Richmond and Lynchburg.

Sponsoring agencies, according to the CAA, now will be required to submit a written statement attesting that Federally aided facilities "will be available without regard to race, creed or color . . ."

Powell, who fought for the new ruling, said he was prompted partly because of concern over segregation at the Raleigh-Durham, N. C., airport.

(The United Press reported that Director C. A. Moore of the Mississippi Aeronautics Commission disclosed that Jackson, Miss., lost $15,000 in Federal aid when it refused to comply with the desegregation ruling for renovation of airport facilities.)

The CAA said where segregated facilities are involved in airport building, Federal funds would be denied in proportion to the amount of space used for segregated facilities.

May Extend Policy

Powell said he also believes it is probable the Government also will crack down against racial discrimination at airports already built. He did not say how. Extending the policy to present airports would be in line with a recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling against racial segregation at railroad stations, Powell declared.

The CAA said the airport policy was prompted in part by the Supreme Court decisions banning segregation in public schools and other public facilities.

Government To Deny Funds For Building Facilities Subject To Racial Ban

Sat. 5-5-56

Memphis Tenn.

By The United Press

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The Government, striking a new blow at racial discrimination, announced Friday it will deny Federal funds for construction of segregated rest rooms, dining rooms and other facilities at airports.

The Civil Aeronautics Board said it issued a special two-page memorandum April 6 declaring "where duplicate facilities are provided that are intended for segregated use, the areas involved will be excluded" from Federal aid.

Revealed By Powell

The agency announced the policy after it had been disclosed by Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Negro Democrat from New York. Powell had said he understood it meant Federal funds would be denied any airports in which there are segregated facilities.

But a CAA spokesman said it merely meant no Federal aid would be granted for segregated facilities, including separate waiting rooms, dining rooms, kitchens and similar installations. Aid would be available for other projects at airports with such facilities.

Prosegregation states to lose airport funds

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON—The Civil Aeronautic Administration will not grant any Federal funds for the construction of any airport facilities in which racial segregation will be practiced.

This decision of the CAA was made public Friday, and is to apply to those portions of buildings, such as restaurants and rest rooms, in which discimination could be practised.

However, the ruling of the CAA does not apply to the granting of Federal funds for such things as the purchase of land, lighting, or other purposes which do not involve a question of setting up segregated facilities.

* * *

"THE PURPOSE and intent of the policy," the CAA said in a memorandum to field offices, "is to prevent the use of Federal funds to further or increase racial segregation in airport buildings."

At its disposal during the fiscal year which starts July 1, the CAA has some $63,000,000 to allocate to local airports.

It was impossible to obtain an estimate on how much of this aid would be lost to those states which still insist on segregated facilities.

THE ACTION of the CAA had been predicted earlier by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (Dem. N. Y.), who also said it would be made retroactive, a move which a CAA spokesman said would not be possible.

The CAA was unable to say whether any funds had actually been denied, or are in that process as a result of the new order.

U. S. Bars Funds For Airport Bias

Chicago, Ill. P. 1

WASHINGTON, — (INS) — The government was disclosed Friday to have laid down a new policy to deny federal aid in the construction or remodeling of segregation facilities at local airports.

The directive stops short, however, of withholding federal aid to any airport where racial segregation is enforced.

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D) N. Y., revealed that the policy was formulated Oct. 1 and detailed in a memorandum dated April 6 to field personnel of the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Powell released to newsmen the order which he had received on request to CAA for explanation of the action. CAA spokesmen confirmed the policy but said it had not been publicized because it was "a matter of internal administration."

Under the policy, if public facilities such as waiting rooms, rest rooms and restaurants are segregated, their costs must be borne entirely by the local sponsoring government while other parts of the project would be eligible for federal assistance.

In line with administration anti-segregation policy, the restriction was written into regulations for distribution of $63,000,000 a year over the next four years.

NO COMPLAINTS

According to the CAA, no complaint has been received from local and state authorities.

The order, circulated to local governments last October, states: "No federal aid airport program funds will be made available for the development of separate facilities or space in an airport building when such facilities or space are designed for use now or in the future for separate racial groups."

The clarifying memorandum added: "The purpose and intent of the policy expressed in this programming standard is to prevent the use of federal funds to further or increase racial segregation in airport buildings."

Sponsoring agencies will be required to submit a written statement that federally aided facilities "will be available without regard to race, creed or color . . ."

CAA Shows Rep. Powell A Short-Cut

Advertiser p. 4-A Tues. 5-8-56

SENATOR SPARKMAN made a cogent point last week when he said of CAA's announced intentions to withhold federal aid to segregated airport facilities:

Montgomery, Ala.

"If this is an indication of what we may expect from federal agencies, it could easily defeat much badly needed legislation, including the school bill."

This we suggested in our editorial on the CAA pronouncement last week. But Sparkman further said that if the CAA action becomes a precedent for other government agencies, there would be no guarantee that the principle of the Powell Amendment might not be put into effect, even if Congress passed a school aid bill without such provision.

In other words the current controversy over the Powell amendment to the school aid bill—which would withhold funds from segregated school districts—is simply an academic argument. If the CAA can do what it did, without specific congressional sanction, what would it matter whether any school aid bill contained a segregation clause or not: whoever administers the school program, if it is approved by Congress, could, by executive order, withhold appropriations to segregated schools just as CAA says it will withhold aid to segregated airport facilities.

Many pro-integration educators, congressmen and newspapers have denounced the Powell Amendment because, while they approve of the principle, they feel the amendment will be fatal to the bill's chances of passage. As late as Sunday, after the CAA announcement, The New York Times was saying:

> One of the few major achievements that still seem possible of accomplishment at this session of Congress is the school aid bill . . . The biggest hurdle that any school aid bill must overleap is the Powell amendment, the proposal that would withhold federal aid to school districts that have not made a start on desegregation. Rep. Powell, Democrat of Manhattan, is determined to offer this amendment when and if the school bill reaches the floor of the House, despite widely held belief that such a move will be fatal to the bill. Why? Because, if it is adopted, and the bill containing this amendment passes the House, the Senate is almost sure to reject it or filibuster it to death—particularly so late in the legislative year.
> Mr. Powell's approach to this problem is simply a case of all or nothing. He is against segregated education and so are we. But . . . we see no sense in jeopardizing the welfare of American school children in order to reaffirm our belief that the Supreme Court's desegregation decision is right . . . How will the cause of education in this country be advanced by making it impossible to pass an aid-to-education bill? . . .

This would have been a forceful argument earlier last week, before CAA had announced its privately enacted Powell amendment. But coming after the announcement, it seems almost irrelevant whether Powell withdraws his amendment or not. If he should graciously relent, Southern congressmen would still have no assurance that education aid would not be later restricted to integrated schools just as airport aid now has been—not by congressional action, but simply by administrative order.

It may be that CAA Administrator C. J. Lowen, and not Adam Clayton Powell, will be the man responsible for the death of the education bill. And it will be understandable if Southern congressmen look with a jaundiced eye on all future federal aid programs of whatever nature.

DENY AIRPORTS FUNDS FOR USE IN SEGREGATION

Daily Tribune p. 6-H Sat. 5-5-56

BY ROBERT YOUNG

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, May 4.—The civil aeronautics administration today announced it will deny federal funds for airport facilities to be used on a race segregation basis. The policy covers new construction and remodeling and repair of existing facilities.

Chicago, Ill.

The CAA announcement followed disclosure of the recently adopted policy by Rep. Powell [D., N. Y.]. The Negro congressman said in a statement that James T. Pyle, CAA administrator, notified him of the policy by letter last Wednesday.

The policy was outlined in a memorandum issued by the CAA April 6, which said "where duplicate facilities are provided that are intended for segregated use, the areas involved will be excluded" from federal aid.

Doesn't Cover All Aid

A CAA spokesman explained today this does not mean that all federal aid will be withheld from an airport which enforces racial segregation but only funds specifically allocated for the construction, remodeling, or repair of segregated facilities such as waiting rooms, rest rooms, dining rooms, kitchens, and the like.

Powell had said it was his understanding the policy meant that federal money would be withheld from any airports "in which there are segregated facilities." He recalled that the interstate commerce commission recently prohibited racial segregation in railroad stations.

Under the federal airport act, the federal government gives funds for the construction and improvement of airports. The federal aid is matched on a 50-50 basis with funds from state and local authorities sponsoring the airport projects. The CAA is in charge of distributing the federal airport aid funds, which amounted to 62.5 million dollars in the current fiscal year ending June 30 and are expected to amount to 63 million in each of the next four fiscal years.

Money for Other Uses

As explained by the CAA spokesman, an airport which enforced segregation would not be denied funds for such facilities as its runways and control tower, but would receive no federal aid for segregated waiting, dining or rest room facilities. This policy would apply to single facilities if they were reserved for one race, as well as to duplicate facilities provided for different races.

Powell said that since last November he has contended that a provision of the airport act gives the CAA authority to withhold federal aid for the construction of segregated facilities. The congressman said he started his campaign for the new CAA policy partly because of his concern over segregation practices at the Raleigh-Durham, N. C., airport

WASHINGTON, May 4—The Civil Aeronautics Administration announced today it will not make federal funds available for construction of any airport facilities in which racial segregation is practiced.

The CAA said the order does not necessarily apply to whole buildings but only those portions—such as dining rooms or rest rooms—in which there might be discrimination as to race, color or creed.

"The purpose and intent of the policy," the CAA said in a memorandum to field offices, "is to prevent the use of federal funds to further or increase racial segregation in airport buildings."

One of the first reactions to the order came from Mayor William B. Hartsfield of Atlanta, who said it is 'nothing to get excited about."

There are no segregated facilities of consequence at the big Atlanta terminal or any large airport that he knows about, Hartsfield said in Atlanta.

NEW ORDER

"In our case," he continued, "the only segregated facilities are rest rooms. We construe the new order to mean that if we include segretated rest rooms in any new terminal, federal money may not be used in any portion of the building set aside for rest room—a matter of a few thousand dollars."

It is estimated the CAA will have about 63 million dollars a year to spend on federal aid to airports over the next four years. The money is allocated on a 50-50 basis, with the federal government matching the amount put up by local sponsors of the projects.

A spokesman for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said he knew of no similar move planned for federal aid in its field, which includes schools and hospitals.

In the House, however, Rep. Powell (D-NY) is battling to bar federal school construction aid to states which defy the Supreme Court order against segregation in the public schools. Powell is a Negro.

President Eisenhower has said several times he doesn't think the segregation issue should be tied to the school aid program. Efforts to do so stalled school aid legislation in Congress last year.

CAA places segregation rider on funds

News P. 1 Fri. 5-4-56

Birmingham, Ala.

WASHINGTON, May 4—(AP)—The Civil Aeronautics Administration said today it will deny federal funds for construction of airport facilities which are to be used on a racially segregated basis.

The CAA said its order provides that the government will not contribute any money for that part of a building from which persons may be barred for reasons of race, creed or color.

The agency, which parcels out money for airport purposes, said its new rule will apply to construction and remodeling and repair of existing facilities at airports.

It will apply to single dining rooms or rest rooms if they are limited to one race and also to construction of dpulicate facilities provided for different races.

The CAA said that in computing how much federal funds will go to the projects the entire cost of construction or repair must be figured and a deduction made for the entire cost of any part of the structure intended for segregated use.

A CAA spokesman told a reporter the policy was formed last October and was put in formal wording in a memorandum issued April 6. The CAA did not make its action public until today.

Dannelly Job Will Continue Despite Order

Montgomery Advertiser

The Civil Aeronautics Administration in Washington revealed yesterday it would deny federal funds for construction of airport facilities to be operated on a segregated basis, but Montgomery city officials said the Dannelly Field project would continue unhampered.

5-3-56

The CAA said the government would not contribute any money for "construction of that part of a building from which persons may be barred for reasons of race, creed or color."

The proposed administration building at Dannelly Field will be constructed in the near future at a total cost of approxmiately $550,000. The CAA had previously granted the city $299,000 for construction of the building.

CITY PAYS COST

Mayor W. A. Gayle said yesterday that the rest rooms, waiting rooms and restaurant in the proposed building will be segregated. "The city will foot the bill for these segregated facilties 100 per cent," he said. "We'll have to deduct the cost of these segregated facilities from the total cost of the building. Then the CAA will pay half of the difference."

Gayle said an estimate on the cost of segregated facilities "will not be available until we have drawn up our final plans." He affirmed that the city would not be moved toward construction of non-segregated facilities because of the CAA's ruling.

RULING GIVEN

The CAA added that its ruling will apply to single dining rooms and rest rooms if they are limited to one race and also to construction of duplicate facilities provided for different races.

The agency, which parcels out money for airport purposes, said that in computing the amount of federal funds to go to a project including segregated facilities, the entire cost of the construction must be figured and a deduction made for the entire cost of any part of the structure intended for segregated use.

Adams County Must Decide Segregation Policy

NATCHEZ, Miss., May 5.—The Adams County Board of Supervisors will have to decide Monday whether to sign a non-segregation agreement covering use of a proposed new administration building at the Natchez Adams County Airport.

If they refuse, and it is expected they will, the Civil Aeronautics Authority has said it will withhold matching funds to construct the new passenger terminal.

CAA representatives are due in Natchez Monday with the agreement and are expected to present it at Monday afternoon's meeting.

Several members of the Board of Supervisors have already indicated they will not sign the agreement, thus relinquishing Federal aid for construction of the building.

Transition from Old to New Presents No Problem to Negro - White Riders

Fri. 5-4-56

Thursday morning, April 26, was just an ordinary day, same as any other of the fifty-two Thursdays that make their round during the twelve month period. But this Thursday was a day of regret to many of the members of the fair-skinned race, whose only hopes of the survival of their false claim of superiority had vanished overnite. To the Negro and the progressive-minded white citizen, Thursday was a day of jubilation, a day of hope, a day that strengthened faith in a democratic nation, a day where another section of America had put into practice what she had so deceivingly spread thruout foreign countries - - - it was the day that forced "jimcro" disappeared on the city bus lines.

Without any special order, and with no, or little fanfare, enforced segregation of passengers ended in Citizens Coach company buses in Greater Little Rock Wednesday afternoon.

The transition from the old tradition to the new pattern was so smooth, that it was hardly noticed by reporters who boarded buses for a story of the century. Neither Negroes nor whites, showed in attitude toward the change in seating enforcement. The whites, however did take advantage of the available seating space as they entered by doubling up, which was somewhat different to the old practice of spreading out in single file. The reason was obvious. It would keep Negroes from sharing the same seat. The Negroes, from force of habit for many years of restriction and intimidation, continued to seat from the rear, only in a few cases, where they took the first available seat.

It is reported that after the announcement of the United States Supreme Court action in banning segregation in intra-state travel, the Citizens Coach company accepted it as the law of the land, and immediately tried to get the officials of the twin cities to take the initial steps toward ending the jim-cro practice. The governmental heads refused, but stated their cooperation in the company's compliance with the law.

History was made in Little Rock Thursday morning, May 26, when unsegregated buses began their first day of service, in compliance with the United States Supreme Court's decision.

Segregationist Is Rebuffed In Little Rock SEATING ROW FLARES

Memphis, Tenn.

Fri. 6-22-56

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, June 21.—A segregationists attempt to have three bus company officials arrested for permitting mixed seating was halted at least temporarily, by City Atty. O. D. Longstreth Jr. Thursday.

"So far as I know, there is no valid ordinance against integration on buses in Little Rock," Mr. Longstreth said.

Amis Guthridge, a Little Rock lawyer and leader of White America, Inc., said officials of Citizens Coach Co. are "violating our laws pertaining to segregation." He asked for warrants for arrest of President Fred C. Worden of Des Moines, Iowa; Executive Vice President David S. Durbin of Little Rock and Secretary William Nash of Little Rock.

Meeting Planned

Mr. Guthridge said his next step would be a meeting with Reed Thompson, city attorney of North Little Rock, across the Arkansas River. Mr. Guthridge said he hoped to meet with Mr. Thompson Friday to ask for warrants of arrest for the CCC officials.

Citizens Coach Co., which has operated buses in Little Rock and North Little Rock since February, formally refused to enforce segregated seating in April.

The decision to quit requiring Negroes to seat from the rear and whites from the front was made after a United States Supreme Court decision that indicated segregation on public vehicles was unconstitutional. The Supreme Court later sent the case back to a lower court, where it was dismissed. There has been no clear decision on city bus segregation.

Mr. Guthridge was accompanied by two women, whom he referred to as "the people I represent." The women were Mrs. Fred Atkinson and Mrs. Richard Heiry, both of Little Rock.

Going All the Way

Mr. Guthridge said: "We are serious. We are going all the way. No public official is exempt."

Mr. Guthridge asked if Mr. Longstreth would prepare a city ordinance calling for separate seating on public vehicles.

Mr. Longstreth answered he would, if a city coucilman asked him to prepare it.

Mr. Guthridge cited a city ordinance of 1952 which, in effect, gave the city's approval to all state laws. He said that either this ordinance prohibited integration on buses, or previous bus operators violated the law by requiring separate seating.

"You can't have blanket laws," Mr. Longstreth said, calling the ordinance invalid. "If there is a state law that says integration is illegal, that's something else."

There has been no violence since CCC officials said they would not enforce separate seating. One minor disturbance was reported. Generally Negroes have continued to seat from the rear and whites from the front.

P. 21

The complaint, filed by Mrs. Freeda Wright, named the Citiens Coach Co. and Dorothy May Payne as defendants. The Negro was described as a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mrs. Wright said that she suffered a skull fracture, brain concussion, scratches and bruises.

She said that she attempted to move to another seat when the Negro woman sat down beside her. The Negro woman then attacked her, she said.

The suit also charged that the Negro woman "mtliciously and willfully boarded said bus for the sole and primary purpose of harassing, annoying and intimidating white persons thereon in the futherance of the purpose of said association (the NAACP) to inaugurate integration of Little Rock city buses."

Mrs. Wright also charged the bus driver "wantonly and maliciously refused and neglected to quell same or to warn the defendant . . . became amused at the plight of the plaintiff . . ."

The suit charged the Negro woman tripped Mrs. Wright and shoved her down the aisle, causing her to strike her head on the metal portion of a seat and continued to "kick, strike and curse the plaintiff."

The Citiens Coach Co. began integrated seating last May.

The asphalt runway slips away. The big, silver plane banks, climbs, and suddenly, there it is — "Florida's Capital City."

Natives boast: "It's steeped in tradition."

They suggest Ponce de Leon landed here on his second voyage in 1521.

THEY SAY it's a fact Panfilo de Narvarex traversed the area in 1528. And in 1939-40 Hernando de Soto spent the winter.

Some still will tell you, "Tallahassee was the only capital of a Confederate state not captured by Federal Forces."

The Chamber of Commerce is proud of its facts and figures—

Population, 38,100; a railroad, six truck companies, two airlines, 97 churches, 24 schools, two colleges, two newspapers, a TV station, three radio stations, 36 motels and a bulging bank account of almost $47,000,000.

Reason to be proud.

Pride and tradition!

* * *

THEN IT ALL comes back. And to the "tradition and pride" you add "boycott and turmoil" —change.

Sitting there at a 45-degree angle, your forehead pressed against the window - pane and, in your ears the deafening noise of the racing motors, you see it — closeup and realistically.

It is in the voice of Jessie who was due at work at 5 p.m., but had to wait until six for a ride and there was none to be had because car-pool drivers were being harassed by police.

* * *

THE QUESTION is: "Do you think folk will ride the buses when they are put back?"

Her answer is simple, matter-of - fact: "I don't know what other folk will do. I only know what one will not do."

The same thing is in the voice of Mrs. Mamie Williams, mother of four (soon to be five) who was held by police for two hours.

"I was trying to get to my job," she kept repeating. "I was just trying to get to my job."

IT WAS IN the FAMU faculty member's voice when she said: "Pretty soon, in order to be a respectable citizen, one will have to have been arrested."

It shows through the dry humor of Johnnie Cook as he jokes about being jealous of the Rev. Lawrence Daymon who has been picked up four times. Cook has only three "arrests" to his credit.

"I'm worried," he says, laughing. "Looks like they're neglecting me."

AND, TOO, it's there in the quiet, dignified reserve of the Rev. King Solomon Dupont, in the blustery good humor of Dan Speed and in the lonely concentration of Theries Lindsay, boycott attorney.

* * *

ONE NIGHT you stroll in and out of the juke - joints of Frenchtown, and it's also there —shining brightly (and profanely) through the fever of "Rock 'n' Roll" fanaticism.

"Do you think the folk will ride the —"

You give me fever when you kiss me,
Fever when you hold me tight —

* * *

"MAN, DON'T ask me a no-good question like that. Them people must think we're dad blasted fools or something."

Fever early in the morning,
Fever all through the night.

* * *

THERE IS another kind of fever on exhibit at the mass meeting at Bethel AME Church.

It's half spiritual, half eloquent, half Holy Grail—but it's fever yes, "early in the morning and all through the night."

It's composed of the fervent, unpolished poetry of the prayers, the unique figures of speech of the sermons, the quiet determination of the routine reports, the devastating magic of a multitude of people marching together as they sit shoulder to shoulder in church pews.

* * *

AND OUT of the din comes the plaintive, electrifying cry of the Rev. Ulysses Smith:

"God, come and walk in Tallahassee"

Somewhere near the summit of the sound is the voice of the Rev. Charles Kinzie Steele, boycott leader:

"We are still walking!

"We're being intimidated, investigated and humiliated.

"But, thank God, we're still walking."

And the congregation takes up the refrain and goes off with it. The tramp, trampling of the feet is the sound of an army marching to martial music.

* * *

SOMEHOW THE entire tableau is mixed with the whirring noise of the airplane propellers.

But it's so plain.

You wonder why Police Chief Frank Stoutamire, the City Commissioners, Chamber of Commerce and the bitter-enders in the Legislature can't see it, too.

It shows a people and a city caught in the inevitability of change.

What was yielding to what must be, tradition to the urgency of now and pride to common sense.

They must see it, or like some blinded and bitter Samson, they will pull down the Temple on all.

The plane straightens itself out, heads north. Terese Nairn, flight attendant, passes a pillow. You lean back and wait. Destination, Montgomery (Ala.) another southern city face to face with the agonizing necessity to change.

Florida boycotters need aid

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 8-4-56

TALLAHASSEE, Florida — The chief of police in Tallahassee, Fla., keeps his gold-plated badge in the top drawer of his desk.

He neither wears a gun nor carrys a blackjack.

He regards the officers on the force as "My boys."

HIS MAID has been with the family for 20 years. Once when she was ill for the greater part of a year, he personally took her weekly salary to her each Saturday night.

In the strict sense of the word, he isn't a politician. Yet, no politician in town would dare to make a major move without first finding out how the chief "feels about it."

* * *

ON ONE occasion when police arrested a faculty member of Florida A. and M. University, who was caught in a "compromising situation" with a white woman, the chief personally intervened to "prevent a lynching."

His solution was to send the teacher back to "the people at the college" with instructions that they get him out of town "before there's trouble."

* * *

HE SAYS that if he had been in town on May 26 when the two FAMU coeds were arrested there would have been no boycott.

"I would have stopped it before it got out of hand," he says.

He explained this by saying he simply would have called the judge and told him: "Let those girls go."

We would have handled it the same way we handle incidents involving girls at the "white university," he says.

* * *

BUT THE chief wasn't there and the situation got out of hand.

"These new colored leaders don't understand tradition and custom (in Tallahassee)."

Tradition and custom mean that as long as there are white and colored in Tallahassee ("and as long as I'm chief of police") there won't be any mixing of the races on buses or anywhere else.

* * *

HE SUMS the bus boycott up in this manner: "The colored folk don't want to ride the buses, so let 'em walk.

"If the company can't operate without colored riders, let 'em move the buses.

"We can get along without buses in Tallahassee, anyway."

* * *

AS IT RELATES to race relations in Tallahassee and the current bus boycott, the opinion of Police Chief Frank Stoutamire is important.

Multiply his attitude by the number of public officials in Florida's capital, allowing for differences in age, education and temperment, and it will indicate what the boycotters face.

* * *

THE CHIEF and men like him are in control of the city government.

The governor, who could do something about the situation is afraid. His prosegregation legislature would pitch a tantrum. They worship at the shrine of tradition and custom.

Consequently, race relations, so far as they are concerned, is simply another way of saying tolerant paternalism.

To them there is nothing either morally wrong or humiliating about requiring colored patrons to enter buses by the side doors, ride on back seats and give up ther seats for white passengers.

(The possible exception to this rule is Mayor Fred Winterle, who was re-elected. He privately concedes that evenutally the U.S. Supreme Court will outlaw all racial segregation.)

* * *

BOILED DOWN, this means Tallahassee (race relations-wise) is a city without a beach head, a dead end town.

Nowhere in the city is the an interracial group which may meet and discuss racial issues.

To-date efforts to establish such a group have failed.

SINCE THE boycott forced the bus company to suspend operation, there are reasons to believe that now Chief Stoutamire and the men around him are embarking on a "get tough campaign."

According to reports from boycott leaders, police harrassment of boycott car pool drivers has increased.

One thing is certain. Whether the bus company resumes operation, or not there will be no easy victory when it comes to abolishing bus segregation.

Final resolvement of the issue will have to be by the U.S. Supreme Court.

MEANWHILE, the boycotters will have to continue meeting the situation as best they can. It's going to be a long, uphill struggle. And they need money.

Everyone who can ought to send as much money as possible to these people as quickly as he can.

Weigh Boycott Against White Fla. Merchants

New Orleans, La.

Tallahassee, Fla.--(ANP)--Hours after their month-long boycott resulted in suspension of all bus services here by Cities Transit Company, Negro leaders gave notice Sunday that they will boycott white merchants unless the city stops "police intimidation."

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council," told a meeting of about 500 council members Sunday night.

Post 7-7-56

"It really appears that our city policemen have decided to run us out of town - that is, off Monroe and Adams streets. (the main commerical thoroughfare)

"If they continue their police intimidation it will finally become necessary for us to stay out of town and make other arrangements. We may even have to form excursions to other cities to spend that little money we have to spend."

at a news conference, Steele td reporters that police appear to have opened a deliberate campaign of harassment and intimidation of Negroes in the downtown area since the city's 14,000 colored citizens began their bus protest early last month.

Police are rude and crude Steele said. He added that officers make arrests for the slightest violation of city traffic ordinances and Negroes have been taken to police headquarters and subjected to "a third degree" for minor traffic violations that ordinarily mean nothing more than a ticket placed on the windshield.

cal branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said his group at present is taking no part in the boycott. But he said "there is quite a possibility it will spread to the rest of the city."

A. and M. students either walked, drove private cars or took taxis to the campus this morning, when final examinations began. Graduation is next Monday, Summer school opens June 17.

'Target' in House Stoning Convicted of Nonsupport

NEW YORK, May 29 (AP)—The stoning of a Negro's house in a predominantly white Bronx neighborhood early this month had a sequel today when he was found guilty of nonsupport of his wife.

His wife, Mrs. Percy Hill of Pleasantville, N. J., said her eight-year search for him ended when she saw photographs of him after the stoning incident. He was arrested yesterday on an eight-year-old warrant.

Hill, 44, an elevator operator, was ordered by Domestic Relations Court Justice Frederick Backer to pay $500 by Wednesday on an estimated $5000 in back payments to his wife or go to jail for six months.

Hill was ordered held in jail overnight.

Hill and a woman he identified as his wife moved into a two-story frame house in the Belmont section last February. The house was stoned May 6 and 7. Three youths and a 25-year-old man, all white, were later arrested for the attacks.

Last night Mrs. Hill had the warrant served on her husband at his home.

Hill said in Night Court that the woman he identified as his wife at the time of the stonings is Cora Thompson, "a girl friend of mine." He said he last saw Mrs. Hill about eight years ago and had stopped a $15-a-week support payments when he was out of work.

The girls, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26 years old, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday after they refused to move to the rear of a bus. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot and released in $25 bail each. A hearing will be held in Police Court Friday.

New York N.Y.

Last night a small wooden cross was burned on the lawn of the house in which they were living and their landlady said they became frightened and moved into the college dormitory.

Students cheered and clapped their hands as an empty city bus was driven through the campus today. Earlier, several hundred students held a meeting and voted to stay off city buses for an indefinite period.

Broadus H. Hartley, president of the student body, said, "I would not call it a boycott. We are just refraining from riding the buses until we can have assurances that we will receive better treatment."

Negro Bus Rider Jailed in Miami

Times-Picayune Wed. 6-13-56

MIAMI, Fla., June 12 (AP) — Rudolph Reid, 19-year-old Negro, was arrested Monday night after he refused to move to the rear of a Miami Transit Co., bus in what may be Miami's first segregation test case.

New Orleans

Reid was charged with tending to create a breach of the peace and released on $500 bond.

Reid, an organizer of a local youth council in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, denied that he wanted to be arrested to create a test case but Neal Adams, 39, member of the NAACP, told the Miami Herald that the bus company "will be sued" and that "it

In a letter sent to the British consul here, the Rev. Grover C. Bullock charged that the attack took place on a bus bound from Miami to Kansas City. The priest said that he and his wife had boarded the vehicle in Miami and had taken seats in the middle of the bus.

A passenger boarding the bus at Perry, Fla., stalked back to where they were seated, demanded that both the priest and his wife move to the rear and when the couple refused, lashed out and struck both of them.

The ensuing struggle was broken up by Patrolman William H. Barnes Jr. of Perry, who revealed that the attacker was Milton Poppell of Perry. The policeman said that Poppell confessed to striking Rev. Mr. Bullock. Barnes added that since he did not see the incident, he arrested both men on a charge of fighting.

THE PRINCIPALS each forfeited $25 bonds, said Barnes.

Rev. Mr. Bullock and his wife were en route to Kansas City for the purpose of visiting relatives while undertaking a tour of the United States.

The British Consul in Kansas City has announced that the priest's letter has been forwarded to the Bri ish Embassy in Washington, D. C. He said that this line of action was taken because the incident did not take place in his jurisdiction.

The bus driver had instructed him to sit in the rear but Bullock refused to do so.

Bullock said he was punched in the face several times.

At the Miami office of Trailways, the district agent said that he had been called by the driver concerning the Rev. Mr. Bullock's insistence that he would not move to the rear of the bus and that he had ordered him "to do nothing because Bullock was an interstate passenger bound for Kansas City."

Bus Boycott Confined to School

Post + Times Herald Wed. 5-30-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 29 (AP)—A boycott by 2600 Negro college students of city buses showed no signs today of spreading beyond the campus of the Florida A. and M. University for Negroes.

Washington

The boycott was a protest against the arrest of two women students who refused to move to the rear of a bus.

The Florida Board of Control which has charge of the school, called on its officials to encourage students to "behave themselves during the boycott.

Empty buses sped through the A. and M. campus this morning without slowing down, but downtown buses carried the usual number of Negroes to their jobs. A number of city Negroes whose route would carry them through the campus did not ride the buses, apparently to escape ridicule of students.

Ask Fla. city to mix buses

Afro-American Sat. 7-7-56 Baltimore, Md.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (ANP) — City officals here last week heard requests from colored persons for equal seating facilities on city-owned buses, but took no immediate action on them.

The Cooperative Citizens Committee, an organization composed of St. Petersburg citizens, made the request to Mayor Samuel G. Johnson and the city council. Johnson promised the requests would be given the "earliest possible" consideration.

During the conference, CCC officials suggested buses on two routes used almost entirely by colored patrons be integrated at once and "that total integration be brought about at such time as whites and colored persons are made ready by religious and social agencies."

The Rev. Enoch Davis, spokesman, said that in the light of a U.S. Supreme Court decision on bus desegregation and absence of city ordinances on segregated seating "colored people are now ready to sit anywhere they choose."

Bishop Nichols, who returned from an extended tour of countries behind the "iron curtain" this week, said, "...I preached to about 2,000 people in the Second Reformed Church in Budapest, Hungary.

"The congregation seemed amazed that I, a Negro, told them that basically the policy of the American government is that there shall be no second-class citizens; that we may still have certain problems to be worked out but that the Negro can walk down a street in America without being afraid of the government.

"The action of the Tallahassee officials is a direct contradiction of what I told those people," the Bishop said.

IN TALLAHASSEE, some 11 persons participating in the boycott's car pool were arrested under the state's "for hire" regulation.

Attorney Theries Lindsey, who represents the Inter-Civic League, filed action in the Circuit Court testing the legality of state laws requiring segregation on public vehicles.

Rev. C. K. Steele, chairman of the Inter-Civic Council and president of the Tallahassee Chapter of the NAACP, who has been arrested three times, called for a prayer meeting at 8:00 P. M. Saturday night following an announcement that the Ku Klux Klan would hold a "cross burning" and discuss the bus boycott on a private plot near Tallahassee.

Sheriff W. P. Joyce announced that he would keep the meeting of the Klan "under observation."

To sue police in Fla. protest

Afro-American Sat. 7-7-56 Baltimore, Md.

(Special to the AFRO)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — A showdown battle between bus boycott leaders and the police department and the City Commissioners appeared in the offing Saturday.

Resentment was reaching a fever pitch after police had resumed their harassment tactics against drivers of the car-pool operated by the Inter-Civic Council, which is spearheading the bus protest.

The stepped-up police campaign was viewed as an all-out effort to break the boycott before classes resume at Florida A. and M. University.

* * *

STUDENTS at this school launched the fight three months ago when two coeds were arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus.

The suit, if it is filed, will list the Rev. King Solomon Dupont as complainant.

He was the first of seven car pool drivers arrested on "car-for-hire" law.

Attorney General Richard Erwin gave an opinion that drivers in the car pool were violating this statute, although car pools are commonly used by white workers, especially state employees living in neighboring communities.

Afro-American

BUT THUS far the law has been applied only to colored motorists. And the police chiefs has been quoted in the daily newspapers as saying, "The criminal arrests will continue until the police believe the car pool operations have been curtailed."

P. 2

Inter-Civic Council officials charge that this is an open admission that the police department has been enlisted to force colored passengers back on the buses.

Besides the Rev. Mr. Dupont, other drivers arrested have been Offie Burns, Parker Hollis, Ralph G. Coleman, Edward Irons and his wife, Mrs. Bessie Irons.

* * *

WITH THE exception of Rev. Mr. Dupont, all were driving their own automobiles when stopped by police.

The Rev. Mr. Dupont was driving his church's station wagon, which the church has owned for two years.

The first three persons were released under $200 bonds each, while the last four were required to post $100 bonds.

As a result of the arrests, the few colored passengers who had been enticed back on the buses by such empty bribes as free rides, morning newspapers and letter-mailing service, are now back off walking again.

* * *

THE JAILED drivers are being represented by Theries Lindsay, attorney, who has been working with the Inter-Civic Council since its organization last May.

Following the arrests, a mass meeting was held at Tabernacle Baptist Church.

The Rev. Charles K. Steele, ICC president, told the overflowing crowd that the arrests were part of the effort to "herd colored riders back to the buses."

"These tactics," he said, "will have the opposite effect. The colored people of Tallahassee cannot be driven to support bus segregation."

The boycott forced the bus company to suspend operations from June 30 to August 1.

THE CHAMBER of Commerce persuaded the bus company to resume its schedules and to hire two colored drivers on lines that serve the colored sections of the city.

At that time, the Rev. Mr. Dupont said: "Colored people of Tallahassee will not be herded like cattle to the rear of the buses, even if they are operated by colored drivers."

Dan Speed, director of the pool, said less than 15 per cent of the riders prior to the Aug. 23 arrests were colored.

This figure has dropped to an estimated 2 two per cent.

Prior to the boycott, colored riders accounted for 75 per cent of the paying passenger load for the bus company.

SINCE THE "Free-Day" of Aug. 2, a few shamed-faced colored passengers have been riding the buses. Though the number normally seen on the bus is five or six, but now nine out of every 10 buses which travel the A. and M., Frenchtown routes have one or less.

These few riders have a tendency to slump down in their seats or turn their heads when the people on the streets stare at them.

This is in deep contrast to the situation which existed prior to the bus protest. The buses were crowded with standing room only, especially during the early morning and evening hours.

* * *

THE COLORED patrons have followed their leaders better than the whites in this issue.

Every attempt to get the white citizens to cooperate and ride the bus has failed.

Before the buses were taken off on June 30, an appeal was made by the daily newspaper to the white citizens to leave their cars home and ride the buses, or the city would lose its public transportation system.

This effort failed as indicated by the "taking off" of the buses.

WHEN THE buses were put back on, another "ride the bus" campaign was sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. All sorts of concessions were instituted for bus riders, such as free orange juice, morning papers, mailing letters, etc.

They reported that a thousand civic workers were combing the white neighborhood in an effort to sell bus passbooks at a rate of $1.25 per week.

They reported a gross sale of $800, or less than one book per worker.

When the buses actually started rolling again, there were even fewer whites riding the bus than before they went out of business.

It explained that by saying that some people had made other arrangements while the buses were out of business.

IN A PROTEST movement such as this, the colored leaders have admonished that colored persons should stay off the buses until they get decency.

With no more people riding the buses than are now riding, it is roughly estimated that the colored people are cooperating by roughly 98 per cent. What leader could ask for more?

Leader of Tallahassee Negro Bus Boycott Arrested Again

Herald Wed. 8-29-56 Miami, Fla.

P. 8-a

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— The leader of Tallahassee's Negro boycott against city buses was arrested Tuesday for the second day in a row for driving a car pool automobile without a "for hire" tag.

The Rev. C. K. Steele was taken to the police station and was released on $100 bond, pending a hearing.

Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council which has sponsored the 3-month-old boycott, registered a strong protest against his arrest.

He was picked up at about the same place as on Monday. The car he was driving was filled with passengers at the time.

Steele served notice that legality of the arrests would be challenged.

Cases of six Negro drivers arrested last week for violating the "for hire" tag requirement were set for trial in municipal court for Sept. 6 despite protests of an attorney for the civic council that jurisdiction should be in state court rather than municipal court.

State Atty. Gen Richard W. Ervin ruled recently that automobiles operated in the car pool must carry "for hire" tags since they are primarily engaged in transporting passengers.

The boycott was called May 28 in protest against segregated seating, required by state law.

Steele in the Tallahassee bus boycott "a heinous offense against the principles of democracy."

Bishop Nichols, a Negro, returned Tuesday on the liner Queen Elizabeth from Hungary, where he attended meetings of the World Council of Churches.

The bishop said the churches are morally justified in backing a boycott under present conditions in Tallahassee and also in Montgomery, Ala.

He said he was leaving for Jacksonville and has called a meeting for Thursday at the St. Paul A.M.E. Church there to organize support for the boycott and for Steele.

Bishop Nichols said the organization would caution against anything that might lead to violence.

Police Arresting Negro Who Drive in Car Pool

Regular Riders Make Other Plans

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Since the "Free-Day" of August 2, three weeks ago, a few shame-faced Negroes have been riding the buses. Though the number normally seen on the bus is five or six, the number has steadily decreased until today nine out of every ten buses which travel the A and M-Frenchtown routes have one or less.

These few riders have a tendency to slump down in their seats or turn their heads when the people on the streets stare at them.

This is in deep contrast to the situation which existed proir to the bus protest, in which the buses were crowded with standing room only, especially during the early morning and evening hours, while people were going to and from work.

Better Cooperation than Whites

The Negroes have followed their leaders better than the whites have followed their leaders in this issue.

Every attempt to get the white citizens to cooperate and ride the bus has failed. Before the buses were taken off on June 30th, an appeal was made by the daily newspaper to the white citizens to leave their cars home and ride the buses, or the city would lose its public transportation system This effort failed as indicated by the "taking off" of the buses.

Police Arresting Negro Drivers in Car-Pool

Wednesday, August 22, 1956 the police department began arresting any Negro with a group of people in his car, the charge being that of violating the "vehicle for hire" law. The bond for this offense is $150.00.

Fla. 8-31-56

In the opinion of many, this is another intimidation move on their part, designed to stop Negroes from picking up the people who are walking. If they can do this, they can make the people ride the bus, they hope.

Court Fight Expected

P. 2

The Inter-Civil Council plans to test this law all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

Philosophy Behind Fight

Some people have mistakenly gotten the idea that the bus seat in question now is the end for which we are fighting.

These persons holding that belief could never be more wrong. The bus seat, (as was so aptly put by a white citizen in a letter to the Tallahassee Democrat) is merely a symbol of the thing that we are fighting—that is a system which inherently says that you are inferior, and because of that inferiority you must take the rear of everything.

The solidarity with which the Negro, both professional and non-professional, has entered and fought this fight, has done more to awaken the Negro to a sense of his own worth and strength, both economically and politically than anything since the Civil War. It has further served notice to the white man that the Negro's where the boycott was initiated — will certainly support the effort.

They are trying to break the boycott, in the hope that once the students return and see other colored passengers on buses they, too, will forget the arrest last May of two FAMU coeds.

The anti - boycott drive is doomed to fail. Arresting the leaders will not stop the boycotters in Tallahassee any more than it did in Montgomery, Ala. To the contrary, it will solidify the movement.

The odds are 100 to 1 that when the students return next month, they too, will remain off the buses.

Meanwhile, people and organizations elsewhere in the country ought to let the people of Tallahassee know they are not alone in their struggle for decency.

The boycott leaders need funds to carry on. Back them up with generous donations. The address is the Inter - Civic Association, 803 Floral Street, Tallahassee, Fla. The Rev. C. K. Steele is president.

Bus Rider Convicted In Seat Case

A young Miami Negro who refused to take a bus seat behind white passengers during a ride down NW 27th Avenue was ruled guilty of disorderly conduct Thursday in a two-hour city court trial.

Judge Francis A. Sobieski, commenting that he hoped the case would be "the first and last before this court," ordered Rudolph Reid, 19, of 2525 NW 67th St., to pay a $50 fine or serve 24 days in jail.

Then the judge suspended the sentence.

Reid and his Negro attorney, G. E. Graves Jr., promptly announced they plan no appeal.

A similar case, filed against Mrs. Bessie Kerbo, 50, of 341 NW 10th St., is scheduled for City Court hearing today.

In Reid's trial, Judge Sobieski commented that he found no evidence to convince the court that the youth's actions last Monday aboard a Miami Transit Co. bus were "premeditated or intended to provoke any incident."

City Prosecutor Tom O'Connell contended in final arguments that Reid's refusal to obey the bus driver and to abide by state and city segregation laws was "invoked and provoked by the NAACP" as the means for testing the validity of the state segregation law. The NAACP is the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

"This boy deliberately sat where he knew he should not be sitting, ahead of white people," O'Connell said. "His act could well have been just the thing to set off a riot."

He urged the judge to consider also that young Reid had admitted in his testimony that he was "interested in organizing here a youth group which was hoping to affiliate with the NAACP."

The city used four witnesses in the trial. Reid called two young friends in addition to telling his story to the judge.

The bus driver, Henry Ahlbrandt, said Reid and two other Negro teenagers boarded the southbound bus at NW 27th Ave. and 36th St. about 3:40 p.m. Monday, taking seats near the side door.

"I noticed in my mirror that one boy (Reid) sat down in front of a white woman on a single seat, even though there was plenty of vacant seats to the back, Alhbrandt said. "I walked back to him and asked him to move. He said 'No, I like this one better.' I left the bus and called police to meet the bus at NW 7th Street.

Herald

"The boy, with the officer present, again refused to move and he was taken off the bus and put in a patrol car after the patrolman explained the state and city segregation laws to him."

P.2-A

Mrs. Amy Cram, 53 NW 24th St., a Miami resident 40 years, testified Reid sat opposite her and ahead of another white passenger.

"I heard him say, 'Nobody can make me do anything' after the driver asked him to move back on the bus. I told him once to shut up and he said he didn't have to. It looked like it was all planned."

Mrs. Cram said Reid was "a brazen one" and added that his young friends "just laughed" over the incident.

Patrolman K. M. Hardin testified that Reid claimed, "It's too hot back there" when asked a second time to change seats. Later, Hardin said, the youth complained the bus driver "hurt my pride" by asking him to move.

Asked why he made the arrest, Hardin replied:

"I felt there might have been trouble if I left him where he was sitting."

H. M. Thompson, transit company executive, said the firm has insisted on a policy of having Negro passengers "seat from the rear" and has posted signs to that effect.

Aside from the Reid incident, Thompson said, the company has had "only an occasional argument" over the seating plan as set by law.

In his defense, Reid contended his choice of a seat caused "no disorder and no disturbance" on the bus. He claimed he had not acted on "promptings from any group" in taking the seat ahead of white persons. "I sat where I ususally sit on the bus," he testified. "I've never been asked to move before, even when I sat up farther front on several other buses."

As witnesses to the incident, Iona Williams, 16, and Willie Collins, 18, Reid's companions, said they were on the way to W. Flagler St. and 14th Ave. to "pay a bill."

They said they sat in a double seat just to the rear of the side door, with Reid diagonally across the aisle — in the seat ahead of a white woman who later moved.

The court's ruling upheld the police charge that Reid had committed "disorderly conduct by a breach of the peace through an unlawful act (failure to obey the segregation law on public carriers)."

Boycotted Transit Line Ready to Quit

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 15 (AP)—The Cities Transit Co. disclosed today it intends to go out of business in Tallahassee July 1 unless a solution is found to the problems created by a boycott of its buses by Negroes.

The Negro community, about one third of Tallahassee's 40,000 population, has been refusing to ride buses since May 29 in protest against segregation practices required by state and city law.

P.10

An estimated 70 per cent of the bus company's business prior to the boycott came from Negroes.

A full page advertisement in the Tallahassee Democrat reproduced a letter from the bus company to the City Commission announcing the transit line's intention of suspending all service July 1 "under existing circumstances."

The company's letter said the boycott has cut revenues 60 per cent.

The Negroes are demanding as conditions for ending the boycott that they be permitted to take seats wherever they choose, that Negro drivers be employed on predominantly Negro lines and that bus drivers be required to treat them with courtesy.

NAACP to Call For Integration

Possibility of a boycott of Miami Transit Co. buses loomed Thursday as the local chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People prepared to demand an end to segregation on buses.

The NAACP's educational committee was to meet this morning to decide what action it will take on the boycott. Several leaders Thursday night said nothing definite had been decided.

Octavio Cuevas, general manager of the company, said that until local and state laws are changed there is no possibility the company will alter its present policy.

That policy, loosely enforced for years, is for Negroes to seat from the rear, whites from the front. In other words, first Negroes on a bus are supposed to take back seats, while whites take the front seats.

There is no demarcation line on how far either group may go. When seats are filled, additional passengers — Negro or white — are supposed to stand.

Cuevas said the transit company has not been presented with any requests or demands to alter that policy, and knew of the proposed ultimatum only through calls from newspapermen.

"But it isn't up to us to decide," he said. "We operate on a franchise from the city, and must function under city ordinances and state laws.

"We will have to work under those regulations until we are notified they have been changed."

He said that he knew of no incident between Negro and white passengers on buses, even since a bus boycott was called by Tallahassee Negroes a week and a half ago.

The meeting of the NAACP to take a stand on a boycott was called by the local chairman, the Rev. Theo R. Gibson, pastor of Christ Episcopal Church.

He said that a special committee will be appointed to present demands for end of bus segregation to the transit company and to circulate petitions among Negroes and whites.

"If they don't come across, we will call a boycott or go to the courts, or both," said the Rev. Mr. Gibson. "We hope we can accomplish this by peaceful, logical and reasonable means. If we call a boycott, it will be because we feel that we can get quicker relief that way.

Meanwhile, at Tallahassee, The Rev. Charles K. Steele, local president of the NAACP, was sentenced to pay a fine of $35 or serve 20 days in jail for ignoring a stop sign while ferrying Negroes in a car pool.

The Rev. Mr. Steele said he would appeal the conviction to Circuit Court, and sentence was deferred for 10 days. The NAACP has demanded full integration of the city's bus lines as its price for ending the boycott of the buses.

Miami Held Too Big for Bus Boycott

Miami, Fla.

The threat of a possible bus boycott by local Negroes diminished Saturday as Negro leaders here indicated they believe the idea impractical at this time.

Meanwhile, a mass meeting to consider various ways to end Negro segregation on local buses will be held at 3 o'clock this afternoon in St. James AME Church, 1824 NW 66th St.

H. E. Sigismund Reeves, editor of the Negro weekly newspaper, The Miami Times, said in an editorial Saturday he is opposed to the idea of a boycott in Miami "because I just don't think it would work here.

"It has worked in Montgomery and Tallahassee but they are much smaller cities. Miami covers a far greater area and our people have to travel much longer distances.

"We can't see it for Miami. It might hurt the very people it is intended to help. Let us work in a legal manner, not with a boycott."

Today's meeting will be conducted by the Rev. Theodore R. Gibson, president of the Miami Chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

HARRASED FAMILY — Mr. and Mrs. Herley T. Smith were arrested by Tallahassee policemen for driving their own twin daughters, Rushielle and Isabelle home from a store in downtown Tallahassee because the officers thought Mr. Smith was a car pool operator in the bus protest, now in its 6th month.

Held for driving his own family

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "We were shocked to see that in spite of the fact I told police officers that my passengers were my wife, my daughter and a cousin, they arrested us anyway."

This is what Henry T. Smith, one of the defendants in the city's case against car pool drivers accused of violating a local "for-hire" ordinance, told the AFRO last week.

Det. Sgt. B. J. Strickland testified during the recent trial that police officers observed Mr. Smith for three days as he picked up passengers in his car.

UNDER CROSS-examination by NAACP Defense Attorney Francisco Rodriques, Strickland admitted that when the arrest took place on the third day that Mr. Smith was carrying his own family to to town in their family car.

At the time of the arrest, city police were conducting a crackdown in an effort to break up the car pool which was formed by the Inter-Civic Council to assist citizens who refuse to ride in segregated buses.

Mr. Smith, a worker in a local furniture company, has twin daughters, Rushibelle and Isobelle, 16 years old. Mrs. Smith, a beauty parlor operator, has a shop in her home.

"My wife and daughters asked me to pick them up that day," Smith stated. "They wanted to go to town to do some shopping."

The Smiths were taken to the police station nevertheless, and Smith was placed under $500 bond and released.

Identical twins, Rushibelle and Isabelle, appeared in court Thursday with their parents. They always dress exactly alike in every detail. Thursday they wore identical blue between season cotton frocks and matching earnings.

We're Still Walking

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "When they arrested us, we were walking. When they tried us, we were still walking. And now that they have sentenced us, we are still walking."

These were the defiant words of the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council, one of the 21 leaders of the five-month-old bus boycott that colored citizens of this city are carrying on to end segregation on the buses.

The five-day trial ended recently with the conviction of the 21 charges of violating a city "car-for-hire" ordinance by operating a car pool for citizens needing transportation.

Each of the defendants was sentenced by City Judge John Rudd to pay a fine of $500 or serve 60 days in jail. The jail term, however, was suspended and each defendant was put on probation for one year.

* * *

FRANCISCO RODRIQUES, attorney for the Inter-Civic Council, announced immediately that he would appeal the case. He urged the bus boycotters to accept Judge Rudd's decision "without rancor and without bitterness."

Date for filing the appeal was set for last Wednesday, but the AFRO learned Saturday that the appeal petition had not been filed, but was scheduled for filing on Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. Rodriquez had telegraphed Judge Rudd from Tampa, Wendesday, asking the postponement of the filing date for "reasons of health," and the judge had postponed the filing deadline for five days.

"Although the car pool is temporarily shut down, we are not licked. The war is not over," the Rev. Mr. Steele declared. "Now that they have struck at the heart of the ICC, we are still walking.

"It was an inspiration to me," the Rev. Mr. Steele continued, "to see, when I took my daughter to school Thursday morning, that we are still walking."

The Rev. Mr. Steele was referring to the early morning procession of domestic workers who now walk to their respective places of employment since the car pool has been called off.

THE ABANDONMENT followed a memorandum directed to the ICC from Rodriquez after Judge Rudd had rendered his decision following the trial.

"I have ordered the immediate end to any car transportation activity by the council," the memo said, "and the immediate end of any activity that even takes the semblance of transportation activity.

"This is to remain in effect so long as the order of the judge is in effect."

SPEAKING IN a mass meeting, the Rev. Mr. Steele stated: "We can wait. We can give each other a lift in our cars, or we can continue to walk.

"We want our city to have a transportation system but we want them to appreciate our patronage. We want one which will treat our wives and daughters like ladies and not like female animals."

The Rev. Mr. Steele referred to the fact that when riding a bus, our women who work long hours as domestics were forced to sit in the back or stand up to allow white women to have their seats.

* * *

"WE WILL not go back to segregated buses," he added, "because our fight has brought us together."

Afro-American
Sat. 11-3-56

Giving a preview of the future activities of the ICC, he revealed that they may carry on a drive to get more voters registered.

"The white man is afraid of us possessing the ballot," he declared. "But he will respect the ballot. If we can get 10,000 citizens on the books, whoever runs for office will come by and see us."

Sat. 11-3-56

ASKED IF they had planned a registration campaign, officers of the ICC stated that they had no definite plans at the moment, but that they were anticipating such a program in the future.

The Florida fall "rainy" season seemed to have begun during the days of the boycott trial. However, the courtroom was filled each day with sympathizers who had walked many miles to attend the sessions.

Questioned as to what they might do if the rains continued and the car pool would not be in operation they said, generally, "We'll just keep on walking."

* * *

SITUATED UPON seven hills, Tallahassee, the only unconquered capital city of the old South, is spread out over a distance of about 10 miles in four directions off a courthouse square.

Many of the people upon whom the boycott rests walk as great distances as six miles a day to and from their jobs.

"Our fight is wrapped up in love. It is a spiritual idea, one based upon freedom, for which we so hungrily yearn," the Rev. Mr. Steele pointed out. "That is why we will not give up."

* * *

A STATEMENT of an elderly woman who has been walking since June and refuses to ride in any vehicle is one which she made following a speech she heard Rev. King Soloman Dupont, ICC vice president, deliver in September.

"Someone asked me," she said, "if I was tired, one night as I was walking home.

"I said, 'son, for years my soul has been tired of this segregation. Now my feet are tired, my soul is resting. I think I can keep on walking'."

Negroes Are Convicted In Florida Carpool Case

Sunday Star
Washington, D.C.
Sun. 10-21-56
p. 19-A

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 20 (AP).—City Judge John Rudd today found 21 members of the Negro Inter-Civic Council and the council itself guilty of operating an illegal transportation system.

He fined each $500 and sentenced them to 60 days in jail, but suspended the jail sentence and placed them on probation for a year.

The sentence was stayed pending a defense motion for a new trial, which is expected by October 24.

The judge's decision was not accompanied by an opinion.

"Based on the law and the facts, the court finds the defendants guilty as charged," he said.

The charges against the defendants arose from operation of a carpool to provide transportation for Negroes boycotting the city buses in protest against segregated seating.

Special City Prosecutor Mark Hawes told the court that if the council members were acquitted licensed transportation systems would be in "serious jeopardy."

Defense Attorney Francisco Rodriguez told the court the Inter-Civic Council carpool does not fall within the definition of transportation "for hire." Part of the trial testimony revolved around the fact the carpool automobiles carry no "for hire" tags.

Mr. Rodriguez said none of the riders had paid fares and therefore the transportation they received could not come into the "for hire" category.

IT WAS reported by the Rev. J. Metz Rollins, ICC treasurer, Saturday, that the airplane company gave the Rev. Mr. Steele $100 to partially cover the loss.

The Rev. Mr. Steele is currently on a speaking tour of the United States to raise money for 21 leaders of the bus boycott movement who recently were fined $500 or 60 days in jail for their activities in leading the boycott.

The Rev. Mr. Steele was en route to Tampa to address the state-wide meeting of the NAACP when the robbery occurred.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "I read something in the paper, but I don't understand what it's all about."

Dr. George W. Gore Jr., made this statement to the AFRO Tuesday when asked what he thought about the outcome of the trial for the 21 leaders of the bus boycott in Tallahassee.

Dr. Gore is president of Florida A. and M. University. It was reported that he was "embarrassed" by the now almost five-month old protest against segregated-seating on Tallahassee buses.

In September, Dr. Gore told the AFRO that he did not threaten to fire any teachers for participating in the boycott, adding:

All teachers have contracts for the year ending in June 1957, and that "even if he wanted to, he could fire no one."

We won't pay, Steele tells NAACP

Afro-American

BALTIMORE

"The demonstration will continue."

Standing in a small room of the main auditorium of the Sharp St. Memorial Methodist Church, the Rev. C. K. Steele spoke with firm conviction on Sunday afternoon.

The Florida minister had just finished delivering an impassioned speech at a mass meeting of the local NAACP; and while he admitted that he was tired, his voice was strong as he commented in the latest development in the Tallahassee bus boycott.

The day before, on Saturday, the Rev. Mr. Steel and 20 other persons had been fined $500 each for allegedly violating a Tallahassee automobile for-hire ordinance in connection with the boycott.

* * *

"WE CERTAINLY don't intend to pay the fines at this stage of the game," the Rev. Mr. Steele said as he explained that the imposition of fines has been stayed for ten days and an appeal of the verdict was being considered.

Asked if he would continue to take a direct part in the boycott, the Rev. Mr. Steele said:

"We (the persons fined) can't drive any more because even a traffic violation would bring them (city officials) down on our heads.

"But we have asked everyone to start picking up people on a voluntary basis and we have asked everyone to walk if they can't get a ride.

"They ghought they had hit the very heart of the (boycott) system but they haven't.

"The bus demonstration will continue."

The Rev. Mr. Steele was in Baltimore in conjunction with the current membership drive of the local NAACP.

The drive has a goal of 15,000 members. It is scheduled to end on Friday with a 8 p.m mass meeting at the Sharp St. Church at which Gus Courts of Mississippi will be the speaker.

Mr. Courts is the man who was shot when he attempted to vote in the Southern state.

BEFORE HE made these comments on the bus boycott, in which he was played a leading role, as president of the Inter-Civic Council, the minister had stirred the audience in the church with a ringing speech that was frequently interupted by applause as his words thundered in the auditorium.

At several points in his speech he reminded the listeners that: "Old Talahassee is not what she used to be," and each time he mentioned these words and explained how the colored citizens had achieved a new sense of dignity through the boycott, the audience cheered.

Tracing the start of the bus boycott, the Rev. Mr. Steele recalled that on May 26, two coeds from Florida A and M University had been arrested following a dispute over segregated seating on a city bus.

"These young ladies had too much of the modern colored blood to take it," the minister said.

A cross was burned in front of their residence to frighten them, but, said the minister: "Thank God it had the opposite effect."

* * *

THAT BEGAN the bus boycott, said the Rev. Mr. Steele, and since then the movement has been to set by a string of crises caused by both white and colored citizens, the latter group identified as "the new Uncle Toms," by the Rev. Mr. Steele.

"The old Uncle Tom stooped and bowed to obtain some favor for the race. The New Uncle Tom stoops, grins talks out of both sides of his mouth to feather his own nest.

"I don't know which group has been the most disappointed, the White Citizens or he new Uncle Toms. They have learned the hard way that Old Tallahasee is not what she used to be."

* * *

TURNING TO the NAACP the mnister heaped praise upon the organization for its work in the field of civil rights and said that it must be effective since it was feared so much by the White Citizens Councils.

"I would be a member of the NAACP if for no other reason than that it is feared by the Southern white man," he added.

He also reminded the audience that one of their most effective weapons was the ballot, and said:

"In the voting booth every man is a king and every woman a queen."

* * *

DEALING DIRECTLY with the bus boycott, the Rev. Mr. Steele emphasized that it was not being waged against people but against principles and thereby it had to be conducted on a non-violent basis based on love of a fellow man.

"Love is the most powerful force in the world. There is no power stronger. But protesting in love is not easy," he said.

"It is not easy to tell a man who thinks he has a right to stand on your foot, 'Brother, I love you, get off my foot.'

"We have to be careful least the agony of our suffering causes bitterness to come from our hearts."

Making liberal references to the Bible, the Rev. Mr. Steele's voice rang clear and loud as he shouted:

"From the very beginning we had the knowledge that we were right. That it is right for us to pay our fares and to choose our seats.

"Right is eternal. No one can destroy the man who is wrapped up in right.

"No matter if the crowd walks away," he advised with passion in every word, "be right! be right!"

* * *

AS THE AUDIENCE showed its approval with words of encouragement, the Rev. Mr. Steele said:

"It is far better to walk in humble dignity than to ride in shameful humiliation."

Then as the misister neared the end of his speech, his voice rose and his hands grabbed the edge of the lectern as the words tumbled forth to send a wave of unsupressed emotion through the audience.

NEW YORK—"We call upon the bus drivers of Montgomery and any other city or town where a boycott or a campaign of passive resistance to the segregation edicts is being conducted, to join with the forces of decency and progress in their communities and to refuse to carry out policies of segregation or racial discrimination in the performance of their daily duties."

This statement was made by the International Executive Council of the Transport Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO, at a session at the Park-Sheraton Hotel here last Thursday.

The resolution blasts White Citizens Councils and commends the courage, determination and maturity of the colored people of Montgomery in their unflinching insistence on long overdue justice.

Excerpts from it follows:

"The fight for civil rights in America has recently been brought into sharp focus by the valiant stand of American citizens in their struggle for first class citizenship and by the Supreme Court's decisions which have torn down the barriers of segregation in the public schools and in inter- and intra-state transportation.

"The Transport Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO, joining with organized labor and all other decent elements in our society, hails this genuine progress toward the achievement of full and unqualified citizenship by our colored brothers.

"However, it is with deep concern and anxiety that we view the efforts now being made to subvert this progress and to deny in practice what the country's highest court has sustained to be the rights of colored citizens under the Constitution of our land.

"THE WHITE Citizens' Councils, mushrooming from the hate-beds of the South, are spreading their racist poisons through an alarming large number of our states.

"By economic intimidation and the encouragement of mob-violence and murder, the White Citizens' Councils have revived the cowardly tactics of the hooded massacre and the desecration of the burning cross.

"Their end is to crush not only the organizations of colored people but to wipe out all groups, and particularly the trade unions in the South which are fighting for justice and equality for all minorities.

"This International Executive Council of the Transport Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO, condemns the White Citizens' Councils as a menace to all America and a blight upon our national life."

Bus Co. Ends Line Struck By Boycott

Post & Times Herald p. 3 Wed. 6-6-56

Washington, D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 5 (AP)—Bus service on runs serving Tallahassee Negro communities has been shut off as a result of an 8-day-old boycott.

The city commission yesterday authorized the Cities Transit Bus Co. to discontinue the runs after the transit firm reported they had become unprofitable.

The transit company, in petitioning the commission for authority to pull buses off these routes, said its Tallahassee operations had been losing money and one way to "minimize the loss factor" was to close the runs doing little business.

The city commission rejected a demand by the Negro Inter-Civic Council for full integration on city buses as a condition for ending the boycott.

Commissioners said to grant the request would be a violation of state segregation laws.

Only a handful of Negroes are still riding the buses. Others are walking or being transported in carpools.

The boycott was touched off by arrest of two Negro students of Florida A&M University for Negroes for sitting on a seat beside a white woman and refusing to move. The charges were later dropped.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—With the boycott of local buses only four weeks old, the local transit firm is already ready to call it quits, fold up shop and go out of business.

The Cities Transit company announced that it plans to go out of business on July 1 unless some solution is found to the financial problem which has been created by the boycott.

* * *

IN THIS EVENT, Florida's capital city will be without a public transportation system.

The boycott of buses by the city's 13,000 Negro residents began on May 28 just after two Florida A. and M. university c--eds were arrested for refusing to move out of their seats on a bus and give them to white patrons.

A FULL-PAGE announcement in a local newspaper last weekend said that the transit firm, literally and actually, is at the end of its rope. Fully 70 per cent of the company's resources was realized from colored patronage, it was pointed out.

The transit firm has given indication that it is willing and anxious to discuss requests made by colored patrons for first-come, first-served seating, colored drivers on predominantly-colored routes and more courteous service to patrons.

But local officials have shown an unwillingness to cooperate, basing their stand on local and state laws requiring segregated seating. Such laws have been found invalid by Federal district courts and the US Supreme court.

IN THE meantime, Tallahassee's colored citizens are getting to and from their jobs and other places utilizing the 60-odd cars that make up a motor pool hastily set up to replace buses as modes of transit.

And at Miami colored citizens have rejected the idea of staging a boycott of buses in protest to the city's stringent segregation code.

Group Demands Negro Drivers; First Come Seats

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — City officials declined Wednesday to prosecute two Negro coeds for insisting on seats toward the front of a bus, but a boycott launched in protest over their arrest spread throughout Tallahassee.

Students at Florida A and M University began boycotting buses through the campus Monday. Leaders of the Tallahassee Negro community met Tuesday night, and Wednesday issued a call for a city-wide Negro protest.

TWENTY-ONE CARS

Twenty-one private automobiles worked from 12 centers Wednesday, answering more than 200 calls from Tallahassee Negroes joining in the bus boycott movement. Leaders say only half as many Negroes were riding city buses in the Florida capital city yesterday.

A similar boycott has continued in Montgomery, Ala., for more than six months. The Montgomery protest began with the arrest of a Negro woman who refused to move to the rear of a bus, but has since broadened into a protest against segregated seating.

NAACP BACKING

Tallahassee Negro community leaders, backed by an official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, made three demands upon city and bus line officials Wednesday. They asked for the right to be seated on a first-come, first-served basis, for more courteous treatment by bus drivers, and for assignment of Negro bus drivers on runs where passengers are predominantly Negro.

The city Wednesday decided not to prosecute the two coeds--Miss Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Miss Carrie Patterson, 20 -- charged with placing themselves in a position to incite a riot. Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said the cases were turned over to university officials for action, in the same manner as are most minor police cases against students of the all-white Florida State College at Tallahassee.

Meanwhile, R. W. Sanders, Florida State Secretary NAACP, who attended the meeting of 450 persons Wednesday night, told the group:

"I've been in contact with our national office and they told me to come in and make a thorough survey to see what can be done from a legal standpoint. The NAACP is watching every move you make."

PRESS BARRED

Reporters were not permitted at the Wednesday night meeting at which the decision to apply the college boycott city-wide was made.

City officials and bus company officials declined all comment on the arrest Saturday of the two college students or the subsequent protest.

Daily World 5-31-56

Protest leaders claimed that the boycott had already cut the bus company's patronage by Negroes in half. They pointed out that except for brief radio reports, Thursday morning newspapers would be the first word most people in the city would have concerning the call for the city-wide protest. Daily newspapers did not publish afternoon editions because of the Memorial Day Holiday.

Integration Plea Renewed at Tallahassee

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 5 (AP)—The Negro Inter-Civic Council Tuesday renewed its demand for integration on Tallahassee city buses.

Wed. 6-6-56

The request has been denied by the Cities Tranist Bus Co., and the Tallhassee city commission. The company eliminated service through Negro districts Monday because of the eight-day-old bus boycott by Negro passengers.

New Orleans

The council issued a statement saying it is hoped "a partial agreement in principle by the city and bus company" on requests for employment of Negro drivers and more courteous treatment will lead to "an equitable agreement" on the integration demand.

Bus Bias End Asked For In St. Petersburg

Daily World Sat. 6-23-56 Atlanta, Ga.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.— (INS) — Negro civic leaders, declaring we want to be treated like human beings," Friday urged the St. Petersburg city council to end racial segregation on local buses.

Mayor Samuel Johnson and city manager Ross Windom told the Negro officials the situation would be given "immediate" consideration. P. 1

The Negroes also asked that Negro drivers be assigned to serve Negro areas and that special police protection be given "when the integration begins."

J. P. Moses, chairman of the civic group and spokesman for the Negroes, said he will call a mass meeting to urge that no boycott of city buses be called "until we find out what the city is going to do."

Harry Young, city attorney, asked the Negroes to prepare a list of special grievances and present it at another council meeting.

Dr. Fred Alsup, Negro physician, told the council "the situation is acute. All we ask is that we be treated like human beings." P. 2

Many of the Negroes who attended the meeting are plaintiffs in legal action against the city to force integration at St. Petersburg's public beach and swimming pool. The suit presently is on appeal from a federal district court ruling which upheld the plaintiffs.

Bus Manager's Attitude Held Regrettable

Daily World Sat. 4-28-56 Atlanta, Ga.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.-- (INS) -- The city manager of St. Petersburg said city-owned buses will continue to be segregated and predicted Negroes will not object. P. 1

The president of a Negro civic group, however, called the action "regrettable."

City Manager Ross Windom said there is no city ordinance requiring segregation on city buses. He said it is a "matter of custom and policy."

Windom declared, "The Negro patrons are accustomed to it and do not object."

J. P. Moses, Negro president of the Citizens Cooperative Committee said, however, "It is regrettable that St. Petersburg which is one of the finest communities in the South, isn't following the steps of other communities in this matter."

Daily World

Moses said the group will meet next week to discuss the matter and will question candidates for county offices at a Negro church rally on Monday. P. 4

The city is currently appealing a Federal Court order requiring the de-segregation of the city-owned Spa Beach and Spa swimming pool.

Tallahassee Sidelights

Afro-American P. 20
Sat. 6-16-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla — The Chattanooga (Tenn.) News-Free Press, Saturday came out with a front-page picture, purportedly showing a group of colored citizens "hooting" derisively at an empty bus passing by.

The picture showed some in the group pointing withoutstretched arm as the bus rolled by.

The rub was, however, that several of the persons photographed had their faces turned toward the photographer, showing the picture obviously to have been a "faked" or "staged" one, planted by the photo-snapper to try to show others how "disrespectful" their former subordinates had become.

Baltimore Md.

THE STORY had a headline on it that read, "Negroes 'hoot' but refuse to clarify demands in Tallahassee bus boycott," and went on to say:

"The principal question appeared to be what is meant by the colored citizens' demand that bus seating be on a 'first come, first served basis.'

"Executive Editor Malcom B. Johnson of the Tallahassee Democrat met with a colored delegation to seek a more specific phrasing of the request, but reported no agreement could be reached on any statement clarifying or explaining the exact meaning of the phrase.

* * *

"COLORED PEOPLE said when the demand was first announced they didn't want any member of their race to be forced to stand while a bus had vacant seats," the article stated.

How much more explicit could they be? That is the crux of the matter . . . ending segregation.

As the company's rules are now interpreted by the bus operators, colored passengers have to enter through the back door of buses and sit behind white passengers who enter through the front door.

If whites are seated on any of the two-or three-seat benches and all seats behind them are filled, colored riders are required to stand rather than occupy one of the vacant seats next to a white occupant.

SERVING TALLEHASSEE'S 15,000 colored residents are one colored pharmacy, four physicians and two dentists.

The pharmacist is Dr. H. A. Roberts, proprietor of the Economy Drug Store, and his wife, also a registered pharmacist, who obtained her training at A. and M. University.

The physicians include Drs. R. L. Anderson, L. H. B. Foote, W. A. Baker and C. M. Stevenson. The dentists are W. O. Campbell and M. C. Williams.

Professional men at FAMU frequently offer their advice and service to the local pros and Tallhasseeans.

ABSURDITY IN bus segregation, according to Willie Jackson, 1306 Central St., who has operated his own cab for some time, is that white taxies are permitted to have colored passengers and vice versa, while bus mixing is prohibited.

Jackson also pointed out that white and colored people ride together in private cars all the time and nothing is said about it by police or city officials, although it violates the state's jim crow arrangements.

The time was "overdue for an explosion," according to the cabbie, who said he is glad it happened here, but hopes violence will be averted.

NAACP LEADERSHIP in the bus protest was disavowed by the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council. He said that only incidentally is he president of the local branch of the NAACP.

No money from outside of Tallahassee has been received by the Inter-Civic Council, it has been stated, but the total amount donated to operate the car pool for stranded ex-bus riders exceeded $250 the first week.

Public contributions have been received from a local insurance firm and one labor union, in addition to funds offered by private individuals and churches at mass meetings.

IN TALLAHASSEE, the ICC president said, only he and the Rev. Mr. Daymond face charges lodged after the protest began.

The Rev. Mr. Steele was charged with two traffic violations while hauling seven boycotters last week. His hearing is to be held this week.

The Rev. Mr. Daymond, it is reported, received three tickets on the same day, Friday—one for giving a belated stop signal, another for driving astraddle a white line marking different traffic lines, and the third for having let his Georgia driving license expire on midnight before the day he was apprehend.

The same traffic policeman, a certain Officer Peacock, it was said, issued 3 of the 4 tickets to the Rev. Messrs. Steele and Daymond.

This gives substance to expressed beliefs of ICC leaders that no insidious program has yet been launched by city officials to harass the body for leading the bus protest.

* * *

MOST OF the leaders of ICC operate their own vehicles; and some say they have never ridden upon a city bus.

The complaints that they have heard of indignities and insults have impelled them to spearhead the movement for those less privileged than themselves and of their blood, they said.

EN ROUTE to Baltimore from Tallahassee, via Eastern Airlines, Monday, this reporter was in some outstanding company.

Seated directly behind him were Dr. George W. Gore Jr., president of Florida A and M University; and Dr. John W. Davis, former president of West Virginia State College and former Point-4 advisor to Liberia for the United States and at present special education consultant for the NAACP.

Dr. Gore was scheduled to deliver the commencement address at Albany State College, Albany, Ga., and Dr. Davis had completed the commencement address at Florida A and M, Tallahassee.

BOARDING THE plane at Albany, en route to Atlanta, was Dr. Sherman Greene Jr., secretary-treasurer of the General Board of Education, AME Church.

Dr. Greene, who took a vacant seat next to this reporter, had preached the baccalaureate sermon at Albany State College and was to stop over in Atlanta for the Atlanta University commencement before proceeding to his home in Nashville, Tenn.

He said that in his baccalaureate sermon he pointed out that contrary to Chamber of Commerce's advice that what the world needs now is more persons trained as scientists, atomic specialists and engineers, it needs persons trained in the techniques of human relations.

He cited J. Edgar Hoover as saying that America's greatest danger is not from communism but in the moral degeneration of her people.

Dr. Greene said he told Albany's graduates that what they had to do was not so much learning how to make a living as in learning how to live.

The director of the now integrated set-up of AME education was jubilant over his new plans for progress in these AME institutions, which, he said, will be put in operation July 1. — A. Randall.

Boycotted Bus Firm To Give Up

Herald Miami, Fla. Sat. 6-16-56

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— The city bus company, financially crippled in a boycott by Negroes demanding an end to segregated seating, announced Friday it will have to go out of business in two weeks.

P. 22-B

President J. S. Coleman of Cities Transit, Inc., said the boycott which began May 28 has caused a 60 per cent drop in revenue. Coming on top of a $3,000 operating loss for last year, Coleman said the company has no alternative but to "liquidate our holdings quickly so as to keep our losses as low as possible."

Leaders of the boycott by the city's 14,000 Negroes had little to say about the announcement but insisted they are open to offers by the city. The City Commission offered "first-come, first-served" seating shortly after the boycott began but consistently rejected demands for full integration.

The Rev. K. S. Dupont, an officer of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, said that integration is not the main desire of the Negroes.

"If we called off the boycott today I doubt seriously that many would go back to riding the buses," he said. "There is no great hue and cry about integration — just the daily abuses and discourtesy from the bus drivers. To go back to what we had would be worse than walking."

In his statement to the Tallahassee Commission Coleman took a slap at the Inter-Civic Council which he said must bear the blame "for the long-range results on this community" if the company goes out of business.

"The real loser, as we see it, will be the community and all of its citizens, including those whose ambitions the boycott was designed to further," he said.

Mass Rally Over Buses Due Sunday

Herald Miami, Fla. Sat. 6-16-56

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

Steps to end segregation on local buses will be discussed at a negro mass meeting Sunday.

The big meeting, expected to draw several hundred persons, will be at 3 p.m. at the St. James A. M. E. Church, 1812 NW 66th St.

GRAVES

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney who represented a Negro youth convicted of refusing to move to the rear of a bus, said the group will consider legal action. It is not interested in a bus boycott, he said.

Negro leaders apparently are united against a bus boycott because of the hardship it would cause. The number of Negro riders and the distances involved would make it difficult to organize a boycott, they said.

Graves said it is likely a separate suit will be filed in Federal Court attacking the constitutionality of segregation in local buses. The U.S. Supreme Court already has ruled out segregation in interstate transportation.

Graves represented Rudolph Reid, 19, who was found guilty in Miami City Court Thursday of disorderly conduct. The sentence was suspended.

There will be no appeal, Graves said. The NAACP attorney indicated the remedy will be sought in civil action.

City Judge Richard M. Swann granted a continuance Friday in the trial of Mrs. Bessie Kerbo, Miami Negro, charged with disorderly conduct in a similar bus incident.

She and her attorney, Joseph Kaplan, asked the delay until June 26.

NAACP In Miami Rejects Boycott

Advertiser Mon. 6-18-56

MIAMI, Fla., June 17 (AP)—The Miami chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored people today rejected the idea of a boycott of Miami buses to force integration.

A resolution condeming boycotts as "untenable" was passed at a mass meeting of about 400 Negro and NAACP leaders at St. James AME Church.

At the same time, G. E. Graves, attorney representing the NAACP, announced he would file a federal court suit challenging the constitutionality of Miami's bus segregation laws "very soon." He said the suit would be filed when it has been "adequately prepared."

E. L. Davis, Graves' law partner, said the fight is not with the bus company, but "it is with the people who pass and refuse to revoke segregation laws."

TALLAHASSE, Fla.—A spark similar to the one in Montgomery, Alabama, which startled the world over Negro unity and put a utility company in a financial strain, has been ignited in this Florida city. Last December, a Negro woman seamstress was arrested on a Montgomery city bus line for refusing to give her seat on the bus to a white man was the incident which started a city-wide boycott of the city buses. This boycott has been so successful that it has claimed the attention of darker skin people thruout the world, and especially in the deep south. Monday in this Florida city, two Negro women were arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus, and the burning of a cross at their home followed.

Tallahasse is the home of the Florida Agricultural and Mechanical college, and this incident prompted quick action from the student body. A meeting was called which was attended by more than 2,300 Negroes, and petitions calling for a bus boycott were circulated, according to Broadus Hartley, president of the student body at FA&M. Shortly afternoon the boycott was on.

The first bus after the petitions were circulated about 2 p. m. went thru streets and the campus of the college empty, followed by police escort. The Negroes yelled as they lined up and down the streets, "We'll Walk!"

This has the earmarks of being a replica of Montgomery, Alabama, where the boycott is now in its sixth month. There has been no violence in Montgomery, and there was no violence here, the Negroes have just decided to walk.

President George Gore of the college, where the boycott had its origin, was out of the city Monday, when the boycott started, and other officials stated that no formal statement would be made over the students' action until the president returned.

Miami boycott delayed; court action expected

Afro-American P.1 Sat. 6-16-56 Baltimore, Md.

MIAMI — Local NAACP officials Friday evening, delayed for the present plans to institute a bus boycott in Miami and Miami Beach in an effort to end segregated seating as required by Florida state law.

Earlier in the day, the Rev. T. R. Gibson, president of the local NAACP branch, said the association might call for a boycott against Miami Transit Co. unless it abandoned segregation.

* * *

THE NAACP official said the boycott was called off because members decided it should be used only as a last resort. Only 10 per cent of Greater Miami's 270,000 population is composed of colored people.

A committee was named Thursday night to formulate demands to be made to the bus company. Boycotts are currently being waged against bus companies in Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla.

* * *

THE PROPOSAL, the Rev. M Gibson, said, was suggested because the city's colored population thought it was time to wipe out segregation on buses.

Plans were also made to circulate petitions among white residents in an effort to gain their support. He said the boycott would be used as a "last resort."

He also had indicated that the colored residents would take court action if necessary.

Will Report Bus Arrest To NAACP

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 6-13-56

MIAMI (INS) — A Miami Negro arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a segregated bus will report to the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People today.

Rudolph Reid, 19, was invited to speak before an NAACP meeting after his arrest last night for refusing to move to the rear of a Miami bus when ordered to do so.

The youth was released on bond and will appear in municipal court Thursday morning on a breach of peace charge.

G. E. Graves, attorney for the local branch of the NAACP, said young Reid was "invited to come up and tell our meeting just what happened." The lawyer added that no immediate boycott of city buses by Negroes is planned.

However, Neal Adams, a Miami grocer and NAACP member, said he was president of a local Negro citizens' group which "will give serious consideration to a boycott." It was Adams who posted Reid's bond after his arrest.

He said no boycott would be called unless Negroes were fairly certain it would be "90 to 100 per cent effective."

The Reid boy told police he didn't want to sit in the back of the bus because it was "too hot back there." Adams denied that Reid would be made a "test case" but advanced the possibility that the Miami Transit Co. might be sued.

Bus company officials said driver Henry Ahlbrandt was merely following a state law when he summoned police when the boy refused to take a seat in the rear of the bus.

Boycott Bankrupts Bus Line In Tallahassee, Fla.

Chicago, Ill.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—(INS)—The president of the Tallahassee Transit Co. admitted last week the boycott of coaches by Negroes has been "successful" and announced the company plans to suspend operations as of July 1.

In a letter to the City Commission, J. S. D. Coleman, president of Cities Transit Co., said:

"Under existing circumstances it is our intention to suspend operation of buses in this community as of July 1, 1956 for an indefinite period."

A group of local citizens, however, immediately prepared to fight the boycott by aiding the transit company by wider use of buses by whites and soliciting funds if possible to aid the company.

Containers such as those used in the march of dimes campaign and other charitable drives have been place in restaurants and other public places.

REVENUE DOWN

Coleman said the boycott has been "successful in that it has taken 60 per cent of the company's revenue." Negroes had made up 70 per cent of the passenger load before the boycott began 22 days ago Monday with the arrest of two co-eds from nearby Florida A & M college.

The two girls were arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus when a white woman complained to a driver.

Negroes comprise about one-third of Tallahassee's 40,000 population. They have refused to ride city buses since May 29 in protest against segregation laws of the state and city.

The city commission, in a full-page advertisement in the Tallahassee Democrat, asked the white citizens of the community to "actively support the bus company" in the battle.

Only last Thursday night, the Negro inter-civic council announced after a mass meeting that the council "had reaffirmed our desire to continue walking until passengers of all races sit wherever they choose on city buses."

NO SOLUTION IN SIGHT

A spokesman for the group added that "since Negro citizens of Tallahassee give the bus company more than 70 per cent of its support, they keenly resent the fact that there has been no effort made to give them the same treatment that other American citizens of Tallahassee receive."

In his letter, Coleman said the bus company was willing to continue operating at a loss for "a reasonable period of time," but added "with no solution in sight and being an independent company without unlimited resources, we cannot continue to impair our financial condition, under circumstances as they now exist."

Negotiations between leaders of the boycott and City Commission have collasped over the issue of open seating on the buses. The company, however, has promised to consider Negroes for employment as drivers and to treat all passengers "with proper courtesy."

In Miami, leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People called a mass meeting Sunday to decide what policies to adopt concerning segregated seating on local buses.

The Tallahassee boycott was patterned after the six-month-old bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala.

BUS LINE PLANS HALT IN FLORIDA BOYCOTT

Times New York

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 15 (AP)—The Cities Transit Company said today that it would suspend service July 1 unless a solution was found for the problems created by a boycott of its buses by Negroes.

Negroes, who form about one third of Tallahassee's 40,000 population, have been refusing to ride buses since May 29 in protest against segregation practices required by state and city law. An estimated 70 per cent of the bus company's business before the boycott came from Negroes.

A full-page advertisement today in The Tallahassee Democrat reproduced a letter from the bus company to the City Commission announcing its intention. The letter declared that the boycott had cut revenues 60 per cent.

The city granted to the company this week authority to increase its fares from 10 to 15 cents to help make up for the revenue loss.

Today's advertisement also reproduced an open letter from the City Commission to the citizens urging "active support" for the bus company.

The boycott was touched off by students of Florida A. & M. University. Negroes are demanding the right to take seats wherever they choose on buses.

New Bus Boycott Ignored by Many

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 31.—Negroes vowed an all-out boycott of local buses today in a carbon copy of the Montgomery strike but the spirit appeared lacking so far to make it half so effective. N. Y.

Many Negroes walked or rode in car pools to work to back up demands for first come, first served seating arrangements and "more courtesy" from drivers.

A spot check of buses during the morning rush hour, however, indicated that just about the usual number of Negroes were riding the vehicles in the downtown area.

The boycotting Negroes were led by a hastily-formed "Inter-Civic Council."

Police arrested the Rev. C. K. Steele, local chapter president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, on charges of running through a stop sign and speeding while driving his own car which he had placed in the car pool. He was ordered to appear in Police Court next Monday.

The boycott emerged from the arrest of two Florida A&M University coeds who sat in the white section of a segregated bus. Graduation ceremonies wil lbe held at the university Monday, and city officials hope the controversy will die when school is out.

Bus Boycott Threat Eased for Present

By AL NEUHARTH
Herald Staff Writer

Local leaders of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People today will begin a "lawful and reasonable" program to end segregation, after canceling plans for any immediate bus boycott.

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney member of the NAACP committee on education and information, said he will prepare petitions requesting the Miami City Commission to repeal all segregation ordinances.

That was the initial step in a program adopted Friday by the six-member committee. It outlined these plans:

1. PETITION the Miami City Commission and the Florida Legislature, asking both groups to repeal existing segregation laws.

2. IF THAT FAILS, seek legal remedy in the courts, carrying the issue "as high as is necessary."

3. USE OF BOYCOTTS only as a "last resort."

The Rev. Theodore R. Gibson, president of the Dade NAACP, said the new course of action was decided on to show "we are law abiding people seeking a reasonable and harmonious program" for both white and Negro citizens.

He and other committee members expressed confidence their program will be effective, but acknowledged that the time element is uncertain. They said they expect some delays.

"If the courts don't expedite things, that's the penalty we'll pay for being law abiding citizens," the Rev. Mr. Gibson said. "We're a reasonable group and we'll approach this with good will."

He said petitioning of the City Commission, the first step, will be done within a matter of a few days. Petitions will be presented to the commissioners, and a public hearing asked.

Mayor Randall N. Christmas said the commission probably will take no action on the proposed petition until after conferring with the attorney general and the governor.

Christmas pointed out Miami's present segregation regulations are simply part of a general ordinance adopting all state laws.

"Even if the city should repeal its segregation ordinance, we couldn't enforce desegregation as long as the state law exists," the mayor explained.

Gibson and Graves emphasized they will seek no special state legislative session to act on that petition, but will await the 1957 meeting.

"We're going to take things in stride. We don't want anybody to get the impression there is hysteria," the Rev. Mr. Gibson said.

A committee statement said plans for any present bus boycott were dropped because a demand to bus company officials to end segregation would be an unlawful demand.

"We do not intend to ask members of our association, our friends, or public officials to violate the laws of the land. On the contrary, we shall do all in our power to persuade them to keep the laws," the statement said.

"Therefore, we find it necessary to have the laws changed so as to comply with the Supreme Court decision of late."

One of the committee members, the Rev. J. N. Byrd, said he also was opposed to any bus boycott because he didn't think it would be effective.

"The percentage of bus riders who are colored is too small," he said.

Dade's Negro population is only about 10 per cent of the total, Graves pointed out.

Committee members in addition to the Rev. Mr. Gibson and the Rev. Mr. Byrd and attorney Graves were Mrs. Ruth Perry, Ralph S. Williams and Edwin L. Davis. No out-of-town NAACP representative was present.

Tallahassee Facing Loss Of Bus Line

Advertiser Sat. 6-16-56 Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 15 (AP)— Florida's capital city was faced today with the threat of losing its only public transport system July 1 due to a Negro boycott of city buses.

The Cities Transit Co. announced it intends to go out of business on that date unless a solution is found to financial problems created by the boycott.

The announcement came in a full-page advertisement in the Tallahassee Democrat. P.1

Tallahassee's Negro community, representing about a third of the city's 40,000 population, has been refusing since May 28 to ride city buses in protest against segregated seating required by city and state laws.

A group of white citizens was reportedly forming a committee to help promote bus travel and to solicit direct funds if necessary to subsidize bus operations.

An estimated 70 per cent of the bus company's business prior to the boycott came from Negro riders.

Bus Window Shattered -- Gunshot?

Herald P.1
Miami, Fla.
Thurs. 6-14-56

A window on a Miami Transit Co. bus was shattered Wednesday afternoon by what the driver and passengers believe was a bullet fired in the vicinity of SW 27th Ave. and Bird Rd.

R. L. Gaylor, driver of the bus, told Miami Police Officer A. S. Dorcas that he heard what he thought was a gunshot when the bus was about 100 yards north of Bird Road. Then passengers called the driver's attention to a shattered window back in the bus.

The object hit the fourth window on the left side of the bus. The passenger sitting in the seat by that window was Mrs. Irene Georgitson, of 2328 SW 18th St.

She told police that she too heard what sounded like a gunshot and heard something whiz by her head.

Investigation showed that the object did not actually penetrate the window, but slivers of glass were found in the bus aisle and on the seat opposite.

Mrs. Georgitson said she first thought the loud noise was the backfire of a car and glanced in time to see an old, black vehicle pass the bus going in the opposite direction.

A passenger sitting in front of Mrs. Georgitson called her attention to the shattered window beside her.

Mrs. Georgitson said the driver stopped the bus near Dixie Highway and called Miami Transit officials and police. There were only three other passengers on the bus at the time of the incident, besides Mrs. Georgitson.

"I think it changes the complexion of all the cases we have under advisement in this particular area."

FLORIDA BOYCOTTERS LACK MONEY TO PAY HEAVY FINE

Brooklyn, Nov. 26.—The five and one-half month boycott of City Transit Bus Co. lines in Tallahassee, Fla., will not cease until there is an agreement to "first come, first serve" provisions for all passengers.

Such was the declaration of Rev. Charles Kinze Steele last Monday at a mass meeting at Mt. Ollie Baptist Church, Brooklyn.

Rev. Steele, leader of the Inter-Civic Council and Tallahassee Branch, NAACP, and pastor of Bethel Baptist church, said if the 21 persons under conviction for operating a car pool do not win their appeal they may have to go to prison.

The treasury of the Council is far short of the $11,000 needed to pay their total fine, he said.

The State NAACP has given the service of its legal representative, Atty. Francisco Rodriques of Tampa, to defend the boycotters.

Rev. Steele praised the NAACP and said that the appropriation of $50,000 by the state of Florida for an investigation of that organization and the Inter-Civic Council was a move to shutup these militant organizations.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 7 (AP) — Negro bus boycott leaders were handed an ultimatum today to post $22,000 in appeal bonds by 11 a.m. tomorrow or pay $11,000 in fines immediately.

City Judge John Rudd served the notice on the Negro Inter Civic Council, which sponsored car pools during the six-month-old boycott and 21 of its members.

They were convicted Oct. 20 of operating an illegal transportation system.

Why Sue Us? Negroes Asked by Bus Firm

Miami, Fla.

Negroes seeking integration of Miami Transit Co. buses have aimed their federal court suit in the wrong direction, the bus company charged Friday.

The company asked that it be ruled out of the action which would leave only the city and individual city commissioners to face the suit.

At the same time the city moved to have the suit thrown out because the Negroes have not demanded relief from the "proper city officials" before coming to court.

The city also wants the state of Florida added as an "indispensable" defendant since state segregation laws are at issue.

The suit was filed Oct. 10 by four Negro women who said bus segregation denies their constitutional rights. They want city and state bus segregation laws declared unconstitutional.

"It appears the only complaint against the company is that it is complying with statutes and ordinances which are in full force and effect," argued attorney Lee M. Worley, for the company.

If it did not segregate buses it would be criminally liable and its franchise put in jeopardy, Miami Transit contends.

BUS PROTEST STRONGER IN FLA. AS FARES ARE RAISED

NEGROES 70 PERCENT OF CITY FARES

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. June 6-14-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The 17-day-old boycott of city buses by Tallahassee Negroes appeared to be gaining strength Wednesday despite the fact that fares were raised from 10 to 15 cents by the Transit Co. to offset the loss of revenue caused by the boycott.

Bus Company Vice president Charles L. Carter, In announcing the Hike in fares, said the system was doing so because of "our recent trouble" and "present financial situation."

"A LAST RESORT"

Carter said the increase was "a last resort" to remain in business. He said the bus company lost a considerable sum of money last year and had planned to ask for an increase in fares before the boycott began.

Prior to the boycott, Carter said Negroes made up at least "70 per cent of the company's business."

BOYCOTT STRONGER

The latest developments strengthened the boycott, according to officials of the Tallahassee Inter-Civic-Council, which is leading the Drive. Officials claimed the boycott is "about 95 per cent effective."

Meanwhile, no developments were announced after meetings between Attorneys for the city and the Inter-Civic Council. Council president Rev C. L. Steele left Tallahassee reportedly because he had received many insulting telephone calls regarding his part in the Fracas. However, he is expected to return for tonight's council meeting.

MAY 28

The boycott began May 28 with the arrest of a pair of Negro co-eds from Florida A. & M College in suburban Tallahassee. The two girls were arrested when they refused to take a seat in the rear of a Bus after a white woman complained.

The city later dropped the charges against the two, but the boycott had already gained momentum.

Passive Resistance Spreading?

Defender P.9

At Tallahassee, students of Florida A. and M. College, started a boycott of the city bus lines in protest over the treatment of two of their colleagues. They had been ejected from the bus when they refused to move back into the Jim Crow section and asked for their money back.

A fiery cross was burned that night on the lawn of the rooming house where one of the students lived. In Orangeburg, S. C. an orderly student sit down strike against harsh impositions of the board of trustees and a proposal to investigate the campus for alleged NAACP participation is still in progress. 6-9-56

Two weeks ago, a South Carolina school teacher was summarily fired from her post when she signed her name to a petition for integrated schools. Elsewhere in Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, and even Mississippi! incidents are taking place daily which indicate that the passive resistance movement sparked in Montgomery, Alabama is catching on and spreading.

Everywhere on the face of the globe the fires of freedom are breaking out and the Colonial powers are being hard pressed for money and arms and men to put down the rebellions. As a matter of fact, there is reluctance on the part of many of the troops they are sending in to carry out their assignment of butchering helpless people. Chicago, Ill.

At this point, we believe that the United States has the greatest opportunity in history to seize the psychological advantage over Communism. Without waiting for Congress which still insists on playing political football with civil rights, President Eisenhower could this afternoon through the broad powers of his executive authority charge the Justice Department to move forthwith to protect every citizen who seeks to register and vote.

He could order the FBI to move immediately into Mississippi and apprehend the murderers of Rev. George Lee, LaMarr Smit, and the attackers of Gus Courts, and he could elevate the civil rights section of the Justice Department to a full division with an Assistant Attorney General in charge whose responsibility would be to keep a close watch on what is happening in the South and elsewhere in the country on violations of civil rights and move swiftly to prosecute violators.

Of course, there would be howls of outrage from the South. Jimmy Byrnes would call for curbing Presidential power lest we become a police state and somebody in Virginia would propose interposition of states rights over the Federal Constitution, but the Kremlin's propaganda machine would be virtually annihilated and world tension would be considerably eased. Besides it would be cheaper than spending millions on propaganda which our friends across the sea don't believe anyhow.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "To be on the safe side, don't take anything — not even a five cent soda.

"There are a few weak ones. Don't put it past them to use paid stool-pigeons against us."

His (Daniel Speed's) was the grim warning issued, Saturday night, to drivers of the police-plagued car pool here.

The citizen-operated pool, composed of approximately 100 passenger cars, station wagons and trucks, is the backbone of the two-week-old bus boycott some 16,000 colored citizens are waging against the City Transit Company.

* * *

IT IS UNDER the immediate direction of Mr. Speed, chairman of the transportation committee, Inter-Civic Council of Tallahassee.

The Council, composed of 11 businessmen, ministers and lawyers, is spearheading the boycott.

The warning to the drivers was issued following a closed meeting at Council headquarters, 803 Floral St., called by the Rev. C. K. Steele, chairman, and pastor of Bethel Baptist Church.

While the meeting was closed to the press, it was learned that it was called mainly to discuss means of combatting harassing tactics employed by city police against car pool drivers.

* * *

ON SATURDAY the driver of a station wagon was stopped three times, once for going "21 miles per hour in a 20-mile speed zone," according to the apprehending officer.

To date, 12 drivers have been stopped, including two who were fined for alleged traffic violations. One of the latter was the Rev. Mr. Steele.

Further background for the emergency meeting, Saturday night, is the growing belief on part of Council members that police, bus company officials and the City Commission are resorting to "divisive tactics" in an effort to break the boycott.

In this connection, it is pointed out that the boycott is costing the transit company over $2,000 daily.

* * *

THE STALEMATE between the Civic Council and city and bus company officials was pointed up Friday when a meeting between the two sides failed to produce any tangible results.

When questioned regarding the meeting, Theries C. Lindsay, one of the two attorneys for the council stated: "All I can say at this point is we are still negotiating."

However, other members of the Council are expressing growing concern as to the sincerity of members of the City Commission.

At a meeting Friday with the group, City Commission representatives were careful to explain that the "interested citizens" had been "invited to come in and discuss the situation."

The current phase of the Tallahassee bus trouble dates from Saturday, May 26.

Two Florida A. and M. coeds, Misses Welhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie Patterson, 20, were arrested for sitting in the only two empty seats on the bus.

The seats happened to have been beside a white woman. The young women, both of Lakeland, Florida, refused to move when ordered to do so by the driver, Max Coggins.

They were charged with "placing themselves in a position to incite a riot," but were released on $25 bail when university officials intervened.

ALTHOUGH THE charges against them were dropped, later a cross was burned in front of the house where they boarded.

The following morning, Broadus Hartley, president of the student council (2,600) called a mass meeting in the campus auditorium. By an almost unanimous vote, the students agreed to stop riding the buses.

"We don't want to be humiliated any more," the student body president explained.

The boycott quickly spread to the colored population off the campus. The Rev. J. Metz Rollins Jr. defined it as a "matter of principles, not personalities."

After the boycott got rolling, the Rev. Mr. Steele was arrested "for passing a stop sign" while transporting passengers. He was fined $35, but is appealing both the conviction and sentence.

The first mass meeting, held at Bethel Baptist Church, also voted to submit three requests to the city and the bus company.

On June 4 these were drawn and submitted by Attorney Lindsay. They were:

1. All passengers shall have the right to sit wherever seats are available on buses.

2. Qualified colored opplicants be hired as bus drivers.

3. Equitable treatment be given all passengers, regardless of race or color.

* * *

ON THE DAY this communication was received, George C. White, city auditor and clerk, sent the city's answer.

It was " . . . the request was unanimously denied."

Simultaneously the bus company's answer was relayed by John C. Usley, attorney for City Transit Company.

It was:

"1. Denied.

"2. Denied.

"3. Granted, but superfluous."

Tonight at Bethel Baptist Church, the Citizens Council group is holding its second city-wide mass meeting "to let the people know what is ahead of us and to plot our course of action," the Rev. Mr. Steele declared.

Bus Company Nearly Broke

Leaders of Boycott Win First Round In Tallahassee, Fla.

Courier P. 2 Sat. 6-9-56
Pittsburgh, Pa.
38b

By ALBERT DUNMORE

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Failure to agree to a compromise offer by city and bus officials may result in the continuance of an effective bus boycott by Negro citizens of this city.

Although leaders of both groups are non-committal on results of a series of meetings being held, it has been learned that the following agreement to the three-point program presented by boycott leaders has been offered by city and bus officials:

1. That bus drivers would be more courteous than previously to Negro riders;
2. That negotiations would be started to have Negro drivers on city buses which served predominantly Negro routes.

No agreement could be reached on the requests for a "first come, first served seating arrangement" demanded by the boycott leaders.

IT IS KNOWN that several Negro leaders have sought to effect a compromise, but others are holding firm that all three of the demands be met before the boycott is lifted.

Started after two Florida A&M University co-eds were arrested after insisting that they occupy two seats in the front of a bus, the boycott spread from the campus throughout the county and by the week-end had become 90 per cent effective.

TALLAHASSEE—The two co-eds who touched off the local bus boycott are Miss Wilhelmina Jakes of West Palm Beach and Miss Carrie Patterson of Lakeland.

Bus officials admitted that more than 65 per cent of the riders on the city buses were Negroes and that a continued boycott would bankrupt the company.

Inside sources admit that the company could not withstand two weeks of an effective boycott.

Concern has been expressed that the boycott will have its effect in many areas.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE is scheduled to meet in special session, and although the meeting was called to meet the problem of the Mediterranean fruit fly, there has been talk that the matter of segregation will be brought to the floor and that anti-integrationists will move first to outlaw the NAACP in the State of Florida as has been done in other Southern states and to tighten controls on Florida A&M University.

PRESIDENT George W. Gore and other university officials have remained non-committal on the boycott.

From all appearances two women students, both midterm seniors, were successfully spirited away from the campus as reporters from virtually every major publication and communication outlet in the nation converged on this state's capital to cover the story.

None were able to get interviews or pictures from the two students.

Brodes Hartley, president of the Student Government Association, has also refused to make positive statements to the press relative to the boycott.

The boycott was begun by students after the girls' arrest and a subsequent burning of a cross on the lawn of the home where they lived.

The two co-eds were released almost immediately after their arrest under $25 bond and on Wednesday, charges of "placing themselves in a position to incite a riot" were dropped and the matter was turned over to university officials.

No official statement could be obtained from the university.

ALTHOUGH THE officials deny that no pressure had been brought to bear on them by the State Board of Control, as was rumored, the curtain of silence concerning the matter that has encompassed the FAMU campus has been completely effective.

A big question mark now centers around the appearance of the Rev. Edward Graham of Miami, who was scheduled to deliver the baccalaureate sermon Sunday, and Dr. John W. Davis, former president of West Virginia State College and now a member of the national staff of the NAACP, who was to give the commencement address.

Both men are known militants on the matter of granting full citizenship to Negroes.

Tallahassee Protest Head Fined In Court

MIAMI — (INS) — The drive to win equal rights for Negroes in the South spread Thursday to Miami, a city heavily populated with "Northerners" despite its location deep in the heart of Dixie.

The president of the Miami chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) announced that a boycott of city buses may be called if segregated seating is not abolished.

TWO BOYCOTTS

Bus boycotts by Negroes presently are in progress in Tallahassee, Florida's capital city, and Montgomery, Ala. A suit seeking equal rights for Negroes on buses is pending in Memphis, Tenn.

Just 55 miles north of Miami in the exclusive little resort town of Delray Beach, a battle is raging over use of the city-owned swimming facilities by Negroes. City fathers have gone so far as to propose realigning the city's boundaries and severing the Negro section from the rest of the town.

MIAMI CHAPTER

The Rev. Theo R. Gibson, president of the Miami Chapter of NAACP, said that if the Miami Transit Company does not abolish segregation on local buses, a boycott may be called.

PRESIDENT CONVICTED

Meanwhile in Tallahassee, Fla., Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was found guilty of speeding and running a stop sign in Tallahassee City Court.

Steele, a leader in the Negro bus boycott in Tallahassee, was sentenced to 20 days in jail or a $35 fine. He had pleaded innocent to the charges and declared he would file an appeal.

The NAACP leader has until Monday to post his fine or inform the court of his appeal move.

14 DAY BOYCOTT

Meanwhile, the boycott of city buses by Negroes was in its 14th day today with members of the Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council continuing to turn down offers of a settlement by the City Commission and Transit Company.

A Council meeting last night attracted some 500 persons. Steele urged the group to continue the boycott but asked them to avoid any violence. More than $2,000 has been collected to date to aid in the running of car pools for Negroes.

The bus company earlier this week cut off service to the Negro section of the city bordering Florida A and M College, an all-Negro institution. The arrest of two co-eds from the college who refused to move to the back of a segregated bus, touched off the boycott.

TALLAHASSEE, (Fla.), June 8 (AP).—The Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the Negro group spearheading Tallahassee's bus boycott, yesterday was sentenced to pay a fine of $35 or serve 20 days in jail on traffic law violation charges.

He pleded not guilty in Municipal Court and indicated he will appeal to the Circuit Court. City Judge John Rudd gave him until Monday to file notice of appeal.

He was charged with driving 35 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone and failing to halt at a stop sign. He was carrying boycott car pool passengers at the time.

Free 2 Coeds As New Bus Boycott Spreads

Defender P. 1 Sat. 6-9-56 Chicago, Ill.

Fight Jim Crow In Tallahassee

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Seemingly inspired by the heroic stand taken by bus boycotters in Montgomery, Ala., some 2,600 college students—part of the core of America's lifeline—have started a boycott here against racial segregation on city buses.

The arrests of two Florida A and M university coeds ignited the fire and, enraged and embittered, the entire student body of the school began a campus boycott.

Now it seems to be spreading throughout all Tallahassee, even though city officials declined to prosecute the two coeds who were arrested for insisting on seats toward the front of a bus.

[illegible] of Tallahassee have apparently heeded the call of their younger brethern. They met last week and issued a call for a city-wide protest and, one day after the boycott began on the university campus, about 21 private automobiles were working from 12 centers, answering more than 200 calls from Tallahassee citizens joining in the movement.

ARREST PROMINENT LEADER

The same day Rev. K. C. Steele, president of the local NAACP chapter, was arrested for running a stop sign and speeding after he picked up a group of Negroes at a bus stop. The arresting officer said he did not know Steele was an NAACP official and that the arrest was routine.

Steele denied the charges and was released without bond to appear in City Court Monday.

Negroes comprise about one third of the 40,000 Tallahassee population, and an estimated 70 to 90 percent of Tallahassee bus riders are Negro. Tallahassee's Negro leaders declare the boycott so far has been 50 to 75 percent effective.

PREDICTS RUINATION

Mayor Fred Winterle has predicted that if the boycott continues to spread the bus company would be ruined.

Sat. 6-9-56

The boycott and unrest was touched off at Florida A and M university (for Negroes) after two girl students, Wihelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested May 26 and charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot by refusing to move to the rear of a segregated bus.

Chicago, Ill.

According to the two girls, described by a college official as "good students and in good standing," they found only two seats when they boarded the bus. Both were in front. Asked to move, they told driver Max Coggins they preferred to leave the bus if he would refund their fares. He called police instead.

The girls were released on $25 bail each pending a hearing in city court the following Friday. But city officials declined to prosecute the coeds and their cases were turned over to the university officials for action — in the same manner as are most minor police cases against students of the all-white Florida State College here.

On Sunday, May 27, a flaming cross was thrown from a car to the lawn of the girls' rooming house. They became frightened and took refuge in the university's dormitory for women.

The cross burning really set it off. The student body met the following day, May 28, in the auditorium and heard speeches by three of their leaders, including student president Broadus Hartley, who called the arrests the latest "in a series of incidents in which we have been humiliated by bus drivers."

Hartley later said:

"I would not call it a boycott. We are just refraining from riding the buses until we can have assurance that we will receive better treatment."

Shortly after the meeting, students began circulating bus boycott petitions. Ninety minutes later, the first bus — driven by Coggins, who had caused the girls' arrest — went through the campus empty.

Tallahassee Negro community leaders have made no less than three demands upon city and bus line officials, asking:

"....for the right to be seated on a first-come, first-served basis.... for more courteous treatment by bus drivers....and for assignment of Negro bus drivers on runs where passengers are predominately Negro."

Charles L. Carter, manager of the Florida-owned Cities Transit Co., who insisted that Negroes had not been humiliated on the city buses, conceded that his company had felt a loss of passengers on the university run.

Governor Shuns Bus Boycott

Herald P. 6-C Jun. 6-5-56

Miami, Fla.

By JOHN L. BOYLES
Herald Staff Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Gov. LeRoy Collins said Monday the Tallahassee bus boycott by Negro citizens "is a local problem and should be settled locally."

The governor said previously every legal means will be sought to maintain segregation on public transportation in Florida. He said he was "disappointed" by the action of a Negro group Monday in which full integration on Tallahassee city buses was demanded.

Both the governor and the attorney general's office pointed out that Florida's law which calls for segregation of Negro and white passengers on intrastate buses is still valid.

Apparently a U. S. Supreme Court decision of April 23 abolished segregation only on buses operating between states. Assistant Atty. Gen. Ralph Odum said it did not affect Florida.

Actually under the statute, the Cities Transit Inc., operator of the Tallahassee buses, could not legally accept the Negro group's demands.

Negro leaders demanded an end to "humiliating" segregation on city buses Monday as their price for ending a bus boycott, but the City Commission refused the request.

The commission also granted a petition by the Cities Transit to remove buses from the Negro section of town and from Florida A&M University for Negroes where the boycott started. Patronage on those two runs was predominantly Negro.

The city had agreed to an earlier demand by the Negroes for "first-come, first-serve" seating without doing away with state and local laws requiring segregation. The city interpreted this "concession" as meaning that "if a person of one race takes the last vacant seat in the bus, a member of the other race may not take a seat beside such a person, but the seated person is not required to surrender the seat."

The city also had agreed that the bus company should accept applications for Negro drivers and should require drivers to be courteous to all passengers, regardless of color.

The Negro Inter-Civic Council rejected this attempted compromise at a mass meeting Sunday night attended by about 800 of the city's 14,000 Negroes who also chipped in $698 to continue a free "car pool" for persons boycotting bus transportation.

The council put its new demands for complete integration into writing following the mass meeting and submitted them Monday to City Atty. Ben C. Willis.

"Since the present bus seating arrangement is economically unsound, humiliating, arbitrary, inequitable, inconvenient and morally unjustifiable, all bus passengers shall have the right to sit wherever they choose on any bus or buses," the resolution demanded.

It also demanded that Negroes be allowed to work as drivers and in "various capacities" for the bus company and that all bus drivers be "constantly reminded of their never-ending obligations to render courteous service and equitable treatment to all passengers regardless of race, creed or color."

Success of bus protest is assured

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Now that a Federal court has ruled segregation on publicly operated buses in Montgomery unconstitutional, the course of action taken by the Inter-Civic Council of this city is predetermined and the success of its program assured, to one who has seen at first-hand how valiant and indefatigable the people of this city are in their struggle to win their civil rights in this area.

P. 20

The mass meeting, Sunday, led by the forceful Rev. C. K. Steele, and participated in by more than 1,000 Tallahasseans, was proof positive that a force has been generated in the colored citizens that cannot be quelled by halfway measures nor by violence.

MONDAY, THE City Transit Company carried out its formerly forbidding threat to halt operations of its buses running through predominantly colored neighborhoods and the campus of Florida A and M University.

What else could it do when each bus, with its formerly arrogant white driver, rolled by throngs of ex-passengers walking to their jobs, walk-upon their errands, or being transported by volunteers of the well organized car pool which was being operated to keep the people economically active and knit together in a solidarity that no white citizen dreamed was possible for a group they regarded as inferior and subservient?

Furthermore, hadn't the regular semester closed at A and M, leaving the campus deserted by all except a few staff members? Who was there to ride segregated city buses if they would condescend to do so?

* * *

THE ICC is not fooled by this latter measure of the bus company and will not relent in its fight to abolish segregation completely in public transportation here, The Rev. Mr. Steele said Tuesday.

During a 10-minute meeting earlier Tuesday, the Tallahassee City Commission voted unanimously to reject the proposal for first-come, first-served patronage of their bus lines, which would mean the end of segregation.

Assistant City Attorney Ben Willis said that integration would be in direct violation of city and state segregation laws.

By Tuesday evening, the car pool which services Tallahassee's 15,000 colored citizens had risen to 52 drivers with 32 pickup stations.

Fla. A & M Students Stage Bus Protest

Tues. 5-29-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — Florida A&M students began boycotting Tallahassee buses Monday afternoon following the arrest of two coeds who refused to move to the rear of one of the vehicles.

Atlanta Ga.

Some 2,300 students at the all-Negro College staged a mass rally yesterday afternoon and agreed on the boycott.

The first bus to move through the campus following the rally accompanied by a police car. Students lined the route and jeered: "We'll walk," and "We mean business".

TWO ARRESTED

The coeds, Miss Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Miss Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday and released on $25 bond on charges of violating an old city ordinance making it unlawful for anyone to place himself in a position to incite a riot.

A cross was burned Sunday night in front of the private home where the girls roomed and the landlord, Mrs. Eloise Kendrick, said the girls "got scared" and moved to a dormitory on the campus.

Broadus Hartley, President of the student body, said that all but about 300 of the school's 2,600 students attended the rally. It was Hartley who called the meeting.

STUDENT PETITIONS

The students are now circulating petitions asking persons not to ride the buses.

College President. George Gore was out of town and could not be reached for comment. The school said it was looking into the case and would issue a statement as soon as Gore returns, probably Tuesday.

City Court Judge John A. Rudd devotes Mondays to taking "guilty pleas," but the girls did not show up in his court—indicating they will challenge the charges. Their case will probably come before Rudd on Thursday.

THE ONLY SEATS

The girls said they boarded the bus Saturday night and found only two seats, both in front. They took the seats alongside a white woman and driver, Max Coggins asked them to move

The girls said they told Coggins they preferred to leave the bus providing they could get their money back. The money was refused and Coggins called police.

Mrs. Kendricks said she heard a car drive up in front of her house last night. "I didn't think anything about it," she said, "but one of the girls went to the door and said 'there's a big fire out there."

Mrs. Kendrick said she looked up and saw the cross, which had been stuck in the sand in front of her house "It was not too big, but was burning brightly," she said.

Firemen extinguished the blaze and police were called to investigate but no arrests have been made as yet

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 28 (AP)—Students at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes today appeared to be starting a boycott of city buses in protest against the arrest of two girl students.

The girls, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday after they refused to move to the rear of a city bus. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot and released on $25 bond each pending a hearing in police court Friday.

Last night a small wooden cross was burned on the lawn of the house in which they were living and their landlady. Mrs. Eloise Kendrick, said they became frightened and moved into the college dormitory.

Students cheered and clapped their hands as an empty city bus was driven through the campus today. Earlier several hundred students staged a mass meeting and voted to stay off city buses for an indefinite period.

INCIDENT SERIES

Broadus H. Hartley, president of the student body, said last Saturday's arrests were the latest "in a series of incidents in which we have been humiliated by bus drivers."

"I would not call it a boycott." Hartley said of the students' actions. "We are just refraining from riding the buses until we can have assurances that we will receive better treatment."

Charles Carter, manager of the Cities Transit Co., denied that the Negro students have been humiliated. "It just has not happened," he said.

Bus Boycott Breaks Out In Tallahassee

Some Negro Students Walking In Protest

P. 14

Tallahassee, Fla., May 29 (AP) —A second Southern capital has been hit by a boycott by Negro bus riders stemming from a dispute over segregated seating arrangements.

Some students at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes began walking in preference to riding buses yesterday in protest against the arrest of two Negro girl students for refusing to move to the rear of a Cities Transit Company bus.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Tallahassee chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that the boycott "will be continued beyond the university campus."

Charles L. Carter, manager of the transit firm, said, however, that his company has experienced no general effects from any boycott.

State Has Old Law

Montgomery, Ala., has felt the effects of a bus boycott by Negro riders for several months.

Florida has an old law requiring bus and railroad companies to provide separate accommodations for white and Negro passengers in intrastate travel. Florida, however, has no antiboycott law like Alabama.

The two girl students here, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot and were released on $25 bond each pending a hearing in Police Court Friday.

Steele said the N.A.A.C.P. is looking into the legal angles of the arrests and into a cross-burning in front of the student home Sunday night.

Bus Boycott Seems Likely In Tallahassee

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 28 (AP)—Students at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes today appeared to be starting a boycott of city buses in protest against the arrest of two girl students.

The girls, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday after they refused to move to the rear of a city bus. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot and released on $25 bond each pending a hearing in police court Friday.

Last night a small wooden cross was burned on the lawn of the house in which they were living and their landlady. Mrs. Eloise Kendrick, said they became frightened and moved into the college dormitory.

Students cheered and clapped their hands as an empty city bus was driven through the campus today. Earlier several hundred students staged a mass meeting and voted to stay off city buses for an indefinite period.

INCIDENT SERIES

Broadus H. Hartley, president of the student body, said last Saturday's arrests were the latest "in a series of incidents in which we have been humiliated by bus drivers."

"I would not call it a boycott." Hartley said of the students' actions. "We are just refraining from riding the buses until we can have assurances that we will receive better treatment."

Charles Carter, manager of the Cities Transit Co., denied that the Negro students have been humiliated. "It just has not happened," he said.

Tallahassee, Fla.—2,600 students at Florida's Negro A & M Univ. are boycotting city buses which run thru the campus, doing a large business Negroes, out in the city may follow suit it was said.

The boycott started Saturday when two girl students were arrested when they occupied the only two vacant seats on a bus. The driver told them to get up and stand in the rear. They refused but asked for their fares returned and they would get off. The driver refused.

A spokesman for the students said the arrest was just one of the many incidents which led up to the boycott. "We have been long humiliated on these jim crow buses by the drivers," he said.

Police were trailing the buses that are now empty as they make their runs to and from the campus.

"There will be no violence in this," Negroes said. We only want to be treated like other Americans.

'Humiliating Treatment' of Negroes on Tallahassee Buses Protested by You

Bystander Fri. 6-7-56 P.1

Des Moines Iowa

New York.—Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, May 31 offered the "cooperation and advice" of the Association's national headquarters to the leaders of the Tallahassee, Fla., protest "against the humiliating treatment of our people on the bus lines . . . as long as it is conducted in a peaceful, non-violent manner and by lawful means."

Mr. Wilkins' offer was made in a telegram to the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Tallahassee NAACP branch and chairman of the new Inter Civic Council, organized to direct the protest which was started on May 26 by the arrest of two Negro women students who refused to get up and leave two seats in a local bus vacant for possible occupancy by white passengers.

Wires Encouragement

Meanwhile, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, leader of the six-month-old bus protest in Montgomery, Ala., wired encouragement to the Tallahassee group.

The arrested women, Mrs. Carrie Patterson and Miss Wilmena Jakes, students at the all-Negro Florida A. & M. University located here, have been released. The charge of "placing themselves in a position to create a riot" has been dropped. Meanwhile the 2,400 students and townspeople decided not to ride the buses until their demands were met.

Students Ask

The demands, formulated at a mass meeting on May 29, are essentially the same as those advanced in Montgomery. The students and the townspeople asked:

1. That all passengers be seated on a first come first served basis;
2. That bus drivers be required to give fair and impartial treatment to Negro passengers; and
3. That Negro drivers be employed by the bus company.

As the protest got underway, local police started a campaign to arrest for alleged traffic violations Negro motorists giving rides to other citizens. Among the first arrested were Mr. Steele and some members of the university faculty.

Following the arrest of the two students, the NAACP sent its Florida field secretary, Robert W. Saunders, to Tallahassee to make an investigation of the situation. Mr. Saunders reported that trouble on the buses had been brewing for at least six weeks. Students and townspeople have been threatened and abused by some of the bus drivers. No one had been arrested, however, until May 26.

'Above Average'

Mrs. Patterson and Miss Jakes, Mr. Saunders reported, are rated "above average students" who, according to faculty members and their fellow students, had never given any trouble.

Tallahassee, capital of the state, has a population of about 40,000 people of whom 14,000 are Negroes. According to estimates, from 60 to 70 per cent of the bus passengers are Negroes. Negroes are required to sit from the rear forward, whites from the front rearward. If all seats are taken on a predominantly Negro line, colored passengers are required to get up and give their seats to white passengers as they board the bus.

Compromise plan boycotters spurned

Afro-American Sat. 6-16-56 P.20

Baltimore, Md.

TALLAHASSE, Fla. — The following is the complete text of the City Commission's statement on the bus boycott:

The City Commissioners have had under study the issues which appear to be involved in the bus boycott and feel that a statement of their views would be helpful in bringing the matter to a conclusion.

Specific written proposals from the Inter-Civic Council have not yet been received but there have been in the press and in informal discussions indications that there are three demands on the part of those namely:

(1) EXHIBITION OF more courteous treatment of passengers by bus drivers, (2) employment of a colored bus driver on routes whose passengers are predominately colored, and (3) application of a "first come, first served" policy in the seating of passengers.

With regard to the item of courteous treatment, the commissioners are advised that the company has and continues to have a strict policy of requiring drivers to practice courtesy to all passengers and that it intends to enforce such. It is, of course, impossible to police the drivers over every route every day and instances of discourtesy may occur without the knowledge of the bus officials.

* * *

THE COMMISSIONERS expect the Company to carry out this policy in every reasonable manner.

The second bus driver or drivers, is a matter of bus management and does not involve any of the terms of the franchise.

The company advises that it will receive applications for such employment, and in the event of a vacancy will give all such applications due consideration.

As to the "first come, first served" seating, there has been some uncertainty as to its meaning.

The franchise, and consequently the existing law, requires the company to make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations providing for the segregation of the human races where more than one race is transported on the same bus.

The company currently has a rule providing for the seating of white passengers from the front to the rear, and colored passengers from the rear to the front until the bus is full, but members of different races may not occupy the same seat.

THIS RULE complies with the requirement of the franchise.

If the "first come, first served" principle is meant to alter the terms of the franchise requiring segregation or a change in the rule to permit members of different races to occupy the same seat, the commissioners are opposed to this proposal.

Hower, it is the understanding of the commissioners that this rule, when properly applied, would not require any person, of either race, who is seated in a place in accordance with the above arrangement, to give up his seat to a person of the other race and stand.

In short, it is understood that if a person of one race takes the last vacant seat in the bus, a member of the other race may not take a seat beside such person but the seated person is not required to surrender the seat. If the rule has been applied differently by the bus drivers, the commissioners would expect the company to take the necessary steps to bring about the application of the rule as the commissioners now understand it.

* * *

THE COMMISSIONERS would be in accord with the "first come, first served" principle, if such is consistent with the above application of the existing rule.

The buses are franschised and operated for the comfort and convenience of the public and their discontinuance would impose a hardship on many persons.

The commissioners sincerely hope that the controversy will be promptly terminated so that such service may continue and that there be restored the harmonious and cooperative spirit between white and colored citizens which has made this a progressive, happy community.

Negro Group in Miami to Ask End of Segregated Transit

Fri. 6-8-56

MIAMI, Fla., June 7 (UP)—Miami was threatened today with a bus boycott by Negroes.

The Rev. Theo R. Gibson, president of the Miami chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said a committee would present demands to officials of the Miami Transit Company to end segregation practices.

"If they don't come across we will call a boycott or go to courts or both," Mr. Gibson said. "The strategy hasn't been worked out yet."

Segregation is not rigidly enforced now on Miami buses. But whites customarily sit in the front and Negroes from rear to front. Often Negro and white passengers sit side by side when buses are crowded.

Under the law, a Negro could be arrested for taking a seat in the front of a bus.

Tallahassee and Montgomery, Ala., are involved in boycotts by riders. A boycott is threatened in Memphis, Tenn.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 6 (AP)—The Negro Inter Civic Council Tuesday renewed its demand for integration on Tallahassee city buses. The request has been denied by the Cities Transit Bus Co. and the Tallahassee City Commission. The company eliminated service through Negro districts Monday because of the eight-day-old bus boycott by Negro passengers.

Negroes Using 21-Car Pool

Louisville Ky.

Tallahassee, Fla., May 31 (AP) —A Negro boycott of city bus service has been judged about 50 per cent effective after one day of operation.

About 200 Negroes met Tuesday night and voted to boycott the buses until seating of white persons and Negroes on predominantly Negro lines is made on a first come, first served basis. They also want Negro drivers on the predominantly Negro lines and what they termed more courtesy from white drivers.

The meeting followed the arrest of two Florida A. & M. University students who had taken seats in the front of a Cities Transit Company bus and refused to move to the rear.

Charges against the two girls, Wilhemina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were dropped by police yesterday. Chief Frank Stoutamire said the cases would be turned over to authorities of the all-Negro school. The girls had been charged with placing themselves in a position to incite a riot and released in $25 bond each.

The boycott started before the charges were dropped.

It was difficult to gauge the effectiveness of the boycott yesterday because of the Memorial Holiday. Negroes were riding some bus lines, however, although those running through the A. & M. campus were empty.

Boycott leaders estimated the number of Negro passengers had been cut in half. They said a 21-car pool was providing transportation.

About one-third of the 40,000 persons who live in Tallahassee are Negroes.

Tallahassee Negro bus boycott goes into fifth day

Times Fla. June 1, 1956

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 1—(AP)—The Tallahassee Negro community's bus boycott went into its fifth day today and efforts were started to set up an interracial council to head off such incidents in the future.

The boycott, for which 75 per cent effectiveness is claimed by Negro spokesmen, started after two women students of Florida A. & M. university for Negroes were arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a bus.

Charges against them later were dropped but the boycott started by their fellow students already had spread to Negro townspeople.

An unofficial committee of white and Negro leaders met yesterday.

Negroes have demanded bus seating on a first come, first served basis, employment of Negro drivers on predominately Negro routes and what they call more courteous teatment from drivers.

Most of the 50,000 Negro residents of Montgomery, Ala., have been boycotting buses since last December in protest against segregation.

Stoutamire denied the charges had been dropped to "appease" the Negro leadership. He said the case of the two co-eds merely was being turned over to university officials for handling, much as Florida State University, also located here, has jurisdiction over student discipline.

200 Negro Leaders Ask Tallahassee Bus Boycott

Star Wed. 5-20-56 Washington, D.C. P. 5-B

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 30 (AP).—A full-scale boycott of Tallahassee buses has been recommended by more than 200 Negro leaders who are requesting employment of Negro bus drivers and what they call "more courteous treatment" for Negro passengers.

At a meeting last night, the Negro ministers, civic leaders, business and professional men and students of Florida A&M University for Negroes organized a car pool to provide transportation for those who depend on buses.

The boycott will last, they said, until consideration is given a three-point request for Negro drivers, a first-come-first-served seating policy on predominantly Negro routes and for "more courteous" treatment by white drivers for Negro passengers.

Manager Charles L. Carter of the Cities Transit Bus Co. said he has "no plans to make any changes in company operations and will continue to operate as in the past."

The Tallahassee boycott was touched off Saturday when two Negro women students refused to move to the rear of a bus and were arrested.

They were charged with put- of a segregated bus. Other Negroes throughout the city, however, joined in a boycott of the transit system.

"It's a matter of principles, not personalities," the Rev. C. K. Steele, local president of the National Assocaition for the Advancement of Colored People, said. Mr. Steele also was made chairman of a new inter-civic council formed to carry out the boycott.

Boycott leaders promised there would be "no violence, if it can be avoided." But racial uneasiness clearly was mounting in this state capital, which has a population of 23,708 whites and 14,392 Negroes.

Charges of putting themselves in position to incite a riot were dropped against the two Florida A. & M. University co-eds whose arrest precipitated the boycott here.

The students had denounced "constant humilitation and intimidation" by white bus drivers.

Tallahassee, Fla., May 30 (AP)—Police today dropped charges against two Florida A. & M. University coeds, whose arrest Saturday precipitated a boycott of city bus service.

But Negro leaders apparently planned to maintain the boycott against segregated buses.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said the cases of the two girls had been turned over to authorities of the all-Negro university.

Stoutamire said he dropped the charges after a telephone conference with Municipal Judge John Ruddy, who is in Miami.

Procedure 'Normal'

Stoutamire said his procedure in the cases of the Negro girls was the same that is followed in dealing with students of the all-white Florida State University who are arrested for minor law violations.

A Negro leader, the Rev. J. Metz Rollins, said the boycott would continue even though police had withdrawn the charges against the two girls.

The Negro coeds, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested on charges of placing themselves in position to incite a riot after they allegedly had taken front seats in a Cities Transit Company bus and refused to move to the rear when asked to do so by the driver. They were released under $25 bond each.

A Third Are Negroes

Monday, fellow students at Florida A. & M. announced a boycott of the buses. The boycott spread slowly among others of the Negro community, which makes up about a third of Tallahassee's 40,000 population.

A mass meeting of more than 200 Negroes last night adopted a resolution calling for seating on buses on predominately Negro lines on a first-come, first served basis; employment in the future of Negro drivers on predominently Negro bus lines, and a halt to discourtesy and intimidation of Negro passengers by white bus drivers.

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — Two Tallahassee Negro women were arrested late Saturday after policeman Fred Lehman said they refused to move to the rear of a City Transit bus.

The two were charged with violating an old city ordinance making it unlawful for anyone to place himself in a position to incite a riot.

The women, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were released on $25 bond. A hearing for them was set in City Police Court for June 1. Lehman said they declined to make a statement.

Lehman said the two women sat down in a front seat by a white woman and refused to move to the rear when requested to do so by bus driver Max Coggins.

Coggins said when they refused to move and he feared trouble would result, he stopped the bus and called police. There were several other passengers on the bus at the time.

Tallahassee has a city ordinance based on state law authorizing regulating of seating on intrastate buses.

Protest Reported 50 To 75 Percent Effective Now

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The president of the local chapter of the NAACP was arrested Thursday for speeding after he had picked up a group of Negroes who are boycotting Tallahassee's city bus line in protest over the arrest of two Florida A & M Co-eds.

Rev. C. K. Steele, local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people, was charged with running a stop sign and speeding after he picked up several Negroes participating in the boycott of Tallahassee buses.

DENIES KNOWLEDGE

The arresting officer said he did not know Steele was an NAACP leader and that the arrest was routine. Steele, who denied the charges was released without bond to appear in city court June 4.

Leaders of the Bus Boycott declared Thursday the move has been "50 to 75 per cent effective" and added a shuttle service has furnished rides for more than 1,200 Negroes since the movement began.

City officials dropped charges against Miss Carrie Patterson, 20 and Miss Wilhelmina Jakes, 26 Florida A. & M. Co-eds who were arrested last Saturday night for refusing to move to the rear of a segregated bus.

The two had sat down in a front seat next to a white woman who complained.

Meanwhile, leaders of the Boycott continued meetings with city and bus line officials. However, a stalemate was reported Thursday and the boycott continued.

The Negroes have asked for more courteous treatment by bus drivers and for assignment of Negro bus drivers on runs where passengers are predominently Negro.

Charges Erased In Bus Boycott

Washington D. C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 30 (UP) — City authorities today dropped charges against two Negro college students whose arrest for sitting beside a white woman in a bus touched off a spreading Negro boycott of Tallahassee city buses.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said the city has turned the matter over to authorities of Florida A. and M. University.

Chron. 5-31-56

Wilhemina Jakes, 26, and Carrie Paterson, 20, had been free on $25 bond to appear in city Police Court Friday on charges of putting themselves in a position to incite a riot.

Stoutamire denied that the charges were being dropped in order to appease Negro leaders who are demanding the right for Negro bus riders to take vacant seats in the white section of city buses when the Negro section at the rear is full.

"We would like, of course, to see integration on the buses, but we're not pulling at that bone now," said the Rev. C. K. Steele, local president of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People."

Negro leaders, representing the Inter-Civic Council, put their demands before City Manager Arvah Hopkins, Mayor Fred Winterle and C. L. Carter, manager of Cities Transit, Inc.

Carter claims the boycott, now in its third day, has not affected bus revenues or passenger loads, even though Negroes compose 60 to 65 per cent of total riders. He said the usual number of Negroes is riding, with the exception of A. and M. University students.

Steel admitted many Negroes rode the buses yesterday and some were waiting at the regular bus stops today, "but that is because we weren't organized any they didn't know where else to go for transportation."

Steele said a car-pool service now has been worked out to pick up Negroes at 13 different stops.

Besides first-come, first-served seating, the Negroes also demanded courteous treatment from bus drivers and employment of Negro drivers on buses serving predominantly Negro areas. These are the same demands presented by Negroes who have boycotted city buses in Montgomery, Ala., since last December.

Won't Ride After Arrest Of Two Co-eds

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. —(INS)— Students of the Florida A & M college boycotted Tallahassee buses Tuesday, May 29, in protest over the arrest of two coeds for refusing to sit in the rear of one of the vehicles.

Some 2,300 students at the school launched the boycott at a mass rally Sunday, May 27.

A police car accompanied the first bus to pass through the campus following the meeting.

Students lined the route and jeered:

"We'll walk," and "we mean business."

The students circulated petitions asking persons not to ride the buses.

The coeds, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday night and released in $25 bonds on charges of violating an old city ordinance making it unlawful for a person to place himself in a position to incite a riot.

The girls reported that they had boarded the bus and found only two seats, both in front and along side a white woman, empty in the vehicle.

They related that they sat down next to the woman and the bus driver, Max Coggins, then asked them to move to the rear.

The girls said they told Coggins they preferred to leave the bus he would return their money.

They added that Coggins refused and called the police.

A cross was burned Sunday night in front of the private home where the coeds roomed and the landlord, Mrs. Eloise Kendrick, said the girls "got scared" and moved to a dormitory on the campus.

The girls are expected to challenge the charges against them because they did not appear in city court where Judge A. Rudd takes guilty pleas on Mondays.

The cases probably will come before Rudd Thursday.

COEDS CLEARED, BUT BUS PROTEST SPREADS

Group Demands Negro Drivers; First Come Seats

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — City officials declined Wednesday to prosecute two Negro coeds for insisting on seats toward the front of a bus, but a boycott launched in protest over their arrest spread throughout Tallahassee.

Students at Florida A and M University began boycotting buses through the campus Monday. Leaders of the Tallahassee Negro community met Tuesday night, and Wednesday issued a call for a city-wide Negro protest.

TWENTY-ONE CARS

Twenty-one private automobiles worked from 12 centers Wednesday, answering more than 200 calls from Tallahassee Negroes joining in the bus boycott movement. Leaders say only half as many Negroes were riding city buses in the Florida capital city yesterday.

A similar boycott has continued in Montgomery, Ala., for more than six months. The Montgomery protest began with the arrest of a Negro woman who refused to move to the rear of a bus, but has since broadened into a protest against segregated seating.

NAACP BACKING

Tallahassee Negro community leaders, backed by an official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, made three demands upon city and bus line officials Wednesday. They asked for the right to be seated on a first-come, first-served basis, for more courteous treatment by bus drivers, and for assignment of Negro bus drivers on runs where passengers are predominantly Negro.

The city Wednesday decided not to prosecute the two coeds--Miss Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Miss Carrie Patterson, 20 -- charged with placing themselves in a position to incite a riot. Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said the cases were turned over to university officials for action, in the same manner as are most minor police cases against students of the all-white Florida State College at Tallahassee.

Meanwhile, R. W. Sanders, Florida State Secretary NAACP, who attended the meeting of 450 persons Wednesday night, told the group:

Reporters were not permitted at the Wednesday night meeting at which the decision to apply the college boycott city-wide was made.

City officials and bus company officials declined all comment on the arrest Saturday of the two college students or the subsequent protest.

Protest leaders claimed that the boycott had already cut the bus company's patronage by Negroes in half. They pointed out that except for brief radio reports, Thursday morning newspapers would be the first word most people in the city would have concerning the call for the city-wide protest. Daily newspapers did not publish afternoon editions because of the Memorial Day Holiday.

Bus Company Offers "Polite" Segregation

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The boycott of Tallahassee City buses by Negroes appeared to be gaining strength Monday despite improvements in conditions promised by city and transit company officials. P. 1

Negro leaders of the boycott Monday refused a compromise agreement offered by the city and the transit company immediately asked the City Commission for permission to discontinue its service through the Negro section bordering Florida A and M College.

SEVEN REASONS

The Tallahassee Negro Inter-Civic Council, in a written request to the City Commission, labeled the present bus seating arrangements "economically unsound, humiliating, arbitrary, inequitable, inconvenient and morally unjustifiable."

A meeting of the Negro Council Sunday night attracted nearly 1,000 persons who voted unanimously to turn down a compromise offer made jointly by the City Commission and the Transit Co. Saturday night.

COMPROMISE

The city ruled that Negroes would no longer be required to stand in the rear of crowded buses and that "courtesy would be shown to all passengers." The ruling also promised that Negro drivers would be hired for predominately Negro routes.

However, the city said that members of different races would not be allowed to sit side-by-side in the same seats.

BROUGHT IN COURT

Rev. C. K. Steele, local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, appeared in court Monday to answer a traffic charge.

He pleaded not guilty to speeding and running a red light last week while operating a shuttle service for Negroes participating in

His trial was set for next Thursday in City Court.

In the letter to the City Commission, which was signed by nine Negro leaders, the Council declared:

NEW EVENTS

"The events of the past few days have given Tallahassee great new opportunities for national leadership. This is Tallahassee's hour to add laurels to her illustrious name as its public service duty."

The transit company replied that it has been "losing money in its entire operation" for the past year as a result of "factors beyond the control" of the company.

The boycott began a week and a half ago when two Negro co-eds from Florida A and M were arrested for refusing to move to the rear of a coach. Charges against the two were subsequently dropped.

Tallahassee Fails To Halt Bus Boycott

Constitution Thurs. 5-31-56 Atlanta, Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 30 (AP)—Police today dropped charges against two Florida A&M University coeds, whose arrest Saturday precipitated a boycott of city bus service, but Negro leaders plan to maintain the boycott against segregated buses. P. 2

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said the cases of the two girls were turned over to authorities of the all-Negro university.

Stoutamire said he dropped the charges following a telephone conference with Municipal Judge John Rudd, who is in Miami. Stoutamire said his procedure in the cases of the Negro girls was the same followed in dealing with students of all-white Florida State University who are arrested for minor law violations.

Dr. George Gore, president of A&M, returned to his desk today after an out-of-town absence of several days, but was not available for comment.

A Negro leader, the Rev. J. Metz Rollins, said the boycott will continue even though police have withdrawn the charges against the two girls.

The Negro coeds, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested on charges of placing themselves in position to incite a riot after they allegedly had taken front seats in a Cities Transit Co. bus and refused to move to the rear when asked to do so by the driver. They were released under $25 bond each.

Monday, fellow students at Florida A&M announced a boycott of the buses. The boycott spread slowly among others of the Negro community.

Boycott Halves Bus Business

Star P. 16-A Thurs. 5-31-56 Washington, D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 31 (AP).—A Negro boycott of city bus service has been judged about 50 per cent effective after one day of operation.

About 200 Negroes met Tuesday night and voted to boycott the buses until seating of white persons and Negroes on predominantly Negro lines is made on a first-come, first-served basis. They also want Negro drivers on such lines and what they termed more courtesy from white drivers.

The meeting followed the arrest of two Florida A&M University students who had taken seats in the front of a Cities Transit Co. bus and refused to move to the rear.

Charges against the two girls, Wilhemina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were dropped by police yesterday. Chief Frank Stoutamire said the cases would be turned over to authorities of the all-Negro institution. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to incite a riot and were released in $2' bond each.

The boycott started before the charges were dropped.

It was difficult to gauge the effectiveness of the boycott yesterday because of the Memorial holiday. Negroes were riding some buslines, however, although those running through the A&M campus were empty.

Boycott leaders said a 21-car pool was providing transportation.

About one-third of the 40,000 persons who live in Tallahassee are Negroes.

Virginia Clergyman Leads Florida Bus Boycott Plan

Special to Journal and Guide

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — A young Virginia-born minister is acting as spokesman for local colored citizens who have decided to extend a boycott of buses started last week when two Florida A. and M. University coeds were arrested for alleged violation of local statutes dealing with riot incitement.

The spokesman is the Rev. J. Metz Rollins Jr., pastor of Trinity Presbyterian Church.:

REV. J. METZ ROLLINS
Spokesman

THE YOUNG minister is the son of the Rev. J. Metz Rollins Sr., who for many years has been pastor of Carver Memorial Presbyterian Church in Newport News, Va.

The announcement from Rev. Mr. Rollins last week said that local citizens would continue their boycott of buses even though charges against the two coeds had been dropped.

* * *

WHEN THE announcement was made colored citizens had already set up a "motor pool" operating much like the one that has been serving bus boycotters in Montgomery, Ala, for the past six months so effectively.

But unlike the Montgomery situation where—to date—all efforts at settling the matter have been futile, bus company officials show indications here that they are willing to "further discuss" the boycott.

BUT LIKE the situation in Montgomery, city officials have shown no indication that they are concerned here.

But the press in the area, in one instance is "going along" with colored citizens

IN A SCATHING editorial in its issue of May 31, the Capital Post said, editorially of the situation "There is a boycott. And it is real."

The Post further said that "The Negroes have suggested a remedy. They ask better treatment of members of their race by bus drivers on predominantly Negro routes. They ask seating on a first-come, first-served basis so that Negroes will not have to stand when there are empty seats."

* * *

OF THE MANNER in which the situation has been handled to date, the Post said "We have the assurance of the Negro groups that they are not motivated by vindictiveness or hate. The way they have handled the boycott to date seems to bear out their claim."

Last week, 21 private automobiles operating from 12 centers, answered more than 200 calls from Negroes joining the boycott.

* * *

THE LEADERS said only half the usual number of colored citizens were riding buses in the Florida capital city.

The leaders with Rev. Mr. Rollins and others as spokesmen made three demands on city and bus line officials.

TRANSIT SHUTDOWN LOOMS

Conference Fails To End Tallahassee Bus Boycott

Advertiser P. 2-A Tues. 6-26-56

Montgomery Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 25 (AP) —Tallahassee's white and Negro leaders talked for 2½ hours today without finding a basis for ending crippling four-week-old Negro boycott of city buses.

The City Commission called the conference to seek some way of ending the boycott by Sunday, the day Cities Transit Inc., said it will have to shut down because of financial difficulties.

Spokesmen for the Negro Inter Civic Council held firm in insisting that integrated seating arrangements must be provided before the boycott will be called off.

White leaders insisted that the old custom of segregated seating, which is baked by state and city laws, must be continued for the present.

ARMY 'NEEDED'

State Sen. Wilson Carraway of Tallahassee remarked that "Supreme Court decision on integration could not be enforced in Tallahassee without calling out the U.S. Army."

Carraway said the white and Negro races had worked harmoniously side by side in Tallahassee and that great strides had been made in providing better schools, hospitals and recreational facilities for Negroes in the past 10 years.

He said racial disputes, such as the one over buses, would only serve to shift moderates on both sides, into camps of the radicals.

The Rev. K. C. Steele, president of the Inter Civic Council, said there had been reports that certain leaders influenced the Negro community to stay off the buses, but that it was a spontaneous action by the entire community.

"Steele said "we had rather walk with dignity than ride with humiliation."

WRONG APPROACH

One Negro, John Swilley, said it was his opinion the boycott was a mistake and that "a more sensible approach" would have been filing of a federal court suit to knock out segregation laws.

At the windup, Commissioner W. T. Mayo asked the Inter Civic Council to bringf back new proposals for a settlment, but there was no indication from the Negro leaders that anything was in the offing.

No date was set for another session.

The boycott has been almost 100 per cent effective. Before the boycott an estimated 70 per cent of the bus riders were Negroes.

The transit firm said it would not afford to continue operating after July 1 unless some relief was provided.

'Won't sell our rights'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "We are willing to negotiate on any terms that are just and fair, but we are not in any mood to barter away our rights.

"As proof we are not out to kill the bus company, we will meet with company officials and members of the city commission anywhere, anytime.

"For a week now, we have been trying to set up a meeting with the ministerial alliance here (white) in an effort to get them to bring our side and the other side together."

This statement was made by one of the leaders of the bus boycott here, which entered its fifth week Monday.

He is Dan Speek, chairman, transportation committee of the Intercity Civic Association, the Rev. C. K. Steele, president.

* * *

ASKED HOW the boycott is progressing, Mr. Speek declared:

"We're doing fine. There are 74 cars in the pool, two station wagons and one 25-passenger bus.

"We hold mass meetings twice weekly and, during the past week, citizens donated $518 to keep the car-pool in operation.

"This is proof," he added, "that the colored people of Tallahassee are in no mood to keep a bus company in business which refuses to treat them as first-class citizens."

* * *

REFERENCE WAS to the three requests the council is asking the city and bus company to grant in order that the boycott may be ended.

These are:

Segregated seating on city buses be abolished.

The employment of colored bus drivers.

Drivers be instructed to treat all passengers courteous, irrespective of race or color.

* * *

OTHER HIGHLIGHTS of the boycott, which began May 28 on the campus of Florida A. and M. University after two coeds were arrested, are:

On two occasions drivers of the bus made available by St. Peters Church of Chares, Fla., a nearby community, have been stopped by police.

The first driver was told not to drive the bus again, but not charged.

The second driver was accused of "obstructing traffic." The case is pending a hearing, with the driver being released on $5 bail.

THE REV. L. DAYMON, who was apprehended three times in one day during the early stage of the boycott, has been fined $25 for alleged traffic violation.

He paid the fine. He was the second minister fined in connection with the boycott. Earlier the Rev. Mr. Steele was fined $35 on charges of failing to halt at a stop sign. He also paid the fine.

Council headquarters report that a daily average of two car-pool drivers are arrested and charged by police.

MEANWHILE, A city attorney said last week that he was studying statutes to see whether or not it is legal for boycotters to operate their own buses here without charging fares.

As City Attorney James Messer sought a ruling into the situation, an estimated 500 attended a mass meeting and expressed "sympathy" for Cities Transit Company in its present financial plight. At the same time, they reaffirmed their stand to continue the boycott until they win equal rights with white passengers on the Tallahassee buses.

Mr. Speed said his group had obtained a bus from St. Petersburg for use in providing free rides, but it had been grounded pending investigation of its legality.

Speed said that Levy Thomas, the driver, was arrested last Saturday for "obstructing traffic."

The bus is registered in the name of St. Peter's Missionary Baptist Church at Claires.

Florida Negroes Ask Bus-Segregation End

Afro-American Journal Sat. 6-23-56

St. Petersburg, Fla., June 22 (AP)—City officials today heard Negro requests for equal seating on city-owned buses, but took no immediate action.

Mayor Samuel G. Johnson told the Co-operative Citizens Committee the requests would be given the "earliest possible" consideration.

The Rev. Enoch Davis, spokesman for the Negro committee, said that in the light of a United States Supreme Court decision on bus desegregation and absence of City ordinances on segregated bus seating "Negroes are now ready to sit anywhere they choose."

75 Pct. Effective

Miami Fla.

TALLAHASSEE—(AP)—A Negro boycott of city bus service spread Thursday and a leader of the movement claimed that it had become 75 per cent effective.

The boycott was called Monday by students at Florida A & M University for Negroes in protest against arrest of two students for violating segregated bus seating regulations.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the local chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said effectiveness of the boycott was resulting from expansion of car pools.

Steele, himself, was arrested by a city policeman on a charge of speeding and running a stoplight shortly after he had picked up some passengers in front of the post office.

Policeman Burl Peacock said Steele was traveling 35 miles an hour in a 25 mile an hour zone. Steele denied he was exceeding the speed limit and said he would fight the case. A hearing is scheduled in city police court Monday. Peacock said he didn't know who Steele was until after the arrest.

Newsmen noticed only a handful of Negroes on the buses during the early morning rush, and none at all during the slack mid-morning period.

Steele said 35 cars were in the riding pool picking up passengers at 13 stations. He estimated that 1,200 passengers a day were being picked up.

About 200 Negroes met Tuesday night and voted to boycott the buses until seating of white persons and Negroes on predominantly Negro lines is made on a first come, first served basis. They also want Negro drivers on the predominantly Negro lines and what they termed more courtesy from white drivers.

Urged on Buses

Miami, Fla.

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— More than 200 Tallahassee Negroes voted Tuesday night to boycott city buses until consideration is given a three-point request, including the hiring of Negro drivers "some time in the future."

The Negroes, including civic leaders, teachers, ministers and representatives of the Florida A & M University student body, made the decision at a meeting from which reporters were barred.

However, it was learned they are asking that Negro bus drivers be employed "at some time in the future" on predominately Negro routes, that passengers be seated on a first-come, first-served basis on predominately Negro routes and that white drivers "be more courteous and stop intimidating Negro passengers."

Reporters who stood outside the building in which the meeting was held said it appeared to be orderly.

Plans were made for a car pool to supply transportation to Negroes who ordinarily ride buses.

Earlier Tuesday, Executive Secretary Gilbert Porter of the Florida State Teachers Assn., a Negro organization, said very few Negroes have ridden the buses since the boycott started.

The movement was started by students of A & M University for Negroes after two of the school's coeds refused to move to the rear of a Cities Transit bus and were removed by police.

The girls, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were charged with putting themselves in position to incite a riot. They will have a hearing in police court Friday.

The vote Tuesday night followed a conference by a Negro committee with Tallahassee Mayor Fred Winterle, City Manager Arvah Hopkins and bus company Manager Charles L. Carter.

NO COMMENT

Dr. George Gore, president of A&M, returned to his desk today after an out-of-town absence of several days, but was not available for comment.

A Negro leader, the Rev. J. Metz Rollins, said the boycott would continue even though police had withdrawn the charges against the two girls.

They were released under $25 bond each.

SPREAD SLOWLY

Monday, fellow students at Florida A&M announced a boycott of the buses. The boycott spread slowly among others of the Negro community, which makes up about one-third of Tallahassee's 40,000 population.

A mass meeting of more than 200 Negroes last night adopted a resolution calling for seating on buses on predominantly Negro lines on a first come, first served basis; employment in the future of Negro drivers on predominantly Negro bus lines, and a halt to discourtesy and intimidation of Negro passengers by white bus drivers.

The meeting voted to maintain the boycott until the demands were met.

LEADERS CONFER

Earlier yesterday, a committee of Negro leaders conferred with City Manager Arvah Hopkins and presumably put their demands before him. Hopkins refused comment today other than to say the committee had agreed to present him a formal resolution to take before the City Commission.

Mayor Fred Winterle said earlier reports the Negro leaders had conferred with him were erroneous. He said he was out of the city yesterday.

Because of the Memorial Day holiday, it was difficult to gauge the effectiveness of the boycott today. Buses still were running empty through the A&M campus, but Negroes were observed riding buses on other lines. Most of the Negro bus passengers are employed as domestics in white homes and many of them rode to work as usual on buses.

Negro leaders, however, estimated the boycott was about 50 per cent effective. They said a 21-car motor pool was providing transportation to regular Negro bus riders and had supplied rides to work this morning for 200 or 300 persons.

Protest Women's Arrest

A&M Negroes Vote For Buses 'Boycott'

Tues. 5-29-56

Miami, Fla.

TALLAHASSEE—(AP)—Students at Florida A&M University for Negroes appeared Monday to be starting a boycott of city buses in protest against the arrest of two women students.

The women, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday after they refused to move to the rear of a city bus. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot and released on $25 bond each pending a hearing in Police Court Friday.

Sunday night a small wooden cross was burned on the lawn of the house in which they were living and their landlady, Mrs. Eloise Kendrick, said they became frightened and moved into the college dormitory.

Students cheered and clapped their hands as an empty city bus was driven through the campus Monday. Earlier, several hundred students staged a mass meeting and voted to stay off city buses for an indefinite period.

Broadus H. Hartley, president of the student body, said Saturday's arrests were the latest "in a series of incidents in which we have been humiliated by bus drivers."

"I would not call it a boycott," Hartley said of the students' actions. "We are just refraining from riding the buses until we can have assurances that we will receive better treatment."

Charles Carter, manager of the Cities Transit Co., denied that the Negro students have been humiliated. "It just has not happened," he said.

Police reported Sunday night's cross burning, but said they had been unable to determine who burned it.

Mrs. Kendrick said a car was driven up in front of her home about 10 p.m., stopped a few minutes, then left at high speed.

She said one of the two women noticed a fire and found a small cross of crude wooden construction burning.

About Saturday's incident, the women maintained that the only two unoccupied seats in the bus were in the front, and that when they sat there the driver ordered them to stand in the rear.

They said they then offered to get off if the driver would return their fares, but he refused.

President George Gore of Florida A. & M. was out of the city. University officials said a formal statement will be made after his return Tuesday.

The university has an enrollment of 2,600 students. Tallahassee, the Florida capital, has a population of 40,000.

A 1909 Florida law requires bus and railroad companies to provide separate accommodations for white and Negro passengers traveling intrastate.

Florida has no antiboycott law like Alabama. Negro leaders of a bus boycott in Montgomery were indicted recently for violating the law in that state.

In Tallahassee, the Rev. C. K. Steel, president of the Tallahassee chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the bus boycott "will be continued beyond the university campus." He declined to elaborate.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 29—(AP)—A second Southern capital has been hit by a boycott of Negro bus riders stemming from a dispute over segregated seating arrangements.

B'ham, Ala.

Some students at Florida A&M University for Negroes began walking in preference today.

to riding buses yesterday in protest against the arrest of two Negro girl students for refusing to move to the rear of a Cities Transit Co. bus.

Cities Transit Co. is a Florida owned concern.

Tallahassee has a population of about 40,000, about one-third of it Negro.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, presidwent of the Tallahassee chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said without elaborating that the boycott "will be continued beyond the university campus."

Charles L. Carter, manager of the transit firm, said last night, however, his company had experienced no general effects from any boycott.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., has felt the effects of a bus boycott by Negro riders for several months. Most of its 50,000 Negroes have been boycotting buses since Dec. 5, 1955, in a protest against city and state segregation laws.

Florida has an old law requiring bus and railroad companies to provide separate accommodations for white and Negro passengers traveling intra-state.

Florida, however, has no anti-boycott law like Alabama. A Negro leader of the boycott in Montgomery was convicted recently of violating anti-boycott laws.

THE TWO GIRL students here, Wilhelmina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20, were arrested Saturday. They were charged with placing themselves in a position to cause a riot and were released in $25 bond each pending a hearing in Police Court Friday.

Steele said the NAACP was looking into the legal angles of the arrests and into a cross burning in front of the students' home last night.

Police reported a cross was burned on the front lawn of the house by unidentified persons.

MRS. ELOISE KENDRICK, who owns the house, said the girls became frightened and went to the university dormitory.

Students at Florida A&M staged a mass meeting at noon and voted to start the boycott.

The university has an enrollment of about 2600. President George Gore, who has been out of the city, was expected back today.

Student Bus Boycott Spreads Among Tallahassee Negroes

Constitution Wed. 5-30-56 Atlanta, Ga. P.13

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 29 (AP)—A bus boycott started by Negro university students spread through the Tallahassee Negro community today.

Executive Secretary Gilbert Porter of the Florida State Teachers Assn., one of a group of Negro leaders who met to discuss the situation, said few Negroes rode buses today and that automobiles were circulating to give free rides to Negroes seen waiting at bus stops.

The boycott movement started after two girl students of Florida A&M University for Negroes refused to move to the rear of a Cities Transit Co., bus.

The bus driver stopped his vehicle and called police. A cross was burned Sunday night outside the house where the girls had rooms.

The students were charged with putting themselves in position to incite a riot.

The boycott has been calm and orderly with the only indication of feeling a crudely lettered sign posted near the A&M campus reading: "We'll walk. Fight segregation."

New Organizer For NAACP Arrested

Youth May File Suit Challenging Segreation

MIAMI. — (INS) — A test case involving segregation on buses developed Tuesday in Miami after the arrest of a 19-year-old organizer for the Youth Council of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The youth, Rudolph Reid, was arrested Monday when he allegedly refused to step to the rear of bus. He was freed on $500 bond after pleading not guilty to a charge of "attempting to breach the peace."

Reid denied he provoked arrest and indications were that his trial will become a test case.

Neil Adams, president of the Brownsville Improvement association, was one of the men who arranged for the youth's release. He said the case would be fought with every means available.

The president of the Miami NAACP, the Rev. Theodore Gibson, said last week his organization would call for a "bus boycott" only as a last resort in the fight to gain equal seating in city buses.

MIAMI.— (INS) —The president of the Miami chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People declared Thursday, June 7, that Negroes may call a boycott of city buses if segregation in the vehicles is not abolished.

The Rev. Theo R. Gibson, NAACP local president, said that if the Miami Transit company does not abolish segregation on local buses a boycott may be called.

Gibson said a special committee of the NAACP would be formed Thursday night. Commmittee members will then present the association's demands to the transit company.

The leader said that "if they (the bus company) don't come across we will call a boycott or go to the courts—or both. However, the strategy hasn't been worked out yet."

Gibson predicted a victory for the Negroes if the case reached the courts. He said the court would rule in favor of the NAACP.

Miami thus could become the second major Florida city in two weeks to be struck by a bus boycott. In Tallahassee, Negroes have refused to ride that city's buses for a week and a half.

The Miami chapter plans to circulate petitions throughout the city and its suburbs outlining the NAACP's demands. Gibson said he American freedom, and only incidentally against the NAACP.

"It is common knowledge that Negro citizens in Alabama are denied their constitutional rights and must submit to humiliating and even degrading treatment in their daily lives," the NAACP leader asserted. "The State is saying by this action that it will not permit a Negro civil rights organization to protest and work to erase these inequalities, even though it proceed, as it always has, in an orderly manner through the courts, through peaceful assembly, and according to the United States Constitution.

Mi. 6-13-56

"We have even been forbidden by court order to apply for a chance to satisfy the legal technicality which is being used as an excuse for the suppression of liberty."

Mr. Wilkins revealed that an NAACP representative had applied on May 31 in Montgomery for the necessary forms upon which to register the Association even though, since 1918, no such registration had been demanded by the State. The very next morning, June 1, at 9:20 o'clock, the Attorney General, without previous notice of any kind, applied for and secured a temporary order restraining the NAACP from further operations in the State.

The association has until June 30 to reply and request a hearing on the matter. The legal staff, Mr. Wilkins said, is at work on a reply.

High Court Action Affects All Public Carriers

Last Bus Segregation Outlawed

New Ruling Voids Laws in 12 States, Including Florida

Herald Tues. 4-24-56 Miami, Fla.

WASHINGTON —(AP)— The Supreme Court Monday unanimously extended its ban on racial segregation to public transportation within the borders of a state.

It did so by dismissing as frivolous an appeal from a U.S. Court of Appeals decision in Richmond, Va., that segregation on intrastate buses violates the federal Constitution.

The court's action means that segregation in any form in public transportation, whether entirely within a state or between states is now unlawful.

Only 10 words were used in the high court's order, including citation of a case decided in 1929.

A search of the court's records showed that the cited case involved dismissal of an appeal as filed "without any authority of law," and which "needlessly consumed our time."

The ban on intrastate segregation came 10 years after the court struck down compulsory separation of the races by state law in buses crossing state lines. In the 1946 decision the court said segregation on buses was an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce.

Lines Monday night ordered an end to segregated seating on buses Tuesday. The issue here is one of the hottest in the South. The city has been in a turmoil for weeks because of a boycott of buses by Negroes.

Monday's action, coupled with earlier decisions and an Interstate Commerce Commission order in November 1955, directing that segregation be ended on interstate trains and buses and in waiting rooms used by interstate travelers, covers all conceivable angles of public transportation.

The Court of Appeals ruling last July 14 said the Supreme Court's 1896 decision laying down the historic "separate but equal" doctrine "can no longer be regarded as a correct statement of law."

The 1896 decision, in varying degrees, remained the law of the land until the 1954 Supreme Court decisions striking down segregation in public schools.

The Court of Appeals decision, written by Chief Judge John J. Parker, said the Supreme Court's public school decisions "leave no doubt that the separate but equal doctrine approved in 1896 has been repudiated."

Twelve states, including South Carolina, which was directly involved Monday, have laws which require segregation within their borders. Others are Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Florida. Oklahoma, Tennessee and Virginia.

The Richmond Court of Appeals earlier ruled racial segregation in public parks and recreation areas violates the U. S. Constitution. The Supreme Court last Nov. 7 unanimously affirmed this decision.

In addition to these various actions, the Supreme Court also has ruled out segregation on golf courses supported by tax money.

The appeal, which the court said, in effect, was frivolous, was filed by the South Carolina Electric & Gas Co.

The case arose in Columbia, S. C., where the company operates public bus lines. It started through the courts when Sarah Mae Flemming, a Negro, filed suit for $25,000 damages for alleged violation of her civil rights because a bus driver for the company enforced against her a South Carolina law requiring segregation in intrastate buses.

Greater Miami transportation firms Monday took a guarded position on the Supreme Court decision banning segregation on intrastate buses.

That means that Florida state law and many municipal ordinances — including those of Miami — are now in direct conflict with the Supreme Court decision in requiring Negroes to ride in the back of buses.

These laws and ordinances will remain in force, however, until they are specifically overthrown by a court decision or repealed.

D. L. Wallace, vice president and general superintendent of the Miami Transit Co. and Miami Beach Railway Co., said:

"It has always been our policy to abide by the law in the state in which we operate. That policy will remain unchanged until we are advised to do otherwise."

Chester Smith, superintendent of transportation for the City of Coral Gables, said:

"We have had no trouble with it here. I don't know if there's a comment I can make. They want all the bars down, and the Supreme Court is the law of the land. What can you say to that?"

James G. Steward, vice president of South Miami Coach Lines Inc.:

"I want to reserve comment until we see what the whole thing's about."

St. Petersburg Group Protests Segregation

Advertiser Tues. 5-8-56

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., May 7 (AP)—Negro civic groups today protested City Manager Ross Windom's stand that city operated buses will maintain segregation.

Windom announced that city buses would continue on a segregated basis after the U.S. Supreme Court's decision on a South Carolina case banning segregation on buses.

Montgomery, Ala.

The protest came in a letter by the Cooperative Citizens Committee which represents several Negro organizations.

The letter said Windom's position that segregation will continue is "entirely false." It added that Negro citizens will be "satisfied with nothing less than first class citizenship."

Windom, who said he had no comment on this protest, had explained that he believed white and Negro citizens wanted segregation maintained and he saw no reason to change the policy.

Windom said he plans no meeting with the Negro groups.

There is no city ordinance which covers segregation on city buses although one previously affected street car operation. When street cars were replaced by buses the ordinance was not altered to conform with the changeover.

'Town sick and tired of Jim crow'

Afro-American Sat. 6-9-56, Baltimore, Md.

BY ARTHUR RANDALL
Assistant Managing Editor

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Indications here, early Sunday, led to the impression that this city's 15,000 colored citizens would snub the compromise proposal made by the city commission Saturday night for the ending of the nine-day old bus boycott here.

The inter-civic council, which was formed to spearhead the local protest against jim-crow buses, discourteous drivers and lack of colored operators, although 75 per cent of the receipts of the company are derived from colored passengers, is planning at its mass meeting, Sunday night, to submit its counter proposals.

These would involve adhering to its original demands which, as in the case of the Montgomery, Ala. bus protest, have three basic issues:

* * *

1. THE RIGHT to be seated on a first come, first serve basis; 2. More courtesy by bus drivers and an end to insults and intimidation; and 3. The employment of colored bus drivers on routes where colored passengers predominate.

About one third of Tallahassee's population of 40,000 is colored.

The Rev. Charles K. Steele, pastor of Bethel Baptist Church and president of the Inter-Civic Council, told this reporter, Sunday, that the council had received no official confirmation of the city commission's recommendations.

"We would advise against action, anyway," he added, "which could not be considered authoritative and binding upon the city bus company."

The committee's reported recommendations, according to an article in the Tallahassee Democrat, Sunday, were that the franchise be interpreted that "no member of either race must give up his seat on a crowded bus to a person of another race."

* * *

IT ALSO RECOMMENDED that the bus company strictly enforce rules requiring drivers to treat all passengers courteously and consider applications from colored men for vacancies in jobs on buses serving colored persons predominantly.

The bus protest movement here, now in its second week, has snowballed so rapidly among the colored citizens that it is almost 100 per cent effective, the AFRO was told Sunday.

The movement was sparked May 25 when two coeds of Florida A. and M. University were arrested for refusing to surrender their seats on a crowded bus to white passengers.

They were charged with failing to obey a local ordinance growing out of state statutes ordering racial jim crow, but were later released of charges and their cases referred to A. and M. authorities for disciplinary action.

Baltimore Md.

NO ANNOUNCEMENT was forthcoming from the university as to what action has been taken, if any, against the coeds, Misses Wilhemina Jakes, 26, and Carrie F. Patterson, 20.

The Rev. Mr. Steele and other officials of the Inter-Civic Council made it clear to the AFRO that the bus protest is not a college matter but involves every single colored person in Tallahassee.

"The mistreatment and arrest of the coeds was like a match setting aflame an incendiarous mass," he said.

During the first two days, only a few townspeople and university students boycotted the buses, it was pointed out. On the third day, the number of boycotters reached the thousands, he said, and on Saturday, eight car pool checkers said they only saw one person, a small girl, on the local buses.

* * *

"THE PROTEST SPRANG from the people like the urge to rid themselves of some malignant disease," the Rev. Mr. Steele said, adding that it "arose from the hurt and indignation of the people and their passionate desire for justice and decency."

Other officers in the Inter-Civic Council are the Rev. K. S. DuPont, vice president, Fountain Chapel AME Church, who was a recent delegate to the AME Quadrennial in Miami, chairman, Ministerial Committee; Fr. David H. Brooks, rector, St. Michael's Episcopal Church of Angels;

Dr. M. C. Williams, secretary; Mrs. Eddie Barrington, assistant; the Rev. J. Metz Rollins Jr., treasurer, pastor, Trinity Presbyterian Church; Dr. James Hudson, of A. and M. University, chaplain; Dan Speed, grocer, chairman of the car pool committee, and E. A. Jones, undertaker, assistant.

* * *

MR. SPEED CONDUCTS the supervisory operations of the car pool from his grocery store on Floral St. He says he has four checking operations of the pool and furnished gas coupons for 42 drivers in one day.

Other car operators who are not officially in the pool have been picking up riders en route to work and back and some employers are furnishing transportation to their own workers.

"The boycott has not hurt us nearly as much as it has hurt the bus company," one source pointed out, "because the company is a small one and its loss of 75 per cent of its revenue is crippling."

It was maintained on the A. and M. campus that the departure of the students following commencement Monday would not seriously affect the protest.

* * *

"THE WHOLE town's in it now," one campus aide said, "because they are sick of this degenerative segregation."

"Not inspired, just tired," Jesse Jones, former bus driver for A. and M. and now operator of a private business, told the AFRO.

He was answering a question as to whether the Montgomery bus boycott had "inspired" similar action in Tallahassee.

"We're tired of being treated like dogs on the buses," Mr. Jones, a native born Floridian, went on, adding, "and we're going to stay off those buses until we're treated like men."

He is a volunteer car pool driver who does not even ask for gasoline for his expenses in transporting people.

* * *

TREVIS LANDIS, legal advisor of the council, interviewed on the A. and M. campus, said he was uncertain as to how the group would react to recommendations for a halt to the protest.

He stated that he would not hazard a guess as to how the situation would be ended. All persons interviewed, however, said they hoped for a peaceful solution to the boycott.

Ministers in the protest met at 10 p.m. Saturday in a prayer meeting, where prayers were said for city officials, bus firm operators, as well as the protestors against jim crow.

Just as in the Montgomery situation, nonviolence and peaceful protest was the theme of the 10 ministers of all denominations who prayed together.

Tallahassee, Florida's capital, is a rigidly jim crow city, with all of its facilities operated on a segregated basis, including its airport.

* * *

MANY OF ITS COLORED citizens are employed in state owned buildings in menial capacities, in A. and M. University and at the white University of Florida, also located here.

There are three colored policemen in the city, four years' tenure each.

They are Officers Freddie Golden, Frederick Douglass Lee, and Clarence Williams.

Two taxicab companies, Quick Service and Economy, are operated by colored drivers who favor the strike's objectives.

* * *

C. L. CARTER, manager of the City Transit Lines, reports that 60 to 65 per cent of the bus patrons are colored.

Mayor Fred Winterle, however, estimated that 90 per cent of the riders are colored.

"If the boycott become general," he warned, "the bus company will become ruined."

Broadus Hartley, president of the Student Council at Florida A. and M. College, explained to the AFRO how it began.

"Two of our students boarded a crowded bus.

"THE ONLY SEATS available were next to a white woman. They took them. The driver stopped the bus and ordered them to get up or get off the bus.

"They decided to get off the bus, but before getting off they asked for their money back. The driver refused to return their money. So they went back and sat down.

"The driver then pulled his bus into a gas station and called for a policeman, who put them under arrest."

On Wednesday, Police Chief Frank Stoutamire revealed that the charges against the students would be dropped. On Thursday they were dropped.

* * *

ALL LAST WEEK the buses running to the Florida A. and M. campus were empty.

MEANWHILE, on Tuesday night 1,500 residents of Tallahassee jammed Bethel Baptist Church, pastored by the Rev. Mr. Steele.

"The turnout was amazing," the minister told the AFRO. "We didn't announced the meeting until 2 p.m. and by 6 p.m. the church was jammed.

"At that meeting, it was agreed that we would seek a bus on a first-come-first-seating arrangement on the served basis; the employment of colored bus drivers; and insist on more courtesy.

"A total of $264 was collected to carry on a car pool.

"We had a meeting with the management of the bus company and City Manager Orvah Hopkins outlining those demands.

"Mr. Hopkins told us that he would have to present them to the board of commissioners that meets Monday.

On Friday, the Rev. Mr. Steele was arrested and charged with speeding and not stopping at a stop sign.

* * *

INSTEAD OF giving me a ticket, the officer took me down to the police station. Since there were about seven, whom I had picked up, in my car, the arrest was apparently an attempt to harrass the operation of the pool.

"My hearing is scheduled Monday.

"A number of other drivers in the pool have been arrested and forced to go to the police station.

"Such tactics, however, make our people more determined," the minister said.

* * *

THE REV. MR. STEELE, like the leader of the Montgomery, Ala. boycott, the Rev. M. L. King, is a graduate of Morehouse College, Atlanta.

Strangely, the Tallahassee leader was in the pulpit of the Hall Street Baptist Church in Montgomery nine years before assuming his present post.

He is a native of Blufield, W. Va., and married to the former Miss Lewis M. Brock of Montgomery. They have five children.

* * *

IN ANSWER to the citizens demands, Mr. Carter, the bus company manager, insists that his drivers are courteous.

"That is not true," says student leader Hartley. "There have been series of incidents in which the bus drivers have humiliated students of Florida A. and M. University.

"Although the arrests of the students were the first, in the past drivers have often called for police to make a student stand up rather than sit in the white section."

Hartley is a native of Jacksonville, and graduated Monday. He was a premedical student.

Fla. Resort Votes Race Ban At Beach

Sat. 6-2-56
Chicago, Ill.

DELRAY BEACH, Fla. — (INS) — The Delray Beach city commission has banned Negroes from the city-owned swimming pool and beach areas in an "emergency ordinance to prevent interracial riots within the city."

The law was adopted Wednesday in a public session eight days after a federal court at Miami dismissed a suit in which nine Negroes sought use of facilities at Delray Beach.

The suit was dropped after a member of the city commission testified there was no ordinance barring Negroes.

The ordinance stemmed from an incident last Sunday which reportedly could have developed into a riot.

A group of about 70 Negroes went to the beach and met a white group, of about equal size. An argument flared but police dispersed the crowd before there was any serious trouble

The commission set the penalty for violating the law at $500 fine and up to 90 days in jail.

It said the ordinance was enacted because Delray Beach had no law preventing racial mingling and "large numbers of Negroes from other communities have come upon the municipal beach."

The commission said the influx by nonresident Negroes has caused "near-riots" and racial tension has increased to a point where one commissioner has been threatened. He was identified as W. J. Snow.

The ordinance said, in part, that "no member of the Negro race shall go upon the beach or the municipal pool . . . during the interim of this emergency."

Delray Beach is located a few miles south of swank West Palm Beach, society center of Florida's gold coast.

Negroes Renew Bus Demands At Tallahassee

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Wed. 6-6-56

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 5 (AP) —The Negro Inter Civic Council today renewed its demand for integration on Tallahassee city buses.

The request has been denied by the Cities Transit Bus Co., and the Tallahassee City Commission. The company eliminated service through Negro districts yesterday because of the eight-day-old bus boycott by Negro passeners.

The council issued a statement saying it is hoped "a partial agreement in principle by the city and bus company" on request for employment of Negro drivers and more courtesous treatment will lead to "an equitable agreement" on the integration demand.

The bus company's reply to the request for employment of Negro drivers on predominately Negro routes was: "Denied. Applications always will be received from any persons desiring to make them but Cities Transit, Inc., must exercise its own discretion as to the qualifications of the applicant."

The council said it wants "m clarification and a more definite statement of policy" on employment of Negro drivers.

Jamaicans Victims Of Florida 'Hospitality'

Call Kansas City, Mo.
Fm. 8-24-56

By LENA RIVERS SMITH

A Jamaican clergyman and his wife, visiting the United States for the first time, were given a taste of the special "hospitality" that the South reserves for its dark-skinned visitors last week, when he was brutally assaulted by a white man while riding a bus through Florida.

The British subject, unfamiliar with the "traditions of the fair South," was knocked down, cut on the face and forced to put up a "bond" of $25 for "creating a disturbance," because he refused to leave the seat he shared with his wife and move to the rear of the bus.

The clergyman's wife was also "boxed' severely when she protested the treatment given her husband.

Attacked Near Tallahassee

Victims of the strange "welcome" to the U. S. were the Rev. Grover C. Bullock and his wife, Mrs. Helen Bullock. Rev. Bullock, a priest in the Church of England is rector of six churches in Westmoreland, Jamaica, B. W. I., and is manager of several schools there. The Church of England is the equivalent of the Episcopal church in the U. S.

The couple is visiting the Rev. and Mrs. George S. Boyd, 3237 E. 27th St., the brother-in-law and sister of Rev. Bullock. Rev. Boyd is the pastor of the Church of God in Christ in South Park, Kas.

The incident, which the Bullocks related to THE CALL a few days after arriving in Kansas City, occurred in Perry, Fla., a small town about 52 miles southeast of Tallahassee.

Upon learning of the bitter racial feeling that has developed in Tallahassee since the Negroes of that town began a boycott of the segregated public bus system, the Bullocks expressed relief that they were not treated even more viciously.

Call P. 4

Wanted To See Country

The couple flew from Kingston, Jamaica to Miami on a three-month holiday last Wednesday. They stayed overnight without incident at the Leamington hotel, a hostelry for white persons. Thursday afternoon they left by Trailways Bus line for Kansas City.

The Bullocks said they chose to travel by bus in order to see more of the country.

Fm. 8-24-56

On the first stop after leaving Miami, the couple related, the bus driver approached them and told Rev. Bullock he would have to move to the rear of the bus. The clergyman replied that he did not understand the necessity for the request and produced his British passport.

The driver then turned to Mrs. Bullock and asked her if she wanted "this man to move."

Mrs. Bullock said she replied, "Why of course not; he's my husband."

After examining both passports, the driver left the bus, explaining that he had to make a telephone call.

When he returned, the Bullocks continued, he announced to the other passengers, "Well, you see what we have here. This colored guy is married to a white woman and we can't bother him. He'll have to sit there until he gets off."

Threats From Georgian

At this, a white woman passenger muttered, "Wait until we get to Georgia; they'll fix him."

In recalling the incident later, the Bullocks noted wryly that a sign above the driver's seat bore the driver's name, A. B. Terry, and the notation, "Safe, reliable, courteous."

Somewhere along the route a new driver took over the bus. This driver did not post a nameplate, the Bullocks said.

The couple said the trip progressed without further incident, although they were the victims of many hostile glances and muttered comment, until about 3 o clock the next morning, when the bus stopped at a roadside restaurant in Perry, Fla.

Bullock remained on the bus although his wife and several other passengers got off and went to the rest rooms. When Mrs. Bullock returned, the couple said, they noticed a group of about six men standing on the dark roadside. Two of the men wore what appeared to be police uniforms; a third man was dressed in the uniform of a soldier. The other three wore civilian clothes.

One of the men detached himself from the group and entered the bus He strode up to the clergyman and said roughly, "I want that seat; move to the back."

Assailant "A Brute"

Before the minister had a chance to reply, the man seized him by the lapels and struck him several times on the face, knocking him to the floor of the bus.

Mrs. Bullock said she screamed and the assailant struck her brutally in the face, causing an eventual discoloration and contusion of the left eye.

Mrs. Bullock described their assailant as "a big brute of a man, with mean, beady eyes." "He was much bigger than my husband: he made my husband look like a midget," she recalled.

The couple said the man continued striking Rev. Bullock until a man who identified himself as the chief of police boarded the bus and "invited" them outside.

Once on the outside, the couple related, the man told them Rev. Bullock would have to go to jail for disturbing the peace, or else "pay a $25 bond". Mrs. Bullock said he protested at this and the "police chief" told her that if she didn't shut up, she, too, would have to pay $25.

The couple said they paid the money and received a printed receipt signed simply "Barnes."

The receipt was on a printed form labeled, "Police Daily Report." It contained a printed line at the bottom for the signature of the Chief of Police. Barnes' signature was put under this line

Although Rev. Bullock was bleeding profusely from four lacerations on his face, no one offered them medical assistance or offered to help her check the bleeding. The terrified woman said she was permitted to wet a handkerchief at a water fountain and she used this to wipe her husband's face.

No Treatment From "Medic"

After paying the $25 "bond" the couple was permitted to board the bus and the trip was resumed. When they reached Tallahassee, a man who purported to be a doctor got on the bus and took a statement of what had occurred from the Bullocks. The man carried no medical bag and made no effort to treat the injured minister. When the Bullocks asked about medical treatment, the "doctor" told them he would have to take them to a hospital.

Although in pain from their beatings, the Bullock were fearful of further violence and declined to leave the bus. Later, they said, the bus operator treated Rev. Bullock from a first-aid kit, but he received no real medical attention until after they arrived in Kansas City late Saturday night.

The couple showed this reporter a bloodied shirt which they said the Rev. Bullock was wearing when he was assaulted. They also exhibited two stained handkerchiefs which they had used as bandages during the long and fearful ride.

Rev. Bullock sustained four round cuts on the face which appeared to have been caused by a ring. He also suffered a sprained finger and multiple contusions of the right leg and hip. He said his eyeglasses were knocked off by his assailant's first blow and were never found His wrist watch was smashed to smithereens, he said.

Couldn't Recognize Brother

Mrs. Bullock, who had spent three sleepless nights on the road was wan and exhausted from the long vigil. Her eyes were red-rimmed with fatigue.

Recounting the brutal assault she said, "I have never seen anything so unprovoked, so undeserved. Everywhere we stopped, the people just looked at him and glared. It was awful."

Mrs. Boyd, who is a nurse employed in a private nursing home, said that when she saw her brother Saturday night she didn't recognize him. "His eye was so contused, his face was so swollen, he didn't look like my brother," she said.

"We don't have this sort of thing in Jamaica," she said fiercely. "Everyone there is treated equally. It is a terrible thing that this could happen to people who belong to nations that are supposed to be friendly."

The Bullocks Tuesday filed with the British consul here, John H. Legg, a formal letter of protest. Legg explaining that the incident occurred outside his three-state jurisdiction, said he would forward the letter to the embassy in Washington.

A final ironic note was added to the situation when the Bullocks recalled the friendly welcome which was given them when they arrived in this country last week.

A Touch of Irony

Clearing through immigration in Miami, they were given a printed pamphlet issued by the Attorney General of the United States. The pamphlet, containing regulations for visiting aliens, is addressed "To All Visitors To The United States." A part of it reads:

"We are glad to welcome you to the United States of America We hope while in our midst you have a most pleasant time. During your stay here you are given the rights to the freedom and privileges enjoyed by citizens of the United States and aliens residing here permanently."

The "right" to an unprovoked assault is one the Bullocks had not anticipated.

Prior to entering the ministry, Rev. Bullock was headmaster of various public schools in Jamaica. He said he received his teacher training at the Mico Training College for Teachers in Jamaica. He trained for the ministry, which he entered 20 years ago, at St. Peters college in Kingston and passed the licentiate of theology of Durham university.

In contrast to their visit here, the Bullocks recalled that when they visited in England in 1952 they stayed at Lambeth palace and were the guests of the Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the Church of England.

Rev. and Mrs. Boyd came to the United States seven years ago as missionaries from the Church of God.

VICTIMS OF FLORIDA 'HOSPITALITY'.— The Rev. Grover C. Bullock (left) and Mrs. Bullock, visitors to the United States for the first time this week, were given a rough initiation into the way the South sometimes treats—or mistreats—its darker-skinned brothers. The Bullocks, en route to Kansas City from Miami, were assaulted in Perry, Fla., by an unidentified white man after the Church of England clergyman refused to move to the rear of the bus. The Bullocks are shown with the Rev. George S. Boyd, Rev. Bullock's brother-in-law, whom they are visiting here.

Tallahassee car pool arrests grow

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 27 —(AP)—Two Negro leaders in Tallahassee's 3-month-old bus boycott were arrested by police today in a crackdown on car pool cars operating without "for hire" tags.

One of the men, the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, announced that his group was preparing a court test of legality of the arrests.

The two cases made today were set for hearings in city court for Sept. 4. The arrests increased to nine the number made since the crackdown was started last week.

BUS BOYCOTT CHIEF IS ARRESTED AGAIN

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 28 (AP)—The leader of Tallahassee's Negro boycott against segregated city buses was arrested today for the second straight day for driving a car-pool automobile without a "For Hire" sign.

The Rev. C. K. Steele was taken to the police station and was released on $100 bond, pending a hearing. Mr. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, which has sponsored the three-month-old boycott, registered a strong protest against his arrest.

He was picked up at about the same place as yesterday. The sedan he was driving was filled with car-pool passengers.

The presiding bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in Florida yesterday called the arrest of Tallahassee bus boycott leaders "a heinous offense against the principles of democracy."

Bishop D. Ward Nichols, who is also resident bishop of his church in New York, made this statement here on his return from a meeting of the World Council of Churches in Matrahaza near Budapest, Hungary.

He said he had called a meeting of the entire clergy under his jurisdiction in Florida—the pastors of close to 400 churches—at the Edward Waters College in Jacksonville tomorrow.

Bus goes round and round 7 miles, but no one rides

Afro-American Sat. 9-29-56 P.13

Baltimore Md.

By ELIZABETH MURPHY OLIVER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — On Saturday night down South everybody goes to town to shop, to talk, to get the news, or just to stand around. It was this way in Tallahassee Saturday.

All afternoon people poured in from the rural sections. The ladies crowded the dusty red dirt and sandy unpaved roads, holding their parasols high against the sun, their little ones running along in front, the men walking behind duck-fashion. Students from Florida A-M University were in the parade too.

But no one was riding the bus.

The buses go around and around their routes, rattling from side to side, cruising slowly, but no one is riding.

DARKNESS CAME SOON, a little after 7:30. The moon rose, big and red. You could almost touch it. The temperature had been 90 degrees all day but now soft breezes from the gulf made Tallahassee a tropical paradise.
